6 Genesee St., Auburn.

Mention this Paper.

When you write to Chemist Hamilton of Auburn, N. Y., do not fail to mention this paper. He will send you a free sample of the following: Hamilton's Autumn Flower, that wonderful kidney. liver and stomach tonic, that is restoring pale, colorless women to health, strength and vigor.

Hamilton's Kidney Remedy, the great medicine for catarrh of the kidneys, and bladder and all kidney troubles.

Hamilton's Cucumber Cordial that extraordinary remedy for dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation, sour stomach, etc.

Hamilton's Cream Hair Balsam, the great restorer of faded, gray or discolored hair to its original color, makes the hair grow, stops its falling out, prevents dandruff, cures scalp diseases.

Our popular druggist, Mr. J. S. Banker, keeps them always on hand. The demand for the Hamilton medicines is spreading rapidly in all sections of the country. In every case where a bottle fails to give satisfaction you have only to write the fact to him, and quick as a wink your money is refunded you.

Results of Jubilee Week.

The exact sum of money recorded in the Business Men's association as spent by visitors during jubilee week in Ithaca has been given out as $5,790. It is estimated that much more than this amount was actually spent in the city although no report of the purchases were made. It is t ought that the visitors were careless in reporting purchases over the amount of $10, the sum required to be spent in order to reap the benefits of the inducements offered. The merchants were assessed a percentage of their sales in order to defray the expenses of the movement.

A. J. Snell wanted to attend a party, but was afraid to do so on account of pains in his stomach, which he feared would grow worse. He says, "I was telling my troubles to a lady friend, who said: 'Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera, and Diarrhœa Remedy will put you in condition for the party.' I bought a bottle, and take pleasure in stating that two doses cured me and enabled me to have a good time at the party." Mr. Snell is a resident ot Summerhill, N. Y. This remedy is for sale by J. S. Banker.

AUBURN.

AUBURN, Dec. 23—The Board of Supervisors acted wisely in rejecting the proposition to spend $15,000 to erect a soldier's monument in Auburn. The towns of Genoa and Moravia both have handsome soldiers' monuments, but those towns paid for them and did not ask assistance from other towns in the county, and if the city of Auburn desires a monument, she should foot the bills and not ask the taxpayers of the county to do it for her. The opposition to the monument movement was led by Supervisors Murdock and Dudley both old soldiers

Richard C. S. Drummond, who received the most votes for City Judge at the recent election, has been invited to deliver an address at a banquet of graduates of Hamilton college, to be held soon at the Hotel Manhattan, in New York.

Prison Keeper George W. Allen, who was suspended from duty at the time that "Pewee" Johnson, the Buffalo negro, attempted to stow himself away in one of the shops, has been restored to his place after an enforced idleness of thirty days

A deed was filed in the county clerk's office this morning whereby John O'Leary and Elizabeth O'Leary transfer to the Lehigh & New York Railroad company for $165 a strip of land on the north side of Clark street on which the Lehigh already has a switch.

Frank D. Wright and Frank E. Cady, of the firm of Wright, Cady & Wright, attorneys for the petitioners, and Frank M. Leary, attorney for the respondent, appeared before Justice Dunwell in Lyons Saturday for the purpose of arguing the petitioner's motion for a peremptory writ of mandamus, restraining the hotel keepers of the town of Fleming from trafficking in liquor. The argument was devoted to the France case and the time from 10 o'clock in the morning until 5 o'clock in the afternoon in reading over the advice as taken before Benjamin C. Mead as referee and submitted to the court. At its conclusion the court asked Mr. Leary what his defense was and the latter stated that as yet he had made none and asked if it wouldn't be possible to again go before the referee in order that he might submit his side of the case. The court thought the matter had been running long enough, since last July, and he announced that he would grant the writ in the France case but the question of costs has not yet been determined. The matter will be resumed at Lyons next Saturday when the other cases will be taken up.

The new soap industry that is about to begin operations in this city assumed definite shape Monday morning when articles of incorporation were filed in the county clerk's office. The name of the concern is the Auburn Soap & Chemical company and it is formed for the purpose of manufacturing soap, perfumes, toilet articles, flavoring extracts, polishing materials, chemicals, etc. Its capital stock is $10,000, 100 shares of $100 each. Its duration is to be perpetual and the three directors with their holdings are as follows: Frank B Townsend, 20 shares; Alfred J. Brinkerhoff, 15 shares; Walter D. Brinkerhoff, three shares.

