Will you be one of ten farmers to help the boys in their study by filling out one of these blanks when you are called on? Volunteers would be appreciated. Thank you.

Probably this is the largest sum ever given in the town for temperence work in the same length of time. By the payment of three dollars by the friends of our departed members, the names of such were placed on a memorial list in the State and County books. And we, with thanks to those friends, give a list below of the names of our beloved dead thus remembered.

—A bee stung the nose of Rev. John B. Peters of Maryland, Del., when he was driving an automobile, the car knocked down a pole carrying wires from a central power house, and a whole electric system was put out of commission.

—The centennial of the church at White's Store in Chenango county was observed recently. The church was built in 1820 and has never been remodelled, the old high pulpit, gallery and pews remaining to-day as when the house was erected.

—One hundred and twenty children of the Susquehanna Home at Binghamton have been vaccinated as a preventive against whooping cough. The vaccine for whooping cough has been in use about six years, and is said to have proved 100 per cent effective.

—Prof. J. E. Banta, formerly of the Cortland Normal school and later superintendent of schools at Binghamton, now principal of the Seymour school at Syracuse, is one of those mentioned as a possible successor to the late Prof. Charles F. Harper as principal of the Syracuse Central High school.

—A peddler who claimed to be selling linen that had been smuggled from Canada recently did a good business at Vernon, taking over $100 in a short time. Buyers discovered that the 16 yards of linen for which they had given $20 was only 6 yards linen, the balance being cheap cotton cloth folded inside the roll. Complaint was made to the state troopers and the peddler was arrested and made to disgorge, inside of an hour.

Posting Land.

Frequent inquiry is made at this office in regard to the law in relation to the posting of farms against trespassing. The following was recently printed in the Rural New Yorker and should be considered authoritative:

"A property owner has a constitutional right to post his property forbidding trespass thereupon for any purpose whatever. If posted in accordance with the provisions of Article 11 of the Conservation Law, the owner may then, where a trespass is committed, collect exemplary damages to the amount of $25 for each offense or trespass, to be recovered by the owner of the lands, in addition to which he may collect for the actual damage committed. Further, the person trespassing on properly posted land, as provided by the above section, commits a misdemeanor for which this commission has authority to prosecute. The only exception to the above is where the state has stocked a stream with the knowledge and consent of the owner, the owner cannot collect exemplary damages, even though the land is posted in accordance with the provisions of the Conservation Law.

Error in Game Laws.

About one thousand copies of the game laws for 1920 have been distributed from the office of the Conservation Commission in which the open season for partridge or ruffed grouse is given as Oct. 1 to Nov. 30, both inclusive. According to a statement just issued by the Commission, the open season for partridge or ruffed grouse, as set by law, is Oct. 15 to Nov. 15, both inclusive, and the season printed in such copies of the game laws as have been distributed is a clerical error. All game laws sent out hereafter will include the correct season, and the Conservation Commission wishes to call the attention of all who may have received the books so far circulated to this error. In the syllabus of the game laws, which is given to every applicant for a hunting license, the grouse season is correctly stated.

Barns Burn in Scipio.

During the storm of Monday evening four large barns on the farm belonging to Lawrence Hartnett in the town of Scipio were totally consumed as the result of lightning and 90 tons of hay, the grain from 35 acres of oats, 16 acres of wheat, 22 acres of barley, besides farm implements and 15 pigs were destroyed. The house caught fire several times from the intense heat, but neighbors fought valiantly with buckets and it was saved. The King Ferry fire department responded to a call for help, but the fire was too far advanced to be of much service.

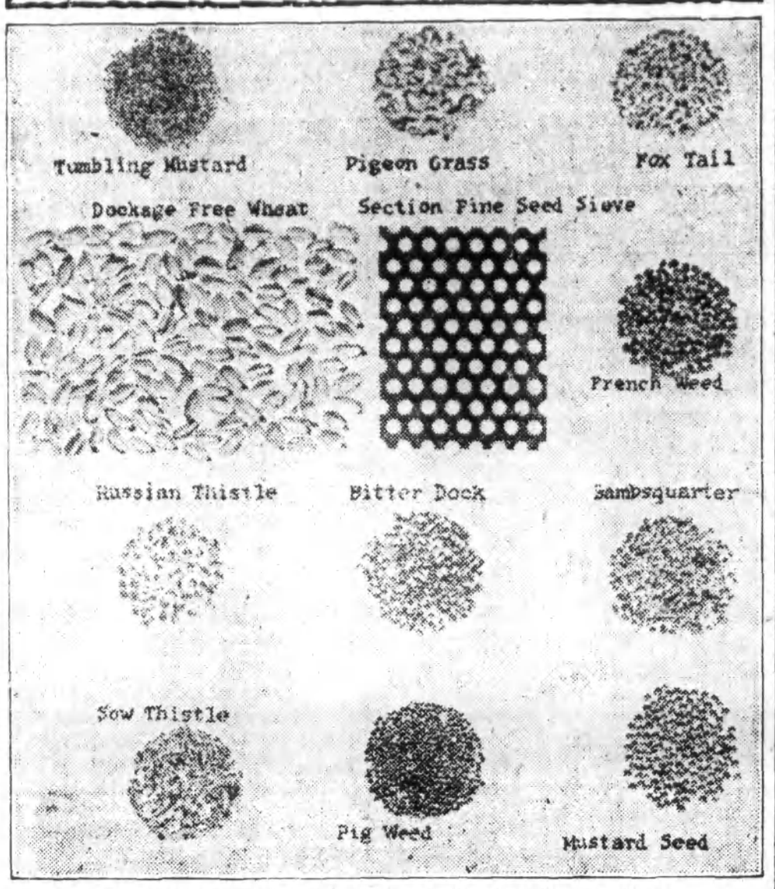
DOCKAGE PLAN OF FEDERAL GRADES



Weed Seeds Found in Wheat May Seriously Affect Its Value.

