Harry Ferris visited friends at Union Springs Tuesday.

The community at large was shocked last Friday morning by the report that Mrs. S. S. Close had passed away during the night. Her friends and neighbors believed she was recovering from her illness, and she herself had said that she was getting along nicely and would be able to go out among her friends again, but the death messenger came and took her spirit to another and better world. She remarked to her husband Thursday evening as they retired that she hoped they would both have a good night's rest. It was his custom, when waking through the night, to step to her bed and see that she was all right, so when he awoke at 2 o'clock he went to her and asked if she had slept well; as she did not reply, he took hold of her hand and at once knew that she was truly "resting." Being alone, he rang the dinner bell to arouse the neighbors, and Walter Hunt and wife at once responded. E. L Close and family were summoned, only to find that the wife and mother had gone to that home to which she was so fully prepared to go. She leaves an aged husband, one son, Elmer, and two granddaughters, besides a host of friends. The funeral was held from her late home on Sunday at 2 o'clock, Rev. E. L. Dresser officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Charles G. Barger sang two selections. The remains were placed in the vault at King Ferry.

"Wireless" Progress.

The Scientific American says editorially that Marconi has struggled to achieve the "seemingly impossible" and adds:

It is certain that, among the many names which will always be honorably associated with the development of wireless telegraphy, that of the young Anglo-Italian will ever hold the place of honor. We say this with full knowledge of the fact that the foundation for his accomplishment was laid over thirty years ago, when Clerk Maxwell, in an address to the Royal society, defined the character of the ether waves and predicted the possibility of wireless telegraphy by means of electric magnetic waves. Nor are we forgetful of the fact that, in 1887 Professor Hertz, by the announcement of his discoveries, earned the right to give his name to the etheric waves which Marconi and his contemporaries have turned to such good account.

London Sphere traces the idea of wireless telegraphy back to Professor Morse, father of the wire system, who in 1842 sent communications across the Susquehanna river "without metallic connections of any sort." Between that date and 1897, the year when Marconi introduced the aerial, there were several successful experiments without wires, one in 1894 by two Germans, using earth currents and sending a message three miles. As early as 1859 a Scotchman declared that it would be possible to send messages across the Atlantic by means of wires and batteries stationed on either coast. At this time there can be no doubt as to the existence of powerful and permanent currents of electricity in the earth and in the air, but, as the Electrical Review points out, the wireless system will be a commercial failure "if every one else must be silent while one of us is talking to Australia."

It is the opinion of Sir John Wolf-Barry, a distinguished British engineer, that if the wireless system had preceded the cable system the cable system would have been found necessary just the same and the cable been hailed as an improvement upon the wireless on account of the many obstacles which now stand in the way of practical utility for the wireless system. The objections are apparent, but science may overcome them perhaps.

Soil Inoculation.

Some of the farmers who used the soil inoculating cultures introduced in Europe several years ago were disappointed, and the United States department of agriculture at first spread unfavorable reports of this method of stimulating the growth of crops. Subsequently the practice was changed and results were more favorable, but still the verdict here and abroad was on the whole unfavorable. Recently Professor Bottomley of King's college, London, has been experimenting with cultures and offers the hint that something is gained by using them while fresh.

Conservative men are inclined to believe that there is something valuable to agriculture in the theory of inoculating the soil, but yet are convinced that the true mode of working it out has not been discovered. Professor Bottomley's hint may be timely, although it must have occurred to farmers themselves to use the cultures as fresh as possible. It is but natural that baleful organisms in the cultures that have been long prepared might destroy the properties which at the right moment would stimulate the activities of the soil. Enough has been learned to lead to hope that the theory is sound, and every ray of light upon the application of it will be welcomed.

There is very little talk against inflation of the currency nowadays. At one time the greenbackers were much derided because they advocated an abundance of money, but now it is their critics who are carrying the ideas of the soft money men into practice. If the government would listen to the demands of the captains of finance there would be a bigger flood of currency than the greenbackers ever dreamed of asking for when they were charged with desiring to set the government's printing presses at work to turn out enough money to satisfy the wishes of everybody.

Americans are bound to be regarded as a queer people so long as they persist in criticising the appearance of Uncle Sam's money at a time when it is rather scarce anyhow.

To think that the Carlisle Indian football team is handicapped with a mollycoddle and still scores! The right guard is Man-Afraid-of-a-Bear.

By the time the question, "What is whisky?" is definitely settled the arid districts of the country will start the question, "Where is whisky?"

A popular subscription bond issue will give people who do not like banks a chance to invest their money with Uncle Sam.

Public Ownership Shows.

It is no new thing for the American people to be told, as they are in the North American Review, that a nationally endowed theater for the cultivation of a higher taste in dramatic art would be a good thing. In fact, the ground has been gone over thoroughly, and the conclusion has been reached that it is up to some Carnegie or other public benefactor to put a national home of the Thespian art on its feet financially. The public may be counted upon to do the rest in due time. The writer in the Review, Henry Arthur Jones, argues from the present conditions in the amusement field as follows:

Try to conceive all the vast audiences at a particular moment assembled in all the theaters and music halls of the English speaking world. Summon them all before you. Multiply row after row, tier above tier, crowd upon crowd, listening, watching, laughing, weeping, hushed, applauding; here being stupefied, imbrutted, coarsened, vulgarized; there being charmed, exhilarated, humanized, vitalized. Consider how enormous, how far reaching, how operative not only upon manners, but upon conduct and character, must be the effect upon them of what occupies their evening hours of leisure. For the great majority of them the hours of the day are dull and lifeless with mechanical uninspiring labor. It is only in these two or three evening hours that nine-tenths of our population can be said to live at all. Surely it is a matter of supreme importance in the national economy whether a nation has a drama or no; whether it is fostered, organized and honored or whether it is neglected, disorganized and despised.

We have no national censorship, but municipal and other local authorities try to suppress the brutalizing, vulgar show, and to that extent they encourage the rival kind. In a double sense this amounts to a public fostering of shows which humanize and vitalize the national life. One of New York's successful theater managers said recently that the American public is gradually lifting up the drama by influence exerted on the box office. On the contrary, the old time dramatic critic of the New York Tribune, Mr. William Winter, would have us keep our dollars and our plaudits for a few stars like Edwin Booth, Henry Irving, Mansfield and their legitimate successors and let the rest starve or perhaps fee them and class them as mere showmen. This wide gap in opinion proves how hard it will be to agree upon the correct thing in shows for any community, great or small. The Booths, Irvings and Mansfields cannot be everywhere at once, and there is a nightly demand during the dramatic season for entertainment in several hundred theaters throughout the land. It is a bad starter toward public ownership of shows in America to tell this people that they don't know a good thing when they see it and must have a committee or council board or public censor to decide as to what is good for them in the amusement line.