A Million Voices

Could hardly express the thanks of Homer Hall of West Point, Ia. Listen why: A severe cold had settled on his lungs, causing a most obstinate cough. Several physicians said he had consumption, but could not help him. When all thought he was doomed he began to use Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and writes: "It completely cured me and saved my life. I now weigh 227 lbs." It's positively guaranteed for Coughs, Colds and Lung troubles. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial bottles free at J. S. Banker's.

Don't forget the old man with the fish on his back.

For nearly thirty years he has been traveling around the world, and is still traveling, bringing health and comfort wherever he goes.

To the consumptive he brings the strength and flesh he so much needs.

To all weak and sickly children he gives rich and strengthening food.

To thin and pale persons he gives new firm flesh and rich red blood.

Children who first saw the old man with the fish are now grown up and have children of their own.

He stands for Scott's Emulsion of pure cod liver oil—a delightful food and a natural tonic for children, for old folks and for all who need flesh and strength.

Rev. Irl Hicks 1903 Almanac.

To say that this splendid work of science and art is finer and better than ever, is stating it mildly. The demand for it is far beyond all previous years. To say that such results reaching through thirty years, are not based upon sound sense and usefulness, is an insult to the intelligence of the millions. Prof. Hicks, through this great Almanac, and his famous family and scientific journal, Word and Works, is doing a work for the whole people not approached by any other man or publication. A fair test will prove this to any reasonable person. Added to the most luminous course in astronomy for 1903, forecasts of storms and weather are given as never before, for every day in the year, all charmingly illustrated with nearly two hundred engravings. The price of single Almanac, including postage and mailing, is 30 cents. Word and Works with the Almanac is $1.00 a year Write to Word and Works Publishing Co., 2201 Locust St., St. Louis, Mo., and prove to yourself their great value.

The Homestead Sanitarium, Wayland, N. Y., is built on the cottage plan. You can have one room or a whole cottage to yourself. Terms moderate.

A Bargain in Kisses

By TOM MASSON.

THERE was a flutter of expectancy as the minister's daughter came into the little back meeting room off the main floor of the church, where members of the committee, the majority of them young and pretty, stood talking at once.

Something was going on. In through the half open door could be heard a buzz of people, and an expert in such matters, if he passed by and even casually looked within, would have known that a church fair was in progress.

It was, indeed, the annual church fair, held under the auspices of the Young Women's Guild, and this year the minister's daughter was in charge of the proceedings. Her father, away on his vacation, had called her into his study before his departure and appealed to her very strongly to "do her share." And so she had suddenly announced her determination to take an active part, much to the surprise of everyone, as up to the present time she had been more interested in playing golf than in spiritual matters, and had even been called a "regular tomboy" by certain recalcitrant beings in old-fashioned bonnets.

"She will make a failure of it!" announced Mrs. Mintby, the official critic of the minister's family. "That girl is too hairbrained, and besides, what does she know about such matters? She wouldn't be seen in church half the time if common decency didn't make her go."

"That's so," assented Mrs. Dickster. "All she cares about are the men and outdoor sports, anyhow."

And now, when the fair was half over, it began to seem as if these predictions were to be fulfilled. The booths combined had taken in barely fifty dollars, and to send these poor children away for the summer—for the minister's daughter, with a fine scorn of foreign missions, had insisted that charity should begin at home—seemed a desperate chance, and at this particular moment it seemed as if nothing short of a miracle would swell the receipts for the next two hours.

The minister's daughter stepped to the table where the chairman usually presided. There was a sudden hush. She looked over her auditors a moment with a calm, penetrating gaze.

"Girls," she said, "we have got to be kissed!"

A chorus of "O's" and feminine screams and protests was her answer.

"There is no help for it," she continued. "We must raise a lot of money before this night is over. Now my plan is this: We will all stand up and be kissed at auction, one at a time, to the highest bidder. Now, girls, don't go back on me. Remember, it's in a good cause. How many can I count on?"

There was a pause; a hand was raised—another, and then another.