The percentage of dockage is an essential factor in arriving at the true value of a lot of wheat. This dockage may consist of either useful or harmful foreign materials.

The various methods of handling dockage should be carefully investigated and the one that is best suited to the needs of the local conditions should be adopted.

When a large percentage of dockage is present in wheat it is advisable to remove it on the farm or at the point of shipment and thus avoid paying the freight for the dirt, chaff, weed seeds, etc., on the basis of the rate for wheat.

The farmer should get a higher numerical grade for his wheat under the dockage system of the federal grades than he would under a system of grading that does not require a determination for dockage but lowers the grade on account of the total foreign material present in the wheat marketed at country points.

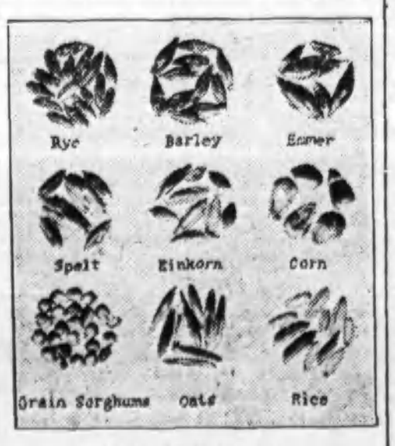
The dockage system in operation protects the farmer from the possibility of low prices fixed by the local buyer in order to insure a safe purchase on a flat-rate basis.

Write the bureau of markets, United States department of agriculture, Washington, for a bulletin discussing "Dockage Under the Federal Wheat Grades." It will be sent free on request.

In grading wheat under the federal standards one of the fundamental principles is to determine the numerical grade on a dockage-free basis; that is, the dockage is first removed from the sample and the grade determination is made on the clean or dockage-free wheat. A few exceptions to this principle are noted in the following pages.

What is dockage? It is the foreign material screened from a sample of wheat to be graded, by the use of appropriate hand sieves or other cleaning devices, such as those approved by the United States department of agriculture. It consists of sand, dirt, weed seeds, weed stems, chaff, straw, grain other than wheat, any other foreign material, and in certain cases some finely broken and small shriveled kernels of wheat.

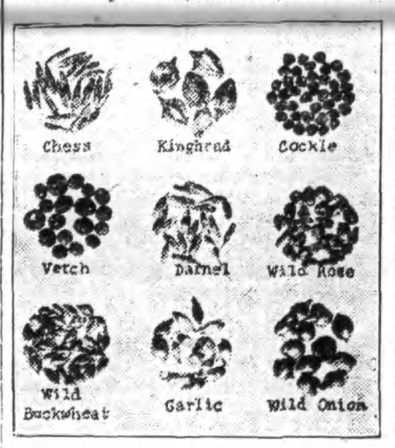
The purpose of the dockage provision in the wheat standards is to enable the person grading the representative sample to determine the approximate amount of easily separated foreign material that is in the lot of wheat. Dockage is therefore approximately the percentage of foreign material which can be readily removed from the lot of wheat by the ordinary commercial types of cleaning machinery commonly found in grain elevators and mills.



Cereal Grain Seeds.

The dockage test is made ordinarily by weighing about 1,000 grams of wheat (about two and one-quarter pounds), which should constitute a representative sample. Grams are used instead of other units for ease in determining percentages.

The dockage is separated from this 1,000-gram sample by screening with the proper hand sieves or by using an approved cleaning device such as is described under the heading "Detailed Description of the Method of Determining Dockage." The dockage so separated is weighed and the percentage is found, based on the total weight of the sample including the dockage. If the amount of dockage is below 1 per cent it is disregarded. For example, if only one-half of 1 per cent foreign material is so separated no dockage is assessed. This one-half of 1 per cent, however, would not be returned to the sample used in determining the grade. If 1½ per cent of dockage is separated, 1 per cent of dockage would be indicated in assigning the grade.



Various Weed Seeds.

After the dockage is removed the clean sample is used in determining the grade, save for a few exceptions. Dockage does not affect the grade assigned to the wheat. If 1 per cent or more of separable foreign material is found, dockage is assessed. In inspection certificates it is indicated immediately after the statement of the grade designation, as "No. 1 northern spring, dockage 1 per cent," "No. 1 northern spring, dockage 2 per cent," "No. 2 red winter, dockage 1 per cent," etc.

Foreign Material in Wheat.

The foreign material usually found in wheat may become mixed with the wheat while growing, or with the grain at the time of threshing, or in the elevator or other place of storage during the various processes of handling or marketing. The presence of foreign material in wheat at the time of threshing may be the result of impure seed, or of certain weather conditions which are unfavorable to the growth of wheat plants but favorable to the growth of weeds. If the seed is carefully selected, cleaned, tested and treated before planting, if care is exercised in the cultivation and crop rotation, and if the wheat is carefully threshed and cleaned at the time of threshing, there should be ordinarily very little foreign material present when the crop is marketed. The foreign material in wheat may seriously affect its value in that it often increases the cost of milling and causes injury to the baking qualities of flour. Therefore, that factor is considered in the inspecting and grading of wheat. The amount of dockage present has a bearing upon the commercial value of a lot of wheat. Especially when present in large amounts, it is a factor of considerable importance to the parties interested in the marketing or storage of grain.

There are two terms in the federal wheat standards which apply to foreign material—"dockage" and "foreign material other than dockage." "Dockage" is the foreign material that is separated from the sample of wheat by the correct use of appropriate hand sieves. "Foreign material other than dockage" is the foreign material that is not separated in the screening and remains in the dockage-free sample. "Dockage" does not affect the grade, but sometimes does affect the weight of the wheat to be sold. "Foreign material other than dockage" is a factor in the grading, and definite percentages are permitted within each numerical grade.

KAISER'S PETS ARE IN SAD PREDICAMENT

Former Privileged Officers of Wilhelm Have Difficulty in Finding Work.