Oklahoma Not a Baby.

In comparison with some of the states with a long and glorious record young Oklahoma is a giant. Not one of the thirteen colonies had a population at the time of the formation of the Union equal to that of Oklahoma, which is nearly a million and a half. New York state had fewer inhabitants than that in 1820, over thirty years after the federation. Ranking forty-sixth in point of seniority, the new state is easily the twenty-fifth in point of population and at least equals if she does not outnumber Maryland, South Carolina and Louisiana.

Not only is the latest addition to the federal family the largest commonwealth ever received into the circle, but all precedents are broken by her general development. Rich in resources and bursting with human energy and ambition, Oklahoma will forge ahead without leaning upon the patronage or tutelage of older neighbors.

The San Francisco Chronicle says that society in the city of the Golden Gate intends to give the personnel of the Pacific fleet a "feast and a frolic" and wants the "fight" cut out of Bob Evans' programme altogether. So there!

Europe is getting back some thousands of the immigrants she has sent to us. Remarks in the foreign press about the "unwashed hordes" of America may now be looked for.

"There is a vast difference between saving money for a rainy day and 'hoarding,'" says a financial editor. But what's the difference to the man who is unable to do either?

A will of recent date made by the late high financier, C. T. Barney, bequeathing an estate of $8,000,000 was found among his effects. The estate is missing.

If the discussion over that eliminated religious motto grows warm enough some folks may be able to forget even that Fairbanks cocktail incident.

The greatest and most prosperous life has a small stream of grief secretly running in the depths of its glory.

Single women looking for more trouble are invited to Panama, where husbands await them.

Young America Called Down.

It is believed that the pope of Rome had a particular filial irreverence in mind when he declared, as is alleged, that the "excessive liberty granted to young people in America may lead to unpleasant results." The remark could have been made without grave danger of wounding our national self love, because there is a very formidable public sentiment in this country drifting toward the same conclusion. We used to be proud of the so called freedom given to the youth of both sexes, and to all fears expressed by European observers that unpleasant results would follow it was our custom to observe that "our girls know how to take care of themselves." We are not so sure about that now, and while we still pin our faith on the ability of our boys to look after themselves we have learned by bitter experience that, coupled with this sense of initiative, there has been a loss of that respect for one's elders which is part of the charm of European society.

Undoubtedly great benefits have accrued to the country by training our boys and girls to be self reliant, but there is a reverse to the medal on its social side. We teach our children in the cradle to depend upon themselves, and they finish by making themselves the masters while yet the parents are alive. The tyranny of the young has got to be a national evil, and something must be done to restore the natural relation between the young and the old, between children and their parents.

A hopeful sign is that Americans are beginning to understand that we must go back over some parts of the road, all parts of which we have traveled so fast. We might as well begin by acknowledging that we will have to fall back upon those two pillars of the European social structure—the chaperon and the family curfew.

City Problems.

The Hon. Brand Whitlock, who has enough backing at the polls to keep him on the job as mayor of Toledo, recently contributed to the Circle a suggestive paper upon American cities. Striking at the root of the problems that vex our great municipalities, Mr. Whitlock virtually says that the cities of the United States merely "happen" and are not created and that their civic rottenness comes from their not being self ruled. To quote:

The framers of the constitution, who were the organizers, did the best they could, and wondrous well; but the modern city with its modern problems had not been dreamed of. Thus it happens that today the city is but an arm of the state. Legally it has no powers that are not granted to it by the state legislature; hence it is ruled by the state legislature. And as there are generally about two countrymen to one city man in every state legislature it follows that the cities are, in reality, governed by men who know nothing about cities and care nothing for them—men who view the city possibly with contempt, certainly with suspicion and distrust. And, primarily, that is what is the matter with the city.

When all has been said the preachers and sociologists agree that great cities have to be, and the mayor of Toledo thinks that the ideal city is not an impossible proposition. The city system must be reformed and the reform of the men in control will follow. He thinks that Des Moines has improved upon the Galveston plan of government by commission, but even the Des Moines plan falls short of true democracy. Mr. Whitlock's ideal for municipal reform is worthy of the attention of communities which are not yet in the front rank of cities. His plan provides for the abolition of ward units, a small council board, nonpartisan nominations and elections, the initiative and referendum, the recall, the merit system for all employees and strictly home rule on all subjects of a purely local nature.

The counterfeiter who excused himself for making spurious dollars by saying that he needed the money to build a balloon did not seek so much to inflate currency as to secure currency for inflation.

That $42,000 recently paid for a seat on the New York Stock Exchange was not high, but low. The owner paid $95,000 for it not long ago, and it seems it would have been dear at half the money.

At the rate the boys are arriving at the home of Germany's crown prince that country need not wofry about a shortage of emperors for some time to come.

Scratching off that legend has not taken away all reverence for Uncle Sam's gold X's, however.

The Atlantic Coast Waterway.

There is nothing radical or visionary in the plan for an inland coast waterway paralleling the Atlantic and capable of an almost indefinite extension within the limits of the Union, which was discussed before the recent conference at Philadelphia. Seventeen states were represented at the conference, although the waterway specifically considered would neither traverse nor skirt the territory of more than ten states. It is said that states lying contiguous to the region most directly affected heartily favor the project as one which is certain to benefit a whole section of states rather than one narrow belt of states.

Nature has practically fixed the route for the Atlantic coast inland waterway and indicated where the work for its promotion should begin. In this order, beginning on the south, the waters of the North Carolina sounds, James river, Chesapeake bay, the Delaware and Hudson rivers and Long Island sound and Massachusetts bay furnish independent and separate channels for vessels, and there are only wanting artificial links comparatively easy of construction to complete a chain of interior coastal waterways along more than half of our Atlantic coast line. Some of the links have been made. The United States government is at work upon a connection between the mouth of the James river and the sounds of North Carolina. Two canals across the Maryland peninsula and New Jersey respectively have long been in existence, and the Cape Cod canal, an old idea recently revived, now under construction, forms the fourth important link.