In ten minutes more eight exceedingly pretty girls, headed by one who was prettier than all of them, filed into the main room and grouped themselves about a chair. One of them stood up in the chair, to which this legend was attached:

THIS YOUNG LADY WILL BE KISSED AT AUCTION. HOW MUCH WILL YOU GIVE?

It would probably be difficult, not to say impossible, to explain why this startling and sensational news should spread so rapidly through a whole parish. But that such was the case is a stern fact. Young men, idling away their time at the club, knew it in 15 minutes, and started in a body for the scene of the auction. Other young men, who had not been to church for years, hurried from their telephones into their best clothes with all the haste demanded of the volunteer fire department. It spread even as far as Mike Dady's gambling establishment, and caused that astute individual to prick up his ears in an unusual degree for one inured to that sort of stoicism that the roulette table fosters. And so there was a kissing game going on at the church, led by the minister's daughter herself. Here was a fine chance to get even. Mike had had to close up his place once for several weeks because of a scathing sermon preached by this same clergyman, and the remembrance of it still rankled.

"Here, boy," he said to a tall, fresh-looking youth of 17, handing him a roll of bills, "you go over to the church fair, and if the sky pilot's daughter is going to be paid for a sweet kiss, push up in front and bid up. Don't let anyone else get it, to the limit of your wad—understand? I'll be there in time."

The boy, fresh and fair and innocent looking—as the run of boys in "gilded hells" are apt to be—was off in a trice, and in ten minutes more had added his individual unit to the circle around the main center of osculatory interest.

It is highly probable that if such a really scandalous proceeding as this auction had been premeditated and advertised beforehand it would have been promptly squashed by the pillars of the church. But the suddenness of it took the critics off their feet, and it was well in hand and "going on" before anyone had time to take breath.

The minister's daughter was the auctioneer. A bamboo cane, with a strip of red bunting on it, was her wand of service. Tall and stately and beautiful, her eyes flashing with the fun, she stood by the chair and waved her flag.

"Now, ladies and gentlemen," she cried, "here is Miss Kitty Jones. How much am I offered for a sweet kiss? What! Only two dollars? For shame! Do you appreciate what you are getting? Five, did you say? Now make it six. Six it is. Seven from the gentleman on the right. Seven, seven, seven—eight, eight—will some one make it nine? That's right. You'll never regret it. Nine, nine. Now ten. That's better. Ten it is. Come, gentlemen, bid up."

The excitement ran high. Deacon Bradbury Simpkins, forgetting what fate awaited him at home, bid ten dollars on Susie Perkins, whom his good wife had once designated as "sassy." Rudd Castleton, the best golf player in town, was a great help in "bidding up," and so also were Jack Clubberly and Billy Sparks.

The ninth and last girl was none other than the minister's daughter herself. On the table by her side lay a collection box, holding over $200, the proceeds of this unusual traffic. Perhaps the consciousness that she had succeeded, that those poor little "tots" would get their outing, was enough to make her oblivious of herself.

At any rate, she was calm and beautifully collected as she stepped on the chair, disdaining the helping hand that a spectator held out to her.

"Ladies and gentlemen," she said, "with your kind permission I will be my own auctioneer, and I will spare you the usual compliments. I am here to raise all the money I can for the poor children, and I am selling a kiss to the highest bidder. How much am I offered?"

"Twenty-five dollars."

"The first bid, ladies and gentlemen, is twenty-five dollars. Who will make it thirty? Thirty it is, thirty, thirty—thirty-five, thirty-five. Is thirty-five the highest bid?"

The tall innocent youth now stepped to the front. It is but justice to the boys from the club to say they did not recognize him.

"I'll make it 40," he said.

The auctioneer was unmoved.

"I'm offered $40," she said. "Gentlemen, bid up. Forty, 40, 40—going at 40—going, going, gone. Young man, the kiss is yours at $40."

There was a slight pause, a flutter of interest. This nice-looking, gentlemanly appearing boy, with $40 to bid for a single kiss—who was he? At any rate, it didn't matter much, he was only a boy.

"What a relief," whispered one of the committee, "to think her reputation has been saved by a young thing like that. Why, it doesn't mean anything to be kissed by him. An act of Providence, I verily believe!"

Almost as if in reply the boy turned half around, as the figure of Mike Dady slowly forced its way through the circle.

"I was bidding for some one else," said the boy, holding out the money.