No one in Germany sighs more fervently for "the good old days" when the kaiser held sway than the former army officer. Forced off the government pay roll, untrained for work other than soldiering, and so generally disliked by the population that he has difficulty in finding any kind of employment, the officer's lot in democratic Germany is a hard one. His prewar world, in which he strutted about as the privileged pet of his emperor, has been utterly destroyed.

A former officer, dolefully discussing his plight, remarked that the expression once current in the United States, "There's no good Indian but a dead Indian," applied precisely to the German public's attitude toward the officer class.

Private soldiers bear out this statement. "At the beginning of the war," one said, "the troops were fond of their officers, who ate the same food, carried their own packs and shared the hardships of the men. But most of the regular officers were quickly killed off, and those left were sent away from the lines for staff and other duties.

"Their places were taken by reserves, who were an entirely different lot. They had to have special kitchens and milk and plenty of wine. They refused to march with the troops, always riding in automobiles and making the men carry their packs. They were bullies and tyrants and the men grew to hate them. The civilian population felt the same way. I was in Belgium when the armistice was signed, and when we withdrew to the Rhineland the people there were willing enough to provide lodgings for the privates, but they refused to have the officers in their homes."

In a number of cases ex-officers have found themselves inadvertently applying for work to the very privates they once commanded. These former soldiers, business men and shopkeepers, take keen delight, it is said, in turning down their old superiors.

After the first revolution it was a risky thing for an officer to appear on the streets in uniform. They were emboldened by the Kapp coup last March, and since then have been showing themselves in increasing numbers, especially student reserve officers, who are easily identified by their pale faces, marked by saber cuts received in duels.

MOTHER OF TWENTY-SIX

Woman Is Comparatively Young, Says Health Inspector.

Abundia Rivera, forty-two years old, mother of 26 children, only one of whom is living, was revealed at Los Angeles as one of the most unfortunate mothers in the history of the county.

According to the report filed by Dr. Margaret Barr of the Los Angeles county health department, 25 of this mother's children have died before they reached the age of one year. The last child is several years old and is said to be healthy.

Discovery of the remarkable case was made by Dor. Barr in her work in the interest of better babies, which is being directed by Dr. J. L. Pomeroy, head of the department.

Mrs. Rivera was found living near San Gabriel with her third husband, who is only twenty-two years old.

Prayer Reward of Boy Finding Sum.

Two dollars and a prayer were the rewards granted Elwood E. Landis, a 12-year-old newsboy of York, Pa., when he returned a wallet containing securities and cash to the value of $18,000 to the owner, a woman.

WAR "MYSTERY" MADE CLEAR

Men on the Leviathan Now Understand How Their Officers Detected Them in Smoking.

Men who sailed on the Leviathan when she was being used as a transport will learn with interest the explanation of a "mystery" of the giant liner in those war days, a mystery which has been the subject of many a midnight conference in the lee of the deckhouse. Only recently a former officer of the Leviathan told the story. It appears that several of the crew sought a lower hold far from the haunts of the officers on duty and there, believing themselves carefully concealed, they smoked to their hearts' content. But the ship had a fire detection system consisting of a series of pipes to the holds, through which a suction fan is continually drawing air samples to the wheelhouse. Thus the officer on duty there noticed the curling wisps of smoke coming out of the pipe from one of the lower holds. Sniffing the smoke he detected the old familiar odor of tobacco.

It was an easy matter to hurry down and catch the men in the act and start them on a round of extra duty, which cured them of smoking aboard ship. They were puzzled to know how the officer had traced them. The hold was way down near the keel, far from the wheelhouse and there had not been another man within many yards of their position. They knew no officer had followed them and they took it for granted that there was no direct connection between the hold and the wheelhouse. And no one enlightened them during many trips to France.—New York Evening Post.

SERVED IN ORIENTAL STYLE

Magnificent Banquet Given by King Hussein of the Hedjaz to Lord Allenby.

A banquet given by King Hussein of the Hedjaz to Lord Allenby, the British high commissioner, as described by an Arab correspondent of the London Times on March 2, was a striking example of oriental magnificence. After preliminary visits and military reviews, in which the Bedouin cavalry dashed by at full speed, firing their rifles, the banquet was held in true Arab style in the municipality buildings at Jeddah.

On the table, which was eighteen feet broad by thirty feet in length, barefooted waiters dressed in rich Arab costume walked about helping the guests, 70 in number, to slices of the joints of roasted half sheep stuffed with almonds, rice and spices. Each guest had three or four plates, and was surrounded by some 20 or 30 dishes of salads, fish, roasted chickens, pilaff of mutton and sweets of all descriptions. The king's band of musicians played throughout the banquet.

At the end of the feast the king's servants handed round silver basins with ewers of scented water for the guests to wash their hands in. Coffee was served in another room while guests of a lower degree sat down at the banqueting table. The remnants of the feast, which were considerable, were distributed among the inhabitants of Jeddah and the crews of the British ships at anchor in the harbor. —Current History.

The House Famine.

Morris Hillquit was discussing in Albany the heinous profiteering on rents which so many New York landlords have been practicing.

"And despite this profiteering," he said, "houses and apartments are in greater demand than ever. Well-located tenants have their bells rung two or three times a day by total strangers who anxiously inquire if by any chance they think of leaving soon.

"I heard of a chap who entered a newspaper office recently and said to the girl behind the counter:

"'I want to advertise in your paper for a house!'

"'Yes. How many insertions?' said the girl briskly. 'We make a reduction for space taken by the year, and we have also a very reasonable three-year contract that would probably suit you better still.'"

Windmill Generates Electricity.

The windmill has not been generally found available for the generation of electricity because of the irregularity of the air currents, but this has been overcome by a Swedish inventor. Instead of being directly connected to the dynamo in the usual manner, the mill-wheel shaft is geared to a hoisting device, which serves to elevate a two-ton weight to the top of a 53-foot steel and wood tower. When the weight reaches the maximum height, it is released, and, as it falls, actuates the dynamo, which is mounted on a bracket at the apex of the tower with the mill wheel. A storage battery and switchboard are housed in the lower portion of the tower.