The process of modernizing the old canals and bringing them up to the present needs of traffic will be great, yet it is believed that the total cost of the improvements and new construction necessary between North Carolina and Massachusetts bay will not exceed the expenditure for deepening the Erie canal, about $100,000,000. Farther south and in the nature of an extension of the system here considered it was suggested in the recent conference a system of canals that would lead across South Carolina, Georgia and Florida to the waters of the gulf of Mexico will be feasible. Between this Atlantic coast waterway and the lake to gulf route upon which attention has been fixed there can be no hostility, although there may be some friendly rivalry in the matter of showing enterprise. The Erie canal would complete a circle embracing the most populous half of the Union, and the benefits would be felt by nearly the whole nation.

It is a mistake to treat the proposed inland coast waterway as a blow at the railroads. Its construction has become imperative because the railroads are not able to carry the freight that is offered or that would be offered were this facility for coast traffic finished. The object of improving waterways here and elswhere is to create trade, not merely to divert it. Heavy crude freight cannot be carried by the railroads a long distance profitably. It is here that water communication supplements the railroads by taking the heavier and bulkier freight, leaving for the railroads the more compact articles and the perishable freight, which they can handle with facility and carry at a profit both to the shippers and the railroads. Already our natural resources are so fully developed and in some cases are so near exhaustion that America can no longer afford to neglect any means for the expension of its commercial and industrial facilities.

In face of the plain statement of the government authorities last year that the organization of the postal clerks for mutual help would not be interfered with, but that no combination for the purpose of coercing legislation or influencing politics would be permitted, it looks as though those who are seeking to organize the clerks as a labor union to force the enactment of an eight hour law may come to grief.

The introduction of Charles Dickens' name in the famous Druce case renders still more interesting a romance in real life which would be criticised as incredible in a novel or on the stage. A contest for a dukedom, accompanied as this contest is with the most melodramatic of details, only proves once more the force of the old truism that truth is stranger than fiction.

Congressional salaries were raised 50 per cent last session, so observations on the "state of the country" have no relation to the state of the individual member's private purse.

A Few Facts and Figures.

TO THE GENOA TRIBUNE:

Although construction of the State system of automobile roads has only just begun in Cayuga county, its taxpayers in the present tax levy are getting a foretaste of what they will later get in full measure.

About $57,000 is raised in this tax as the county's share of the cost of the few miles to be built next summer, which makes a very material increase in the tax rate of last year even in those towns where no roads are being constructed.

	Rate last year.	Rate this year.
Locke	$7.44	$8.78
Moravia	8.36	10.64
Genoa	6.40	8.22
Ledyard	4.68	6.10
Niles	7.72	15.30
Sennett	4.52	11.72

In most of the above towns the rate this year would be less than last year were it not for the State roads. Niles and Sennett where roads are under contract, have $10,299 added to their tax for roads over and above their part of the county and State taxes. When they see how little they have for their money, these rates make them sit up and take notice. After the fifty millions are spent, we will only have about one mile improved to eighteen miles left as they now are, or about four and one-half miles of good roads so-called in each of the towns of Genoa and Venice and other towns in proportion. These roads even will not continue good without an annual outlay of $500 to $1,000 per mile.

Genoa, Ledyard and Venice are not at all responsible for the State roads craze for Supervisors Dudley, Sullivan, Streeter and Mosher have, as the records show, faithfully represented the sentiment of their towns and have at all times worked and voted against the county of Cayuga taking any part of this white elephant on its hands.

Respectfully,
COMMON SENSE.

Don't Depend Entirely on God.

A Colorado boy was visiting a cousin in New England about Thanksgiving time and observed the elaborate preparations being made for Thanksgiving. They had Thanksgiving in Colorado, but not on so grand a scale, and he inquired of his New England cousin the object of it all.

"Why, we thank God for the blessings of our crops."

"But you don't thank God for your crops, do you?" asked the Colorado boy.

"Yes, of course we do. Don't you?"

"No; we don't depend entirely on God for our crops. We irrigate."

THE HERO.

Nay, never falter. No great deed is done
By falterers who ask for certainty.
No good is certain but the steadfast mind,
The undivided will to seek the good.
'Tis that compels the elements and wrings
A human music from the indifferent air.
The greatest gift the hero leaves his race
Is to have been a hero. Say we fail!
We feed the high tradition of the world
And leave our spirit in our children's breasts.

—Lowell.

Proving It by the Calendar.

In the British museum two men were discussing some Egyptian coins.

"Them there," said one, "must be three or four 'undred years old."

"Three thousand, more likely," replied his companion.

"Aw, go on! Why, we're only in 1907 now!"—Everybody's.

Sunday Sickness.

Morbus sabbaticus is a disease peculiar to church members. The attack comes on suddenly every Sunday. No symptoms are felt on Saturday night. The patient sleeps well and wakes feeling well, eats a hearty breakfast, but about church time the attack comes on and continues until services are over for the morning. Then the patient feels easy and eats a hearty dinner. In the afternoon he feels much better and is able to take a walk, talk about politics and read the Sunday papers. He eats a hearty supper, but about church time he has another attack and stays at home. He retires early, sleeps well and wakes up on Monday morning refreshed and able to go to work and does not have any symptoms of the disease until the following Sunday.

Worth Seeing.

Mrs. Walker's cook was trying to make her mistress realize what she had missed by not attending the funeral of a prominent citizen of their village.

"Mis' Fanny," she said, "you sholy orto hev been thar. I ain' nevvah seen sech a big funril in dis heah town. Dontcher know dey hed all de kerridges fum bofe liberty stables, 'mos' all de private conveniences, an' dat new fambly from de nawth was dere in a two horse syringe!"—Lippincott's.

He Only Laughed.

"What is the matter, darling?" asked mamma when her small son came to her in tears.

"Daddy was hanging a picture, and he dropped it, and it fell on his toe."

"But that is nothing to cry about."

"I didn't cry. I laughed."

His Thanksgiving Invitation.

A young man who had got into the habit of spending all his evenings away from home was asked by his father if he had any engagement for Thanksgiving evening. The young man had nothing in particular.

"Well, I'd like to have you go somewhere with me," replied his father.

"All right," said the boy. "Where shall I meet you?"

"Father suggested a hotel at half past 7, and I was there," the boy goes on to tell. "When he appeared he said he wanted me to call with him on a lady. 'One I knew quite well when I was a young man,' he explained.

"We went out and started straight for home.

"'She is staying at our house,' he said.

"I thought it strange that he should have made the appointment for a hotel under those circumstances, but said nothing.