"Yes," said Mike, his cool, insolent eye sweeping the crowd. "He was bidding for me. He was my—what do you call it?—proxy. I'll take the kiss, if you please."

A dead silence—an awful pause.

For the first time that evening a flush overspread the face of the minister's daughter—a flush that made its way from her firmly rounded throat up over her cheeks to the line of fair hair on her forehead.

She looked around the crowd almost appealingly. Was there no one to help her in this dilemma? Suddenly her eye lighted on a figure that stood half concealed from view—a short, square figure—and there came to her voice a ring of triumph.

"You shall be paid," she said. "The money, please."

It was handed to her, and she put the bills in the box.

Then she turned to the figure she had seen—the old family colored cook, black as the ace of spades, who had come to witness "de proceedin's." "Come here, mammy," she whispered, and drawing her close and putting her arms around her, she kissed the black face a resounding smack.

Then she turned to the gambler.

"And here," she said, "is my proxy. Take your pay, sir!"—Brandur Magazine.

Profits of Rural Trolley Roads.

Trolley roads are multiplying rapidly in Pennsylvania as well as in New York, but it is remarked in the former state that but few of them are run at a profit. On this point the Pittsburg Times says: "In the smaller places and in the case of the interurban lines the benefits to the people who are served by the roads are greater than to the stockholders. At the same time the roads everywhere have become practically indispensable. The trolley is the poor man's vehicle; it has enabled him to place his home to suit his desires rather than his needs, and in that way he has become largely independent of locality. While the figures are not particularly stimulating to new rural trolley ventures, there is no doubt that extensions through the country districts will continue to multiply." Judging by their passenger and freight traffic, the rural trolley roads in this part of New York state must be doing a paying business. If this were not the case, capitalists would not put their money into them. The roads have undoubtedly come to be regarded by the people as indispensable, but the people would have to do without them if their patronage was too small to offer temptations to investors and operating companies.

Fruit for a New Year's Dinner.

Fruit makes the best centerpiece for a New Year's dinner. Chrysanthemums are gone; roses are as inseparably associated with Christmas in the minds of most people as mistletoe and holly. Grapes, oranges, bananas and apples afford fine color contrasts and admit of countless graceful and artistic arrangements, particularly if a slender frond of fern or a few green leaves of any kind are added in the interest of even more perfect harmony. A glass bowl or dish, a plate of fine china, or best of all, one of the new burned wood and colored fruit bowls, will serve as a dainty receptacle. A linen centerpiece embroidered in flowers will furnish forth a note of bright color. If that is used simple doilies of plain white will look best beneath the dishes of salted nuts and olives. The placing of doilies beneath the water glasses and so on is not to be recommended unless the table is large. Nothing robs a dinner table of dainty and distinguished appearance like an over-adorned or too crowded effect.—Conkey's Home Journal for January.

Driving Nails a Nerve Tonic.

It is an odd remedy for nervous prostration, yet it is almost a sure cure, so says a well known Southerner. Some time since a prominent business man in Boston, Mass., wrote Mr. John T. Patrick of Pinebluff, North Carolina, asking him if the climate of the Pine Woods where he resides and where so many Northern people go to recover health, was good for those suffering from sleeplessness and nervousness. Mr. Patrick wrote him "We have many persons coming down here who can hardly get an hour's sleep out of twenty-four, and they are not here a month before they can sleep eight hours during twenty-four. Dr. W. C. Wile, editor of the New England Medical Monthly of Danbury, Conn., has said that it is one of the finest places to sleep at he ever visited, and the doctor is up on nervous troubles. Dr. J. Warren Achorn, the prominent specialist of Boston, Mass., who has had great success in treating over-worked and tired-out business men, sends us a great many of his patients, and one of his prescriptions is addressed to us in which he directs us to put his patients to sawing boards and driving nails, and the results are wonderful. The working of the pine lumber is healthful, the exercise is beneficial and the man cannot think of himself as he drives nails. We have in this way aided Dr. Achorn in curing many of his patients. He has sent us men out of the stores, prominent editors, managers of factories and even presidents of railroads. We have filled his prescription by putting these men to work, and by their sleeping in the open air as much as possible, some in tents, others in little shanties and cottages they would hardly think of going into in the North to keep out of a shower of rain, they have gained appetite, health, strength and weight and it only takes a few days until a piece of Southern pork and corn bread tastes better to them than the best meal they can get in the Parker House in Boston, and if driving nails and sleeping in little shanties will bring tone, vigor and sleep to the overworked man, is it not better than any medical compound? At first the business man with his soft delicate hands hesitates to take hold, but after he has mashed his finger a few times and gets his hands as hard as a farmer's he begins to see himself in a mirror he wonders what has brought the contented, happy look to his face, and the answer flashes to his mind "Driving nails and living in a shanty."