Just Like an Apple to Marjorie.

Little Marjorie, who is three, told her mother, the wife of a Muncie manufacturer, the other evening, that while the mother was uptown shopping she had been taken by a servant to call on her father in the latter's office.

"What time did you go?" asked the mother.

"Oh, in the core of the afternoon," replied the little girl.

"Mother doesn't understand what you mean by the 'core' of the afternoon." It was explained to Marjorie.

"Why, I mean the middle," she said simply, as wondering at the ignorance of grown folks.—Indianapolis News.

PROPOSED DEVELOPMENT OF MUCH WATER POWER

Forest Service Receives Applications for More Than Half-Million Horsepower.

Already applications for more than one-half million horsepower have been filed with the forest service of the United States department of agriculture in connection with the water-power bill signed by the president on June 11.

The increasing costs of fuel and the difficulties of its transportation have put a premium on water power, say forest service experts. It is expected that the legislation will mark the beginning of a new era in power development in the United States. Big developments are to be undertaken in the near future in the East, South and West.

The act applies to all power sites on public lands and reservations and on the navigable waters of the United

Looking Glass Falls, Pisgah National Forest.

States, including international boundary waters. Its administration is charged to a commission comprising the secretaries of war, interior and agriculture. Full details of the act, such as license, rates and service, may be had upon application to any of the departments named.

MAKES "SWISS" CHEESE

Finds a Way to Fill United States Product Full of Holes.

"Swiss" cheese—the kind full of holes—long a luxury on American tables, is soon to become a commonplace commodity. The holes, the distinguishing mark of real "Swiss" cheese, can now be made by a new culture discovered by W. U. Weimar, a cheese specialist of Sugar Creek, O.

Since the manufacture of "Swiss" cheese began in this country no dairyman or farmer has been able to produce the holes in quantity and size displayed by the imported from the continent. Long have scientists cudgeled their brains in an effort to discover the secret.

Weimar, who makes no pretensions to scientific achievement, has agreed to demonstrate to cheese makers, farmers, and dairymen of Tuscarawas county how to produce the long sought "holes" by means of a new culture.

Through Weimar's process American made "Swiss" cheese can be made to so closely resemble the imported article that the ordinary person cannot distinguish the difference. The new culture, Weimar says, can be used successfully by any dairyman or cheese maker.

DEER KILLS SNAKE

Tramples Life From Big Reptile in Little Time.

A combat between a buck deer and a five-foot blacksnake was witnessed in a field about a mile and a half west of Youngsdale, Pa., by Emmanuel Arnold, who had been fishing in McElhattan run for trout and was walking to Lock Haven via Castanea.

The fight was of short duration, for the deer trampled the life out of the big snake in a few seconds.

Arnold saw the buck and a doe in a field near a woods, and the next instant the buck leaped in the air four times in succession and came down with his feet close together. As he started toward the field to make an investigation the deer ran into the woods and disappeared. On reaching the spot where the animal had been standing Arnold was surprised to see a large blacksnake crushed and mangled by the sharp-pointed hoofs of the deer, which were bunched together each time the deer landed on the reptile.

Canada Second in Motor Industry.

Canada is now the second nation in the world in the manufacture and the per capita ownership of automobiles. The United States outranks her, where statistics show one person out of 15 owns a car, while in Canada there is one car for every 23 persons.

HOW LAVA HAS SPREAD DESOLATION OVER FERTILE HAWAIIAN LAND.

—Millions of tons of lava, which have been pouring from the great volcano of Kilauea during the past three months, have buried approximately twenty-five square miles of country under a coating averaging 100 feet in thickness. The great flows, streaming in every direction from their source in the old rift of 1868, still are moving slowly forward and at one point are within two miles of the sea, and twelve miles from the fountain head.

The glittering floods of crimson lava are coming from the southern flank of Kilauea. What was formerly a quiet expanse of sandy waste, dotted with green oases, now is a smoking tract of ruin and desolation. A few charred fragments mark the sites of former forests buried deep beneath the torrents of molten stone ejected by the volcano.

Trained observers who have watched Kilauea for many years say that it is extremely difficult to find their way about or pick out the old landmarks. Where, in former days, stretched the level sandy plain, plentifully sprinkled with olivines and volcanic rock, now there rises a lava dome three miles in length and upwards of 200 feet in height.

Welling from an earthquake rift, flows have piled on top of flows the crest creased by hot, cherry-red cracks some of which emit gas flames. At the summit of the dome is a large lake of lava, nearly half a mile in length, having an average breadth of 300 yards. From the surface of the lake lava fountains are continually playing.

Evidences of tremendous destruction are to be found in the section where the lower forests used to stand. Tall chia trees, now charred wrecks, but in some cases still burning, rise forlornly amid the general desolation.

In one place there is to be seen the remnant of a heavy stone wall, which, before the last flows started, marked the boundary of the Kapapala ranch. The moving lava surged against the wall, pushed it over and buried the greater length of it under the molten flood.

The stretch of country across which the present lava streams are moving is a mass of under-the-surface tubes and tunnels formed by old flows, mostly in the great eruption of 1868. The present molten rivers, running through these and entering sealed caverns are continually blowing up the cavern roofs with loud explosions and showers of red-hot rock, which make detailed examination hazardous.

Genoa School Notes.

It is requested that from now on none of the village pupils come to school before the first bell is rung in the morning, nor before the first bell in the afternoon. When pupils return so early at the noon hour, they not only neglect to take sufficient time for the noon meal, thus doing themselves injury, but they seem to require some one to take charge of them at this time. So we fell it is best that they do not come into the building until one p. m. It will help the faculty greatly if the parents will give their hearty cooperation in this matter.