"Well, we went in, and I was introduced with all due formality to my mother and sister.

"The situation struck me as funny, and I started to laugh. My mother and sister shook hands with me, and my mother said she remembered me as a boy, but hadn't seen much of me lately. Then she invited me to be seated.

"It wasn't a bit funny then, although I can laugh over it now. I sat down, and she told me one or two anecdotes of my boyhood, at which we all laughed for a little. Then we played games for awhile and enjoyed some light refreshments that mother had prepared. When I finally retired I was invited to call again. I went upstairs doing a good deal of thinking."—Ladies' Home Journal.

It Worked.

A London commercial after "working" Glasgow had some time to wait for his train at St. Enoch station and bethought himself of a little joke.

"What is the name of this station, my good man?" he asked of a porter.

"St. Enoch station, sir."

A few minutes later he met the same porter and said:

"What did you call this station, porter?"

"St. Enoch's. Dae ye no see the name abune the hotel there?"

Just then the train was shunted in, and the drummer got comfortably seated in a third class smoker along with a few more passengers of the male persuasion.

"These railway officers are about the worst I ever came across. They can't be civil," remarked the drummer.

"That's a confounded lee!" said a Scotch farmer.

"Well, I'll bet you 10 bob I don't get a civil answer from the first porter I ask a question of."

"Done!" replied the old farmer.

Looking out of the carriage window, he spied his green friend and, calling him over, asked in his most polite tone:

"Would you kindly tell me the name of this station, porter?"

"Gang awa', ye bacon faced old buffer! Pit yer daft heid in!" was the answer.

Pop Knew.

"Say, pop, what's a diplomat?"

"He's a man who when he can't have his own way pretends that the other way is his."

One Way to Advertise.

Toole in his autobiography says that when returning with Irving from the funeral of one of the Broughs he found a crowd surrounding a man in a fit of some kind, possibly of drunkenness, Toole made his way through the crowd by saying: "Excuse me, gentlemen, I'm a doctor. Allow me to examine this patient." Having loosened his necktie and opened his shirt and sounded his chest, Toole produced with professional gravity some kind of plasters apparently and applied one to the patient's forehead, one to his throat and three to his chest. He made his way back through the crowd to Irving. "Run, run for the nearest cab," he whispered to Irving, "or we shall be murdered!" Hardly had they reached the cab before they heard a roar of rage from the crowd, who had discovered that the supposed doctor's plasters were fly sheet advertisements bearing the legend, "See Toole in 'Dot!'"

Righting a Wrong.

A burly, fierce looking man and a meek, inoffensive looking little chap were sawing timber with a crosscut saw. A strapping Irishman, passing that way, stopped to watch them. Back and forth, back and forth, they pulled at the saw. Finally the Irishman, with a whoop and a yell, rushed at the big man and brought him to the ground, burying his knees deep into the sawyer's chest.

Biff! Bang! Thump! Biff!

"There," he said, letting him have one parting blow square on the nose, "now mebbe ye'll let the little felly hev it!"—Everybody's.

His Second Choice.

"Well, Harry," said the lady visitor, "don't you think you have a chance to be president of the United States?"

"Oh, I don't know," answered Harry carelessly. "Maybe I'll try for it after I get too old to be a pitcher."

A Rising Diplomat.

A curious person espied the son of a new neighbor one morning in a doctor's office.

"Good morning," he said. "Little boy, what is your name?"

"Same as dad's," was the quick reply.

"Of course, I know, little boy, but what is your dad's name, dear?"

"Same as mine, sir."

"I mean what do they say when they call you to breakfast?"

"They don't never call me. I allus gets there first. See?"—Ladies' Home Journal.

Crusoe's Good Friday.

"Now, boys," said a Sunday school teacher, addressing the juvenile class, "can either of you tell me anything about Good Friday?"

"Yes, ma'am; I can," replied the boy at the foot of the class. "He was the fellow that done the housework for Robinson Crusoe."

Would Choose His Company.

In the west there lived a good man who gave up a part of his time to teaching the Indians the Christian faith. On one of his trips he stopped at the ranch of a well to do and religious Swede and requested a night's lodging.

The Swede disliked having a pack of greasy Indians hanging about his place, so, after much hemming and hawing, he stated his objections.

"But these Indians are Christians, my good brother, and if you can't abide with them for a single night here on earth how do you expect to dwell in heaven with them through all eternity?" inquired the indignant missionary.

The Swede, after thoughtfully scratching his head a moment, said, "The Bible says that in my Father's house are many mansions, an' I t'ank I haf a separate house."—Lippincott's.

Senator Hanna's Disappointment.

"I have one wish I fear will never be fulfilled," said the late Senator Hanna as he sat in the senate restaurant and ate a very simple luncheon.

"What is it?" asked Senator Kean of New Jersey.

"I should like to eat everything and then have the work of digestion devolve on some Democrat."

Three Live Men.

"The station at Savannah," says a traveler, "is surrounded with a lot of saloons and cheap restaurants. In great illuminated letters over one of these saloons was the sign:

"'Open All Night.'

"Next to it was a restaurant bearing with equal prominence the legend:

"'We Never Close.'

"Third in order was a Chinese laundry in a little tumbledown hovel, and upon the front of this building was the sign in great, scrawling letters:

"'Me Wakee Too.'"

ROADS AND ROAD MAKING

CARE OF LOAM ROADS.

From Time To Time They Should Be Plowed and Cultivated.

Loam roads are so widely different from gravel, macadam and other roads we have to deal with, that they occupy a class almost by themselves. It is quite essential, in the repair of these roads, that from time to time they should be turned over with the plough and cultivated, not only by ploughing deep, but also using the harrow after ploughing, removing the stones that will have a tendency to make future trouble and placing them sufficiently back on the margins so that there will be no possibility of their rolling down into the gutters and obstructing the water courses as we often find them doing in our highway work, says the New York State Highway Commissioner. It is as necessary to cultivate these roads, as I have suggested, as it is to cultivate the land inside the fences. Wherever any road has soil that is full of water with a tendency to mire up in the spring and fall, the loosening of the soil will have a tendency to let the heat penetrate and not only warm the soil and assist in evaporating the excess moisture, but it will also be a valuable adjunct in making the soil light and friable and thus, in time, completely remove it from a miry condition. Weeds and grass, which are of so much annoyance and disadvantage to a road, will disappear and the road will respond economically in retaining its form, and be dry, pleasant and convenient for travel.