The Locomotive's Growth.

In a December issue of the Scientific American which deals with "Transportation on Land and Sea," Mr. Herbert T. Walker gives some interesting "Notes on the History of the American Locomotive." After describing the early English locomotives, their use in the United States, and the conditions which resulted in the development of a distinctively American type of locomotive, Mr. Walker writes as follows on the growth and present efficiency of our locomotives:

"It is of interest thus to note the enormous growth of the locomotive engine, for by referring to the dimensions of Stephenson's 'Rocket,' built in 1829, we find that the tractive effort of that engine was about 785 pounds, and compared with one of the latest powerful freight engines (No. 940), built at the Baldwin Works for the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, not only Stephenson's locomotive, but all the others herein noticed are as pigmies to a giant, for '940' weighs 133½ tons; the diameter of the boiler is 6 feet 6¾ inches. The total heating surface is 5,390 square feet; grate area 58.5 square feet. Working pressure 225 pounds per square inch. The compound cylinders, four in number, are 19 inches and 32 inches diameter, with a common stroke of 32 inches. The drawbar pull is no less than 31 tons, sufficient to lift as a dead weight a passenger engine of thirty years ago.

"Since the days of Watt, the question of the economical use of steam has been one of the most important, and much has been done by expanding the steam in a plurality of cylinders; but in the case of the locomotive it is a problem of peculiar difficulty by reason of the small compass within which the extra parts must be inclosed. Within recent years, however, many well designed compound engines have been built.

"As in 1836 it was found necessary to build four-coupled engines for 'heavy' freight service, so about twenty years ago six-coupled engines for heavy passenger service came into the field, and it is noteworthy that some of the fastest speeds recorded have been attained by engines of this class. It may be said, by the way, that in the matter of speeds the progress has, comparatively speaking, not been very marked, for some of the first practical engines made spurts of a mile a minute, although the average passenger train speed about the year 1850 was only twenty miles an hour, and for freight trains but half that rate.

"At the present day, average express speeds range from forty-five to fifty miles an hour, and in order to maintain these speeds with the heavy modern passenger coaches some remarkably fine engines have been placed in service. The largest passenger locomotive in the world was built for the Chesapeake & Ohio railroad by the American Locomotive Company at their Schenectady works, and certainly does great credit to her designers. The cylinders are 22 inches diameter with a stroke of no less than 28 inches, so that with the 72-inch driving wheels and a steam pressure of 200 pounds on the square inch, the tractive power of this magnificent locomotive is 16 tons. The total heating surface is 3533.28 square feet, and the weight of the engine and tender in working trim is 154½ tons

"This class of engine is known as the 'Mountain' type, and is coming rapidly to the front for hauling the fastest trains over exceptionally heavy grades."

The Young Farmer's Opportunity.

At the age of twenty one many a farmer actual or prospective finds himself regretting those summers when he worked on the farm either by choice or of necessity instead of thinking of his schooling. He is not as ready with his pen as he would like. He cannot study with comfort and intelligence good articles on the use of commercial fertilizers, the compounding of feeding rations, and the managements of fruit trees. Is his case hopeless? Must he grope henceforth? Most emphatically not. There are two ways: He can become a member of the Cornell Reading-Course; or better still, he can go to the College of Agricultural at Ithaca and take a short course especially arranged and conducted for the benefit of men and women from the farm who cannot take longer courses of instruction This Winter Course in Agriculture commences January 2d, 1903. and continues for eleven weeks. There are no tuition fees and it is open to all who have a common school education and a good character. Full information and application blanks may be had by writing to the College of Agriculture, Ithaca, N. Y.

GENOA FULL ROLLER MILLS

... ANNOUNCEMENT ...