Dr. Skinner began the physicial examination of pupils at the school on Monday morning of this week.

SECRET SERVICE JOBS IN DEMAND

More Than 2,000 Applications for Every Vacancy.

WORK APPEALS TO AMATEURS

"Correspondence School" Sleuths Eager to Show Their Skill—Service Is Recruited From City Detective Forces and None Is Accepted Until He Has by Years of Work Proved His Ability as Crime Investigator.

A place on the United States secret service force is the most sought for position in the United States. More than 2,000 applications are received for every vacancy and every mail brings new requests. Most of these are from "sleuths" who have completed the course of some mail order detective school. No sooner does the average "graduate" get his diploma and star than he sits down and writes to Washington that he is "qualified to do all kinds of detective work" and asks for a government position.

In all such cases the applicant is out a 2-cent stamp, for the detectives in the government services are recruited from the city detective forces and none is accepted until he has proved by years of work his ability as a crime investigator.

The secret service was created in 1864 to trace and arrest counterfeiters of United States currency, principally the old "greenbacks," and detection of makers and circulators of spurious money has always been its chief function. Consequently it has attained a high degree of efficiency in that line, and it has become axiomatic that "no counterfeiter can get away with it."

Cleverness Against Cleverness.

But high wages for skilled and unskilled labor do not seem to have appealed to a number of clever men who during the last few months have attempted to beat the high cost of living by making their own money. In consequence the secret service has been unusually active, and five gangs of counterfeiters operating in widely different parts of the country have been rounded up and their plants confiscated the government agents.

The war laid an extra heavy burden on this branch of the government's machinery, and hardly had the amount of work begun to lessen, when counterfeit bills began to appear in unusual quantities, and the work of the criminals made their detection difficult.

In one instance a group of three men, who had made some very fine plates, were caught before they had put a single piece of faulty paper into circulation, their apprehension being the result of a lucky accident and some clever detective work.

As has been related already in the daily press, a bather in Lake Michigan at Chicago a few weeks ago struck his foot against something sharp, and on investigating found it was a copper plate engraving of a $10 federal reserve note. He turned it over to the federal authorities, who saw that it was an imperfect plate, but in the light of long experience they guessed that where that plate came from there were others in process of manufacture. With no other clew to work on, they began an investigation and soon arrested three men, who admitted that they had been experimenting with counterfeit plates for several months. Twelve such plates were found in their possession, some of them so well made that bills printed from them would have been very hard of detection.

Forge Pay Checks.

More than 100 convictions have resulted from the work of the secret service agents in running down persons who obtained fraudulent possession of government pay checks during the war and cashed them after forging an indorsement. Hundreds of checks also were passed in cases where the blank forms were stolen from the offices of disbursing officers and filled out falsely. Many of these checks were stolen from mail boxes, where they had been left by the postmen for disabled soldiers or dependents of soldiers, but this form of thievery has all but ceased.

Because of the billions of dollars disbursed from Washington and of the inexperience of many disbursing officers who did not safeguard their records properly, the national capital became a rich field for crooks and the secret service found plenty to do right at its doorstep. The latest piece of criminality to engage the attention of the bureau there has developed in the bureau of war risk insurance, where a number of disabled soldiers were induced to part with a part of their money due from the government on the ground that by such a method they could get more than the government would otherwise pay them.

Investigation has shown that the soldiers were the only losers, as the employees of the bureau have no power to increase the amount the disabled men are paid. Only minor employees of the bureau have been involved.

The large issues of Liberty bonds have given the secret service added duties in tracing stolen registered bonds. Theft of coupon bonds does not directly concern the bureau any more than the theft of currency, but as registered bonds cannot be transferred or the interest collected without the signing of the rightful owner's name they come in a different class.

AVENGE ESSAD PASHA

"Blood Brother" Is Ready to Keep His Oath.

Gambling Incident With Slain Albanian Cemented Friendship Long Ago.

Paris.—Vengeance for the assassination of Essad Pasha, head of the Albanian delegation here, is being quietly awaited by a "blood brother" of the Balkan leader, according to a circumstantial story by a French writer, published by the Excelsior.

This man, now rich and influential in France, the story goes, was one of several poor young men who 30 years ago met Essad Pasha, then known as the "Black Dagger of Abdul Hamid," in Constantinople, when he crowded into a card game and insisted upon playing with them. Fearing Essad Pasha, they protested they were too poor to play with him, but he insisted, emphasizing it by placing his revolver on the table as a threat.

To meet this, the "blood brother" put down his dagger, poisoned, he said. Essad Pasha showed his surprise, then his pleasure.

"Young man," he exclaimed, "this is the first time anyone has dared defy me. Men like you are rare."

Essad Pasha took his own dagger, opened a vein in his wrist and also in that of the young man, each sucked a few drops of blood from the other and they became "blood brothers," according to Albanian customs, sworn to avenge each other's deaths.

"I am ready," this "brother" now is quoted as saying, "to keep my oath, but I have confidence that French courts will make it unnecessary for me to interfere."

Rustem Aveni, arrested on the spot for shooting down Essad Pasha as the latter was entering his automobile in the downtown district recently, is awaiting trial. He was a student who posed as the avenger of Albania's wrongs.

WOMAN COFFEE IMPORTER

Twelve years ago Mrs. Alice Foote MacDougall of New York city was left a widow with three small children and $38 in cash. With the necessity of making a living facing her she invested the $38 in coffee, which she sold to friends. This was the start of a business which now pays Mrs. MacDougall a gross profit of around $50,000 a year. She is the only woman coffee importer in the country.

BERLIN ELITE EATS LITTLE

Former Wealthy Germans Now Have Bread and Gruel for Their Breakfast.

Berlin—How erstwhile well-to-do live in present day Germany is described in the Allgemeine Zeitung by an elderly high state functionary, a married man with a family, who says that although he belongs to the upper 30,000 in Prussia, according to the income tax schedule, his style of living is reduced to that of a plain laborer.