A heavy loam road after it has been properly underdrained and culverts established where necessary, can be wonderfully improved by putting on a course of sand in the early spring. This should be distributed over the entire road and either harrowed in, so that the sand may become thoroughly incorporated with the loam, or just put it on the road and let the teams or ordinary travel work it through. The harrowing, of course, would be better, but the road can be wonderfully assisted in becoming dry by putting the sand on and allowing the teams to do the rest. The sand and the loam make a very good combination, and the result will be that the miry condition formerly experienced will quickly disappear.

In Building a Stone Road.

To build a good stone road, first grade your hill down to five per cent. or less if possible; fill up your flats so that you have a minimum grade of at least one-half per cent; second, by underdrains cut off all water that may threaten the road; third, give your road a crown of three-quarters inch per foot; fourth, cut out your sub-grade, being careful to give it the same curvature as the finished road; fifth, roll the sub-grade until it is hard and smooth, carefully removing any spongy or vegetable earth that the rolling may disclose; sixth, spread your bottom course evenly, then roll and add a little binder and continue the rolling until the stones cease to sink or creep in front of the roller; seventh, spread your second course and roll it, with the addition of binder and water, until the whole surface is hard and smooth, carefully filling with stone any depressions that may appear, then finish the whole with a course of ¾-inch stone and screenings. This must be soaked with water and rolled until a wave of mud is formed in front of the roller, being particularly careful to commence the rolling at the sides and gradually work toward the center by so doing you will preserve the crown of your road. If this work is well and thoroughly done, you will have a road that is smooth, hard and convenient for travel at all seasons of the year.—Good Roads.

When Clover Loses Value.

Clover hay which has been rained upon loses in value very quickly and most of the loss falls upon the leaves,—the most valuable part of the plant. These contain most of the protein of the plant. In both handling and cutting clover it is important to secure the crop without shattering, so as to get all the leaves.

Alfalfa should be cut before it is too ripe or in full bloom, in order to save the blades and leaves which are rich in protein.

As a rule alfalfa produces more than double the number of tons per acre, as compared with clover, and is as rich or richer in nutritious properties.

In Growing Alfalfa

Any time a new stand of alfalfa does not seem to be doing well, either from too much water or not enough water, or is sickly from any cause, the best thing to do is to cut it and have it start over. If it is too wet it will turn yellow and if too dry it will turn dark green. In irrigating the water should not be kept on over one day at a time for alfalfa will not stand the abusive practice of a continuous run such as we so often see on the mountain meadows where native hay is grown.

Cured of Lung Trouble.

"It is now eleven years since I had a narrow escape from consumption," writes U. O. Floyd, a leading business man of Kershaw, S. C. "I had run down in weight to 135 pounds, and coughing was constant, both by day and by night. Finally I began taking Dr. King's New Discovery, and continued this for about six months, when my cough and lung trouble were entirely gone and I was restored to my normal weight, 170 pounds." Thousands of persons are healed every year. Guaranteed at J. S. Banker's, Genoa, and F. T. Atwater's, King Ferry, drug stores. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

Every farmer and business man should use envelopes with his name printed on the corner. It insures the return of the letter if not delivered. One hundred fine envelopes printed for 75 cents. Order by mail or call at The Tribune office.

The word psyche, originally signifying the soul, came afterward to mean also a butterfly—a likeness being observed between the manner in which a soul and a butterfly, freed from the body or chrysalis in which they have been confined, rise on wing and waft themselves in the light.

Wise Counsel from the South

"I want to give some valuable advice to those who suffer with lame back and kidney trouble," says J. R. Blankenship, of Beck, Tenn. "I have proved to an absolute certainty that Electric Bitters will positively cure this distressing condition. The first bottle gave me great relief and after taking a few more bottles, I was completely cured; so completely that it becomes a pleasure to recommend this great remedy." Sold under guarantee at J. S. Banker's, Genoa, and F. T. Atwater's, King Ferry, drug stores. Paice 50c.

THRICE-A-WEEK WORLD.

The Thrice-a-Week World expects to be a better paper in 1907 than ever before. In the course of the year the issues of the next great Presidential campaign will be foreshadowed, and everybody will wish to keep informed. The Thrice-a-Week World, coming to you every other day, serves all the purpose of a daily, and is far cheaper. The news service of this paper is constantly being increased, and it reports fully, accurately and promptly every event of importance anywhere in the world. Moreover, its political news is impartial, giving you facts, not opinions and wishes. It has full markets, splendid cartoons and interesting fiction by standard authors.

THE THRICE-A-WEEK WORLD'S regular subscription price is only $1.00 per year, and this pays for 156 issues. We offer this unequalled newspaper and THE GENOA TRIBUNE together for one year for $1.65 The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.00.

TWO PREACHERS CONTRASTED.

Jan. 12, '08.—(John 1:35-49.)

There never could be a greater contrast than that presented by Christ and John the Baptist. They were cousins according to human lineage. They were young men, about 30 years of age when they begun to preach. They were wonderfully successful in reaching the masses, the very point where almost all other religious teachers failed. Their ministry in each instance covered a period of only about three years. They both aroused bitter antagonism and persecution. The one was the forerunner and harbinger of the other. They both came to a violent death.

And yet, these two men were as unlike in their personal appearance, personal habits, style of speech, method of address, attitude toward the social, literary, political, ecclesiastical world as it is possible to conceive. The people who claim to know just how preaching ought to be done so as to reach and move the hearts of men en masse should study the characteristics of these two great preachers and learn something more.

John The Baptist was an escetic, a recluse, sequestered, solitary; Christ sat at table with publicans and sinners, frequented all public places, and gathered around him a band of men who loved him above all others.

John The Baptist was condemnatory, he damned the age with rough and violent damnation. He uncovered a hell to burn up the hypocrites of his day, and spared nothing of brimstone. He was rough in apparel, stentorian of tone, severe, tremendous in discipline, and the people cowered before him as men instinctively dodge lightning; Christ never cursed, there was no fire in his eye, he did not crack a whip of scorpions over the heads of his hearers, when he preached he calmly seated himself in a boat or on a flower-strewn mountain slope, and the multitudes crept up around him as sheep around a protecting shepherd, and when the Son of Man spoke of the judgments that were sure to overtake the transgressors there were tears in his eyes and a sob in his throat.

John the Baptist warned: Christ invited.

John The Baptist threatened; Christ allured.

John The Baptist showed men the pit; Christ pointed to the skies.