The heavy damage by water to the Genoa Full Roller Mills has been substantially repaired, and we are now ready to look after our share of the milling business. The machinery has been thoroughly overhauled, securing our patrons against all impurities or loss by leakage, and everything is in prime condition. Our experience of 25 years each in the business means that we understand the desires and demands of the public and are able to please one and all. We have resumed the manufacture of the famous Perfection Flour, and will have on hand all kinds of feed, corn meal, graham and buckwheat flour in season. We desire here to express our appreciation of the interest shown by all in the reopening of the mill, and expect by a business policy of honesty and promptness to merit a share of the public patronage.

MASTIN DEPARTMENT STORE

A HOLIDAY GREETING

to all and a merry Christmas to each and every reader of the TRIBUNE. Our buyer, Mr. Robert Mastin, has just returned from New York City after having purchased as fine a line of new and strictly up-to-date Holiday goods as were ever brougnt into Genoa. They are now arranged and ready for the inspection of an appreciative public. There's an endless variety of useful and ornamental articles which space prohibits mention, but we invite you to call and judge for yourselves of the truth of our statement. We would not forget to speak of our elegant line of Rogers triple silver plated ware which is so suitable for presents. We also have a fine line of new dress goods of every shade and color, shirt waist materials, corderoay drop cord velvet, children's toys, China ware in profusion. In short everything that goes to make out a complete line for a successful department store. Please do not forget that these goods are all new not shelf worn.

Respectfully yours,

H. P. Mastin, - - - Genoa, N. Y.

The Care of the Eye.

Many suffer from headache and nervousness that do not suspect the cause The nerves that control the eye have a direct connection with the most vital parts of the human system. If the strain on these nerves is allowed to continue they will soon become exhausted. Properly fitted glasses will relieve the strain and give the system a chance to build up.

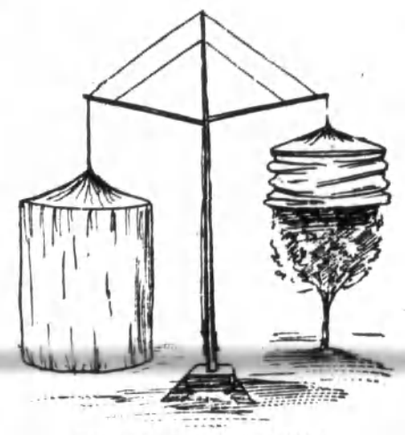
HORTICULTURE

ORCHARD FUMIGATION.

Device Recently Used for the San Jose Scale in Orchard Work in New York State.

The spreading branches were drawn in with a rope, permitting the tents, which are 12 feet in diameter, to drop over the trees. Two trees are fumigated at a time, the apparatus passing between the rows. The tents are hung from the gaffs, which are long enough to serve the purpose.

The tents are drawn up from the bottom and when telescoped are still further lifted to the height of the outer ends of the gaffs and in position to drop over the tree. The tents are then let down as far as they will settle. The smaller the tree the lower they will sink, and the less space will remain for the use of the gas. The surplus tent gathers on the ground.



FUMIGATING DEVICE.

Two men can easily handle the apparatus.

The tents are made of light sailcloth, oiled with two coats of boiled linseed oil and dried. They are 12 feet in diameter and 14 feet high. At the top of the tent is a three-quarter-inch gas pipe, to keep the tent expanded the full diameter at all times. At the bottom of the tent is a three-eighths-inch steel hoop for a like purpose. For each tent are four ropes running through a pulley block at the top and outside the tent. These ropes run through the top and down the inside of the tent at the four quarters, through rings to hold them in place, to the hoops at the bottom. This plan telescopes the tent when in use.

A single mast is mortised into a bed piece, firmly attached to a frame, sledlike in form, or it may be fixed to a wagon, and guyed with wire to the corners of the sled. These guy ropes are attached to the top of the mast and are tied to trees, two ahead and one behind.

Two gaffs are fastened to the mast and are each long enough to reach the center of the tents; pulleys are attached to the gaffs, and ropes are used for lifting the tents and placing them in position. The gaffs can be raised by a rope attached to the mast, thus enabling one to raise the tent in addition to the telescoping described.—Country Gentleman.

LOOK TO THE QUALITY.

When Buying Nursery Stock Be Careful to See That It Has Been Properly Raised.