"I own a fine mansion in a fashionable Berlin suburb," he writes, "but we have been obliged to let four rooms furnished, and will have to restrict our own apartments still further.

"Before the war we breakfasted on eggs and bacon, white bread and butter, and tea with cream and sugar; now we have to content ourselves with thin gruel, black bread, no butter or sugar, and the nondescript 'official' jam. Clothes are worn threadbare; my son mends my shoes and my daughter cuts my hair."

SNAKE VICTIM GOES INSANE

Boy in Hospital at Poughkeepsie "Strikes," Then Writhes Like a Serpent.

Poughkeepsie. — George Swenson, 19, who was in the hospital five days ill from the bite of a rattlesnake, become violently insane.

The boy suddenly threw himself through the air, as a snake would strike, crashing from his chair to the floor, where he crawled on his stomach, imitating the motions of a snake.

The nurses were terrified and called doctors. When they arrived, Swenson frothed at the mouth.

The physicians there say it is too early to determine whether his condition is due to the bite of the rattler or is the outcome of a former mental state.

HOME TOWN HELPS

URGES ALL TO OWN HOME

Secretary of Labor Wilson Gives Many Reasons Why Building Should Be Undertaken Now.

I want to see every worker own his own home.

A man can borrow money on what he puts into a home. He can't on what he pays out for rent.

Your bank will assist you to build a home.

Own a home for your children's sake.

Construction adds to the wealth of the country. Build now.

A comfortable home is the first step to independence. Any official of your bank will tell you more about it.

Let us make America a nation of home owners. The president of your bank will be glad to talk it over with you.

Save your money by building a home.

During the war it was patriotic not to build. Now we can best show our patriotism by building.

Add to the nation's wealth and your own resources by building a home. The officials of your bank will advise you how to finance it.

Let everyone employed on this job help set a pace that will make building popular and profitable.

Best efforts on this building will prove an inspiration for some one to erect another nearby.

"One good turn deserves another." Good work here will encourage others to build.

Efficient work here will encourage others to build elsewhere.

Build now that city hall, courthouse, schoolhouse, church, factory, memorial. Build now.—W. B. Wilson, secretary of labor.

GET BUSY ON THAT GARDEN

Cultivation of Vegetables Just as Important This Year as It Was in 1919.

With springtime, we ought to have a revival of interest in gardens. For, whatever the paragraphers may have said about the war gardens, the fact is that they did a lot of good. We ought to have more of them this year than we have ever had; there will be just as much need for them.

The war gardens did not receive the credit to which they were entitled. Few people appreciated just how much they helped the nation. Funny stories were told concerning them; facetious remarks were made in connection with those who undertook to grow a little food in the backyard. But every vegetable brought to maturity contributed just that much to cutting the cost of living for the producer.

There is no reason to believe that garden vegetables will be cheaper this year than they were last year. There is every indication, in fact, that they will be fully as high or higher. It is going to cost just as much to produce the vegetables; labor is no cheaper this spring than it was last spring—nor is anything else. So it will be well for people who have a plat of ground to begin figuring upon growing something upon it, and this is the season to do the figuring.—Columbus Dispatch.

Many More Gardens Needed.

Thousands of families learned the value of home gardens in wartime. United States department of agriculture specialists believe it essential that these families' interest be maintained and that other thousands be added to the home-food producers.

"Now is the time to begin making plans for your 1920 thrift garden," these specialists declare. "First, locate a piece of suitable land; second, make your plan; third, get your seeds; fourth, start work at the earliest possible moment."

A request to the United States department of agriculture, Washington, D. C., will bring a booklet that will tell how to plan your garden, how much seed to buy, how to get the land in shape for cultivation, how to take every other step in the process of making your back yard or some other vacant lot help feed you.

Old Prediction Verified.

Utilization of the Nile as a source of Palestine's water supply, predicted thousands of years ago, when the ancients were combating the same problem, was accomplished by a remarkable engineering achievement of General Allenby's army. Pipes were laid from the "sweet water canal" near Kantara, which has its source in the Nile, and water pumped at the rate of several million gallons a day across the Suez canal, through the desert, supplies the lower portion of Palestine.

Neglectful Husbands.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., said in a discussion of the divorce evil:

"So many men are like Dr. Cutler.

"'Doctor,' I said to him one day, 'how is it I never see you any more at the theater or restaurant with your former sweetheart, Miss Amanda?'

"'Oh, Amanda's married now,' said Dr. Cutler.

"'Indeed!' said I. 'To whom?'

"'To me,' said Dr. Cutler."

Franklinville is in the heart of one of the best and largest dairying districts of the Empire state and before the advent of the modern milk plants, cheese factories were thicker thereabouts than in any other part of the East. A meeting of vicinity dairymen was held and 1,000 dairy cows were pledged by signed contracts to participate in the pooling of all league members' milk and milk products. This move was made to hit back at the big milk condensories which have refused to buy milk from the farmers.

CONDENSED CLASSICS

THE TWO ADMIRALS

By JAMES FENIMORE COOPER

Condensation by Cyrus Townsend Brady

At the age of 17, James Fenimore Cooper determined to enter upon a naval career in the service of his country. His apprenticeship was begun on a freighter sailing from New York to Cowes. In a stormy passage of 40 days, he endured the rigorous hardships of life before the mast. This was followed by an even rougher period of 52 days. These adventures furnished vivid material for thrilling episodes in his sea novels.

After this he served in the navy in various capacities, storing up invaluable experience to be relived by thousands in the pages of his books.

At the age of 21 he married. This fiery, irritable and strong-willed man was easily influenced throughout his life by his wife, to whom he was deeply devoted. Through her he abandoned his ambition for a naval career.

Not until he was 30, however, did he begin to write. His first novel was dull beyond belief. Nevertheless his friends urged him to try again. This time he laid the scene in his own land and wrote of patriotism, the passion of his own heart. "The Spy" appeared in 1821 and was soon so popular as to make the largest sales yet won by an American writer.