John The Baptist said "You must;" Christ said, "You may."

John The Baptist was a pathfinder; Christ walked over the road he hewed through the wilderness.

John The Baptist did no miracle; Christ proved that there was nothing impossible for him.

John the Baptist was the last prophet of the Old Dispensation; Christ was the first prophet of the New Dispensation.

Yet both these preachers were mightily successful. They both reached the masses. When John the Baptist started a revival he was able to draw the crowds even into the wilderness to hear him. And in like manner, Christ could not escape the crowds that thronged him. They scurried on ahead of him, they would not be shaken off from following him, they filled the street when he passed through, they unroofed houses to get near to him. He was the greatest revivalist the world has ever seen. Yet altogether different from John. John thundered like Sinai; Christ said "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest.

What made the difference? The people felt that these men knew them, understood them, and required nothing of them but what was reasonable and right. The trouble with the church today is that poor men, weak men, sinful men do not have faith in the ministry. They look upon the clergy as a class out of touch completely with the average man. The man in the overalls, who sees a clergyman only occasionally does not believe that the minister cares for his interest or has anything in common with him. He thinks the clergyman is hired to preach sermons, and does not look upon him as a legate of the skies, sent into the ministry for no other purpose than to look him up and help him socially, intellectually, materially and morally to better his condition.

Explain it as you may, this is the real reason why more men are not found in the church. Millions of them are there, but more millions are not, and we are discussing those who are not. That was not true of John the Baptist and Christ. The people of their day knew that they had a message for their hearts, and that it would do them, and their families, and their communities good to hear and heed that message. The preachers did not dodge anything, they called a spade a spade, they told men their faults to their faces, but they did it as a faithful physician makes no apology for diagnosing disease but proceeds at once to administer the remedy.

John the Baptist and Jesus! Infinite contrasts in their methods, but infinite compassion in their hearts! Possibly if modern preachers had more of the characteristics of these great revivalists in their makeup they would be more successful.

WHAT DRINKING COSTS.

"The Use of Alcohol as a Beverage Largely a Material Waste."

"If the money spent by union men in saloons," said one debater at the Chicago Federation of Labor on Sunday, "were put into a fund to establish the eight hour day, we would have it in short order, and without any legislation, either."

The man who said this doubtless overrates the power of money to change industrial conditions. There are probably some industries which could not go on at all at present with an eight hour day. Their margin of profit is so small that if the volume of production were reduced one-fifth daily the cost would be raised to a point where the product would become unsalable.

Yet there is a good deal of truth in what he said. There is not the slightest doubt that most drinking of alcoholic beverages is a waste. Not because alcohol is a poison under all circumstances, but because the food value of such beverages is so slight that the buyer of them gets practically nothing for his money.

The factory value of the distilled and malt liquors made in this country in 1900 was $334,068,156. They cost the men who drank them four or five times that mount. It is true that these industries in the same year gave more or less profit on $447,836,072 capital to 8,814 proprietors, bought $66,822,712 worth of material, paid $27,556,529 in wages to 43,254 persons, and gave livelihoods to several hundred thousand middlemen between producer and consumer.

Yet if the American people would all stop drinking they could with the money thus saved each year pay all the distillery and brewery workers their present wages, pay the proprietors of the industry 10 per cent. on their capital and pay the sellers of material to it 10 per cent. on their sales as compensation for the loss of trade, at a total cost of about $80,000,000. They might even support, until their bread winners could find other work, all the families of the middlemen in the business, and still save an enormous amount—perhaps $500,000,000 a year.

Wholly aside from its moral and social effects, the use of alcohol as a beverage is to a large extent a material waste. The mere figures show it —Chicago Inter Ocean.

They Drink Within Bounds in Cuba.

The total abstainer in Cuba feels lonely, says Rev. E. P. Herrick in New Voice. He is looked on as a rara avis, decidedly peculiar and not readily understood.

The would-be temperance reformer has a hard row to hoe in this tropic isle, where moderate drinking is well-nigh universal.

The average Cuban abhors drunkenness as satan hates holy water. A drunkard is despised. He is a social outcast. To appear in a state of intoxication is to disgrace one's self, and yet those who talk thus indulge daily in wine drinking, and go further, drinking the fiery aguardiente, yet never to excess, or rarely.

Some good preparatory temperance work has been done in the chief cities of Cuba, notably Havana, where a W. C. T. U. flourishes and a succesful prize medal contest has recently taken place.

The idea prevails (and for it the church is responsible) that temperance is the temperate use of wines and liquors, moderation, the avoidance of intoxication. As has been already stated, drunkenness is a rare thing amongst native Cubans, though I believe it to be on the increase on the island, especially among the Spaniards. Sixteen arrests for intoxication were made in one day in Havana The average Cuban thinks it a waste of time to teach temperance to a people already temperate. The foundation for future temperance work must consist of an attention to definition and the creation of public sentiment, even though it stops short of drunkenness.

Every grocery store sells strong drink. Low license is here in its worst form. Cheap aguardiente made from cane juice constantly tempts the man who is under the sway of the cursed appetite. There is no public sentiment against liquor selling. The rumseller is in "good and regular standing." When I told a man recently that I would not admit as a member of my church any man who sold liquor he stared at me in amazement.

Futhermore, it seems utterly absurd to the observant Cuban that Americans should come down to initiate temperance reform here when—as they see it—the need is so much greater in their home land. The example of many of our soldiers and also of many American residents has led them to regard us as a nation of drinkers. "Physician, heal thyself," is the counsel they give to those who desire to extend a helping hand.

The heavy tax on alcohol which went into effect last year has stopped the adulteration of liquor.

Camphorated alcohol is still very cheap (20 cents per gallon). This can be used for fuel, for medicinal or for industrial purposes. I have seen drunkards eagerly drinking it. The price of liquors, even of low-grade brandy, has doubled since the inauguration of the new tax.

President Palma, who so wisely governs the infant republic, said: "All true reforms will eventually win." We echo the sentiment, and believe that even in Cuba we shall witness temperance victories at no distant day.

BEES AND BEE KEEPING

BEES AND HORTICULTURE.

Without These Workers Our Fruit Crops Would be Reduced 90 Per Cent

Nearly all flowers require fertilization through the medium of pollen from another flower of the same species, which is accomplished in various natural ways; some by gravity in dropping from a higher elevation; some by the winds blowing the pollen from one flower to another. But such fertilization is only-incidental, always unceratin and imperfect.