It costs a great deal of money, a great deal of time and a great deal of experience to grow plants properly—and these are facts which more intelligent persons are beginning to realize. The prices of plants to-day have not been lowered by improved methods and better knowledge; instead, better plants are grown, both in kind and in condition, at greater expense to the producer and to the purchasers. Certain kinds of stock can be grown with the greatest ease and consequent cheapness, and unbelievers having this class in mind often fail to recognize quality. The Carolina poplar has been instrumental in deceiving the public as to the value of trees. Only a couple of years are required to rear a tree of respectable size for transplanting, and the cost is but a few cents. They can be grown on almost any ordinary nursery ground, and need little or no care. How different with an oak, or even a Norway maple, where five to ten years are inevitably spent in getting the seedling to a suitable selling size! And what of the labor in transplanting, pruning and strengthening? Is it possible to bring the three plants into competition except as regards quality and desirability? It is here that the nurseryman meets with discouragement, and he is tempted to sell cheaply and cut down his expenses correspondingly, to the detriment of his stock. Training, health, vigor and careful handling make a tree that gives satisfaction to the purchaser and make him ignore the extra expense, and this more generally recognized will bring more confidence between the nurseryman and his customers in their dealings.—Meehan's Monthly.

Oldest Hen in America.

The oldest hen in the United States is dead at the age of 14 years. This hen was the property of Aaron Brower, a prosperous agriculturist of South Plainfield. Mr. Brower says he is ready to stake his reputation that the hen was hatched in the spring of 1887. She was a Plymouth Rock, and long one of the best layers in Mr. Brower's collection. Of late years, however, she had not deposited any eggs, but was a persistent hatcher. It is estimated that the hen hatched out more than 30 broods of chickens.—Missouri Valley Farmer.

Keeping Regular Accounts.

Many farmers are just beginning to realize that their business, as well as any other, requires keeping books. When receipts and expenditures are not rigidly kept, it is impossible to tell whether one has gained or lost. One farmer writes that he has made more each year since he began to keep books. He paid more attention to each expenditure, whether of money or time, and he was enabled to tell just what each product of his farm had cost him.—Prairie Farmer.

COUNTRY ROADSIDES.

Keep Them Neat and Clean, Because It Pays to Be Tidy and Attractive Anywhere.

For the last 50 years every one who could afford to take a vacation has been going to Europe for it. Only in the last few seasons have Americans begun to discover that it is fashionable to stay in this country. Of course everybody knew long ago that this country had finer scenery, of any sort mentionable, than can be found in Europe, but what was lacking was the endorsement of fashion. Now we have got that. It is now perfectly proper for any one, no matter how rich he is, to spend his vacations in the "land of the free."

Other signs are not wanting to show the remarkable increase in outdoor life. The sales of automobiles indicates it, for one thing. The demand for good roads, also connected with bicycling and automobiling rather than with hauling hay to market, testifies to the fact that people are wanting to get out into the country to see things. All these movements, though they get their initiative largely from the city people, are of such great importance to rural interests, and touch the farm life in so many ways, that no thoughtful farmer can disregard them.

The condition of the country roads and roadsides not merely influences, but very largely determines, the course of vacation travel; and, to a certain extent, the courses of business traffic. A very hurried inquiry after real estate in any neighborhood will show how matters stand. On a certain road where travel is good, and where both the roadbed and the roadside are kept up as they ought to be, farms will sell for 25 to 50 per cent. more than on another street a mile away where the road is a succession of ruts and mud-holes and the roadside a panorama of dilapidated outbuildings, tin-can dumps and poison ivy tangles.

So much has been said about good roads that it is not worth while to add anything to that discussion now, but attention should not be too much diverted from the protection, preservation and improvement of the roadsides. The road master or commissioner in a great many cases can do a great deal at little or no expense to make the roadsides more agreeable, if only he is a man of taste and has his mind on the matter. Sign boards at the crossroads should be supplied everywhere, objectionable buildings can often be removed, attractive trees can be preserved, convenient watering troughs can be located, and dozens of other things done for the convenience and satisfaction of the public. The lesson which we are just beginning to learn is that such things pay. It pays to be clean and tidy anywhere, in public or in private.—F. A. Waugh, in Ohio Farmer.

We will give a hundred dollars for a case of liquor, morphine, opium or other drug habit that NO GOLD will not cure. Write in confidence to Sanitarium Annex, Wayland, N. Y.