Cooper had written his first novel to prove that he could invent a more interesting tale than one he had just read. He likewise wrote his first sea story to rival Scott's "The Pirate," and to prove that the author of a sea novel should have lived on shipboard in order to know not only the ocean, but the intimate ways and workings of ships. "The Pilot" was convincing. It met with instantaneous and brilliant success in Europe and America.

SOME time since an American publisher invited a group of men, including among others Roosevelt, Barnes, Spears, Connolly and the writer, to select the six greatest romances of the sea. "The Two Admirals" was the one of Cooper's sea tales included by a unanimous vote.

Well does the book deserve its selection for it is without question the greatest of all the novels of the sea, all of which I have read and not a few of which I have written.

It has more of the best of Cooper, and less of his worst, than any of his naval or other romances. No writer was ever more at home on a ship's deck than Cooper—not even Marryatt. And all his knowledge of the great deep, the way of ships therein, the habits and customs of sailors, has been utilized in full measure in this immortal story. It rings true alike to seamen and landsmen.

There is a subsidiary story concerning the love affairs of a gallant young sea officer, Sir Wycherly Wychecombe, and Mildred Dutton-Bluewater, a damsel as lovely, as delicate and as inane as Cooper at his worst could describe. Whenever she appeared she was either suffused with blushes or bursting into tears. On one occasion she wept steadily for above one half hour!

The supposed daughter of a drunken, retired officer and a woman of the middle class, Mildred turns out to be the lawful niece of one of the two admirals, just in time to soothe his dying hours; while her husband, a Virginian, turns up in the nick of time with the papers in his hands to prove his succession to the ancient title and lands of Wychecombe. All of which is excessively tiresome.

Fortunately the greater part of the book is taken up with the doings of the Two Admirals. The puerile, pre-mid-Victorian romance will easily be forgotten but the remainder will richly repay the reader.

In 1745 when George II reigned in England the young pretender, Charles Edward, made that daring and unsuccessful dash for a crown which came to a bloody end at Culloden in the following year. It is that abortive but gallant effort which furnishes the motive for the action of the novel.

Vice Admiral of the Red Sir Gervaise Oakes commanded a well fitted, well officered, well manned, homogeneous fleet of ships-of-the-line which had been cruising in the Bay of Biscay. Associated with him was Richard Bluewater, rear admiral of the White, second in command. These two men, both wedded to the service alone, had been shipmates and friends, during a naval career of nearly forty years. Oakes was a typical English admiral, a superb sailor, a downright fighter; Bluewater his complement and opposite, a subtle thinker and a brilliant tactician. The combination was ideal, as was the completeness of a friendship, not to say an affection, as sincere as it was lasting. Nothing had ever broken it; nothing, it was believed, ever would break it.

In but one point did the true friends differ. Oakes was a Whig, Bluewater a Tory. It did not seem possible, however, for political consideration to interrupt their warm relations. The bold adventure of Charles Edward bade fair to do that very thing, however. For Bluewater, frank, unworldly as all day that he was, cleverly played upon by politicians, began to waver between the House of Hanover, whose commission he held, and the House of Stewart, to which his heart inclined.

To bring matters to a head M. le Vice Amiral Le Comte de Vervillin, sailed from Cherbourg with a fleet of such ships as fairly entitled him to challenge the English fleet of Vice Admiral Oakes for the mastery of the narrow seas.

The latter, more than willing to try out the matter, at once put to sea in a heavy gale of wind, his capital ships weighing anchor in succession with long intervals between them so as to spread a broad clue to intercept the French. Bluewater with his division brought up the rear. The rear admiral was obsessed with the idea that De Vervillin's course had something to do with the pretender's effort and his conscientious scruples threw him into a piteous state of indecision. The vice admiral was not troubled by any such subtle casuistry. He only saw the enemy whom it was his duty to beat when, where and how he could.

After a series of the most brilliant tactical maneuvers and a successful minor engagement with the whole French fleet by his division alone—the two divisions had got separated in the mad gale and Bluewater had called his own ships around him—the vice admiral found himself with five ships in the vicinity of the French who were just double in number. Far away to windward the morning disclosed the five ships of the rear admiral's division slowly standing down toward his superior under easy sail.

Bluewater was still in his state of painful indecision. As soon as within signal distance, by using a private and personal code, he sent the following pleading dispatch to his considerate superior:

"God sake—make no signal—engage not."

This signal plunged Oakes, fully aware of the state of his beloved junior's mind, into the most terrible dilemma. Without the assistance of Bluewater's division he could not hope to engage the enemy with the least chance of success. On the other hand should he now withdraw without fighting he would have failed in his duty and would have been professionally ruined—and rightly. His mind was at once made up. Attack he would and must.

Would the friendship between the two admirals stand the test he imposed upon it? Did the younger care more for Oakes and England than for the young prince and France? A short time would determine. Magnanimously refraining from making any embarrassing signal to his friend, which might force his hand untimely, Oakes boldly led down upon the waiting French line and with his five ships brought them to close action. The French were quick to take advantage of the opportunity given them by the hesitations of the English rear admiral. Holding Oakes with five of his ships to leeward De Vervillin threw the other five under Des Prez, his contre amiral on the windward side of the English doubling on them, placing them between two fires.

Although Oakes' division fought with the fury of despair the end was at hand when the opportune arrival of Bluewater, who could not stand seeing his friend pounded to pieces and who threw political considerations to the wind and bore down on the triumphant French under a press of sail, completely changed the issue and wrested victory from defeat. All of which is set forth in a succession of sea pictures of surpassing grandeur.

Bluewater, remorseful over his incertitude, actually carried the French rear admiral's ship by boarding at the head of his men, receiving a mortal wound in the attack by way of expiation.