An all-wise Creator placed nectar in nearly all flowers to entice the bees to them. He covered the body of the bees with a coat of fine hair and made their diet to consist of honey and pollen. To obtain this the bees visit the flowers to extract the nectar and while doing so a single bee visits sometimes 50 flowers before obtaining a load to carry to the hive. At each visit to the fifty, or less, of different flowers, the flower pollen of the various flowers becomes entangled in the hairlike covering and in their effort to extract nectar from the next visited flower, a sufficient portion of the pollen obtained is dropped and fertilization is thus effected. This adherence of the pollen to the hairlike covering of the bee is sometimes so complete as to change, for the time being, the color of the bee. The writer has seen bees, by nature black or brown, return to their hive colored orange, yellow, white or a mixture of these colors, so thoroughly were they covered with pollen. Not only does a bee visit a flower once, but hundreds may visit the same flower in a day and for numbers of days in succession and thus the most perfect fertilization is brought about.

In my earlier days when I was as much an enthusiastic horticulturist as apiarian, I conducted many experiments and made many observations. I found that during the blooming of fruit trees, should the weather be too cool to permit of the bees flying, an imperfect fruit crop was the result. Believing that the cool days might be the cause of the imperfect fruit rather than the absence of the bees, I investigated a little further in the succeeding years, when the weather was pleasant for the bees to visit the flowers, by covering certain parts of blooming trees with wire cloth or netting to exclude the bees, yet permit free acess of all pollen carried by the winds, and in every instance limbs and trees thus covered produced either no fruit or only a few small and imperfect specimens. After repeated experiments it is my candid opinion that without bees our fruit crop would be reduced fully 90 per cent. Not only is this true of the fruit of the orchard, but likewise with berries and vegetables. —Maine Farmer.

Fight Against Bees

About the silliest thing we have seen in a long time was contained in a pertition sent by some Iowa people asking their congressman for a bill to restrain honey bees from flying at large. The petitioners asked that the wheels of the government be set to running so as to circumscribe the movements of bees and to prohibit the buzzing sound. "So doth the busty bee," etc. We read that bees were once used as weapons of war. The Romans made mines in the ground and bears and bees were thrown in causing the enemy to travel south when it struck that particular spot. At one time the Norweglans and Danes attacked Chester and were repulsed, the Saxons using bees in the attack.—Field and Farm.

Removing the Honey.

Take off all honey, promptly, when it is well finished and capped over, for to allow it to remain on the hive will give it a tainted appearance, and it will not look so clean, white, and crisp as it is at first. All comb-honey becomes bee stained more or less if it remains long in the hive. Keep all comb-honey in a dry place, but never put it in a cellar; the garret is far better. It should be in a high, dry place, with plenty of light; never in the dark. Heat will not injure it if not extremely exposed.

The Bees To Keep.

To many bee-keepers "a bee is a bee." When driving through the country, how many apiaries of pure Italians, Carniolans, or even all pure black or German bees do we see? Sometimes we run on to an occasional yard of a pure race; but more often there is a general mixture of a whole lot. This habit of swinging around from one breed to another, mixing and crossing, is not the way to get the most profitable results and satisfaction out of bees. Don't do it.—Field and Farm.

A Sign of Swarming.

Bees clinging in clusters, on the outside of the hive, is the old sign of imminent swarming, and it is a good sign. Better have a hive ready for the new swarm, and keep on the lookout. The swarm is likely to come out within two or three days.

Madame Nazimova.

"Madame Nazimova came to America in the spring of 1906 with a company of Russian players, who met with such scant appreciation here that they almost starved before they were sent back to Russia by public subscription," says Anne Peacock in the Woman's Home Companion. "A New York manager offered to place the leading woman on Broadway 'if she could learn English in a year.' She learned it in six months well enough to appear in Ibsen's 'Hedda Gabler' at a series of matinee performances in November, 1906, and literally took the town by storm. During the winter she produced another Ibsen play, "A Doll's House," and a comedy, from the Italian, 'Comtesse Coquette,' both of which she stage-managed herself She has been interviewed and photographed and praised more than any other actress of the day; but her great success has left her as unspoiled as when she and her company were struggling in a dingy little theater on the Bowery, scarcely knowing where their next meal was coming from—if it came at all. The contrast between those days and her present position must strike her when she puts on the simple little sailor suit, which as Hilda Wangel she wears in 'The Master Builder;' for it is the same costume she wore when she gave the play here in Russian, and she proudly told me that she had made every stitch of it herself. 'I am so full of ambition and the longing for great new things," she said in a letter written after her first success in 'The Master Builder,' and it is this ambition and longing which make her worth seeing in any play she undertakes."

Remarkable Showing.

Mr. D. R. Nettleton of Cornell University, has been making official records for W. B. Whitlock at Hillcrest Farm, Warwick, N. Y. He reports at this office that he tested seven cows, all making fine records, two of which averaged 65 pounds of milk per day, and 21 pounds of butter in seven days; three averaging 18 pounds of butter in seven days at four years and six months of age. One full-aged cow, under very unfavorable circumstances, made 15½ lbs. butter. in seven days; also a two-year-old heifer, making over 50 lbs. of milk in one day; in seven days she produced 350 lbs. of milk, containing 16 lbs. butter. This heifer freshened nearly two months before her time.

County Treasurer J. E. Sanford has purchased a very fine bull calf, "Hartog Pauline Butter Boy," from one of the best cows at Hillcrest Farm. Although Mr. Sanford has no pure-bred cows, he believes in having nothing but the best to head his herd of high grades. Hillcrest herd now numbers 60, with a number of promising young heifers which Mr. Whitlock expects to credit with some fine records next spring. The herd is headed by Neah Pauline DeKol Butter Boy, No. 34,645, whose dam has an official record of nearly 26 lbs. of butter in seven days, and about 83 lbs of milk in one day. Mr. Whitlock started this herd six years ago by buying a pure-bred bull and one cow, since then the herd has steadily grown toits present numbers.—Warwick Valley Dispatch.

ADDITIONAL LOCAL.

—Mr. Austin L. Mott, Sr., of Victory died very suddenly Saturday evening last at the home of his daughter, Mrs. I. J. Main, in Locke He was 72 years of age and leaves a wife and twelve children. The cause of death was heart failure. The funeral and burial was at Cato on Wednesday.

—Miss Sophronia Lick of the town of Moravia died Dec. 28, aged 78 years, at the home of her sister, Mrs. Richmond Vosburg. She is survived by three sisters and one brother, Mrs Calvin Atwood of East Genoa, Mrs. Charles Caldwell, Mrs. Richmond Vosburg and Clarendon Lick of the town of Moravia.

Reception by the President.

President Roosevelt leads two lives when in Washington. His home in the White House is up-stairs. He can pick up a volume of one of his favorite authors, have a bout with the single sticks or help little Quentin to master a difficult lesson. He is husband, father—elder brother if the boys want him to be one of them in some sport. The inner picture of the Roosevelt family life is only to be seen here and by their intimate friends.

Down-stairs he is the President. In the little one story wing which has been added to the istoric structure he attends to the duties of his office just as the merchant, the banker, the manufacturer go through the day's routine; but, unlike them, he is required to do something else. Etiquette, or whatever you may please to term it, demands that he must entertain and be entertained. He earns his salary, not only to attend to the President's business, but to act for the American people as their host. Hence he must welcome all kinds of folk, from the representatives of other nations who are in our midst to the delegates from the smallest Territory. The ambassador, the general, the admiral, the senator, the congressman or the ordinary, every day citizen who is entitled to the courtesy, is received at some function at the White House and shown hospitality in accordance with his rank o the service he has performed for the country.

So, the President is very like the actor in the play. He is obliged to assume the role of entertainer as well as business man and statesman. It may be at luncheon, the more formal dinner or the musicale, but so many thousand people must be his guests, in one way or another, that receptions are given to which five thousand invitations may be issued to persons living anywhere from Maine to Oregon. Not all can accept, but as many as three thousand have passed within the doors of the White House at one of these events.—The Ladies' World for January.

Policeman's Badge Over His Heart.

Many persons are puzzled to know why policemen wear their badges so low on their coats instead of on the flap made for that purpose. As a matter of fact, the badge or star, as he calls it, of many a policeman is right next to his heart.

Some of the bluecoats of this city can thank their "stars" for being alive. This little metal shield has deflected the bullet of burglar or highwayman and at times, too, has stopped the knife thrust of would-be assassins. During the last twenty or thirty years there are many cases on record showing that the little badge has been a lifesaver Evenbullets fired at close range, as a rule cannot penetrate the shield. That's why a bluecoat always feels safer in keeping the star at a vital spot. When off duty some policemen wear their stars on their vests, but always directly over the heart. They are so acustomed to the little protector that they feel uneasy without it.—New York Sun.

HUNGER AND INTEMPERANCE.

Marion Elliston Explains the Confusions of Cause and Effect.

Centuries ago there was told with a dramatic forcefulness and brevity that has kept it alive for nineteen centuries the story of the Pharisee who was thankful that he was not as other people. His manner, however, inferred that there was considerably more of conceit than gratitude in his thanksgiving.

Why should this, of all moments, be chosen for quite so many of the Pharisee's criticisms of his fellows? Why quite so many comments and rejoinders to any statements of West Ham's misery and Plaistow's hunger of "Simply drink; it is no good helping these people; they will drink"? "Nine-tenths of the crime and poverty of the world are caused by drink. If people would not drink they would be able to keep themselves without harrowing us."

Never for one moment imagine that it is in any representative sense the temperance party or the social philanthropists who cause this jangle. They have grown too interested in great questions to lose themselves in petty narrowness. The critics are people standing away on the outside, who never come close enough to their fellows to feel the heart-beat of their misery, the pulse of their despair, or the power of their temptations; so they waste themselves in a profitless survey of all that intemperance causes, instead of going behind it.

What does cause intemperance?

Primarily, excessive drinking has three great causes in our social system. First, underfeeding. Second, bad house accommodation. Third, an inadequate supply of indoor places of healthy and wholesome recreation, that are a man's right by virtue of citizenship. I only propose to consider the first cause here.

Introduce the subject of underfed children to the superficial reader or thinker, and it is instantly set down as a consequence of the intemperance of their parents. What percentage of those same people would as quickly concede that it was also in a very large number of cases the underfeeding of those very fathers and mothers themselves that caused the intemperance? Probably not very many; but without any doubt it is so.

Follow the course which being "out of work" naturally takes with the average honest, steady workingman. Depression sets in; the works close down, or 30 per cent of the hands are thrown off, and the man finds himself idle. The first week it scarcely matters—something else is sure to come. But it does not. Monday brings the weekly rent collector, who grumbles at the lapse. Before the next Monday the man pawns his Sunday suit (and often, too, his self-respect) lest there should be worse than grumbling. The food supplies give out; so does the fuel for cooking. Variety of fare and the comfort of meals ebbs into the past, carrying with it stamina and backbone—strength of will and moral principle being largely matters of material nourishment.

More clothes have to be pawned—his wife's, then his children's. Bit by bit the furniture goes. It hurts him cruelly, maddening, when it begins. But as each thing disappears it hurst a little less. A dull, lounging feeling of indolence and lassitude begins creeping over him. Why?

It is merely "underfeeding." The man is on half rations, or less than half. And surely, however slowly, it is weakening his mind, enervating his principles and his will, and lowering his self-respect, just as it is destroying his muscle, impoverishing his labor capacity, undermining his physique, and leaving him a ready prey to every adverse bacterial or atmospheric condition.

It is entirely impossible for a man who has been in a seriously undernourished state for any prolonged period to feel with intensity as it is for him to produce his ten hours of well-driven work. Long-drawn-out semi-starvation, and vigor (of either body, mind, or spirit) are antipathetic conditions.

He sets out in time to reach the docks or his yard ready for the first "take on" at 6, frequently walking miles to it for lack of the ha'pence for a workman's ticket, and frequently without a mouthful of breakfast, because there was none to have. If he is lucky enough to be taken on, his work suffers from his exhaustion. If he remains among the ninety and nine unwanted, he can only drag round from place to place until the turn for the second half day is called. Unwanted then, there is nothing left for him but to wander home to the misery of his wife and the hunger of his children.

Shall he stay at home in the one little room and look at the misery and firelessness for the rest of the day?

There lies the peril of the intemperance. Why not go out and forget it? There is a forgetfulness so easily won. There is light, and warmth, and cheer, and plenty of friends to stand him a glass at the public house. He will not see them suffer while he is there. By the time he goes back he will be past caring. He goes today, tomorrow, and yet again.

I maintain that underfeeding causes intemperance quite as often as intemperance causes underfeeding. Wherefore cure the underfeeding now, before it brings the greater evil.—London Express.