Space allows me only to mention the masterly descriptions of ship maneuvering and thrilling sea fighting. I can only refer to some of the well-drawn characters in the story; the two splendid admirals, their captains, the officers and seamen, especially old Galleygo the admiral's steward, delineated out of a large experience with a sure hand. And the great ships themselves are imbued with personality so dear to a seaman's heart.

The touching scene at the close of the book, in which Oakes, old, infirm, forgetful, praying before the tomb of Bluewater in the great abbey of Westminster, recalls the last battle the two had fought and with all of his former fire and fervor describes again those moments of suspense preceding the glorious victory, fitly rounds out the tale. And then death unites him with the friend he had loved and lost.

I have read the book a score or more of times with ever increasing joy. I envy anyone who takes ship for the first time to sail and fight with these two great masters of the sea.

Exercise in Open Air.

"The child who is brought up in such a way that he is sensitive to slight changes in temperature," said Dr. Llewellyn Barker of the National Committee for Mental Hygiene, "is bound to suffer from it sooner or later. If children be suitably dressed and are early accustomed to taking a cool bath in the morning and to walks out of doors each day, rain or shine, cold or warm, the skin and nervous system acquire a tolerance for variations in temperature desirable for health. An out-of-door life for children also leads them unconsciously to exercise their muscles more than is possible for the child who stays indoors."

Cessation of work with crops should give time to fix up around the farm.

A few farmers have tried posting their land with signs saying that the hunter or fisherman is welcome, if he will be careful to cause no damage, directly or indirectly.

Farming is just one emergency after another; so the successful farmer is the one who is ready for any emergency. Have you arranged for all the needed barn repairs to carry through next winter?

Emerson has said that the most valuable product of a farm is not crops but character, and that men take out of the earth much more than they put into it.

Even good vegetables won't be likely to take a prize at the fair if they are badly displayed. Neatness and care in arrangement may mean the difference between the blue ribbon and none at all.

If your community has not joined in the movement for making advanced registry records for dairy cows, it might be well to get the publication on the subject from the college of agriculture at Ithaca. Ask for F147.

PLAYED FEW "SAFETY SHOTS"

Men Who Have Won Success in Life's Game Satisfied With Nothing but Victory.

Walter Hagen, the golfer, says: "Never play for a safety, but always try for the cup."

Kings in other trades as well as in golf have found that it pays to "try for the cup," remarks "Girard" in the Philadelphia Press.

Safety shots are often careless shots in business as in play.

Rockefeller played six hole out in the oil world and he made a par and then some.

Morgan hammered the ball straight for the flag and it flew above every bunker and sand pit in the financial world.

Col. "Tom" Scott had no safety shots in his bag when dreaming out the Pennsylvania road system, nor did Franklin B. Gowen when he made his master stroke in buying the Reading's coal lands.

Theodore N. Vail, the telephone giant, never minced his game nor resorted to a half shot to save his face. He went out with the long stroke and came home to the final shot with a record card to his credit.

The big-league teams play to win the game, not to win a compromise or tie the other team.

The great merchant nails his flag to the mast, says "damn the torpedoes," and shoots straight at his target.

So in business as on the links the adage should be: "Hold your head still and play for the cup."

PICK EMPLOYEES WITH CARE

Modern Business Men No Longer Rely on the "Hit-or-Miss" Method of Selection.

There was a time when picking employees was a hit-and-miss job, a trial-and-error matter which few employers believed could be corrected. This is the day of doing things right and the modern employer is now selecting his associates, from the office boy to the man highest up, with as much care as he would launch on an entirely new business venture. William Marvin Jackson, director of the Personnel Development service, writes:

"If employees are carefully selected, with an eye to their real adaptability and fitness for the work to be done, it goes without question that they are much more likely to take an interest in their work, and hence, the business itself. If they are interested, they will get along well with their fellows and co-operate with their superiors. All of which means that they will grow, and there is no satisfaction for the employee greater than that which accompanies the knowledge that he is getting somewhere. Patting him on the back may make him feel good, and paying him a good salary may make him work harder. But giving him a new job and bigger job will alone make him supremely happy, will alone make him work with complete abandon, with thorough-going enthusiasm."—Forbes Magazine.

No Doubt Who Was Boss.

Sometimes it is easy to see, even before a couple is married, just which one is going to be the boss of the household. Recently a big, robust woman stepped into the office of Register of Deeds Adler Johnson. "Is this where I get a license?" she asked.

"What kind of a license?" asked Adler.

"A marriage license," said the woman.

"No, we don't handle them," said Adler. "Go to the first door down the hall on your right."

"I knew at first that this wasn't the place," said the big woman, with an air of disgust; "that's what I told him." Thereupon she stepped into the hall, and when the door opened Adler could see a little man waiting outside.

It was evident that the woman had usurped command and was going to take charge of the marriage license business, not to mention, of course, the honeymoon and all the rest of the alliance.—Fort Scott (Kan.) Tribune.

Australian Rabbits Selling Fast.

Rabbits have been doing great damage in the grazing districts of Australia, and strenuous efforts to eradicate them has resulted in the killing of a vast number of these animals. Some 100,000 bodies are now in cold storage awaiting shipment to England. The embargo on the export of rabbit skins was removed in December last, and the boom in rabbit-skin prices has produced remarkable competition in slaughtering the pest. The ruling average price paid to trappers for skins is now $1.82 per pound, and the demand for skins by the United States and European markets is so great that it cannot be satisfied and it is thought that prices will go still higher. Experienced trappers are making up to $97 per week for the skins alone.

Wanted a Quantity.

Helen's mother came from a large family and Helen loved to visit her grandma's house, as there were always so many young uncles and aunts to play with. One day, after returning from one of her visits, Helen was taken to the bedroom and was shown a tiny new baby sister. Helen did not seem to be at all enthusiastic, and her father, surprised at her lack of interest, asked:

"Well, what do you think of your new baby sister?"

Helen replied: "Hm! Only one? Why didn't you get a real many, like grandma has?"
