Death of George W. Sickles.

George W. Sickles died on July 14, 1904, at the Masonic Home in Utica, aged 87 years. He had always lived in Genoa and had a large acquaintance in this and surrounding towns. He was highly respected by all who knew him. In early life he followed the canal for several years, running boats from Buffalo to New York city and back. Then he was farmer, thresher and carpenter. In early life he married Adaline Devine of Genoa. One daughter was born to them. His wife died while the daughter was small. Later he married Louisa Haws of Genoa who survives him. Beside his wife and daughter, he leaves two grandchildren, Mrs. Lena Burlingham of Kelloggsville and Mrs. Frankie Shaw of North Lansing, three great-grandchildren, several nephews and nieces to respect his memory. He was kind in his family and an obliging neighbor. For some years ill health and old age incapacitated him for labor, and two years ago last spring he and his wife went to the Masonic Home where he died. His remains were brought to North Lansing for burial. The services were held on Sunday at the M. E. church, Rev. Mr. Long officiating. After the sermon the Masons took charge and held an impressive service at the grave, he having been a worthy member of the order since early life. A long procession of relatives and friends followed from the home of his granddaughter, Mrs. Shaw, to the church. Interment in North Lansing cemetery.

SUIT MUST MATCH THE DOG

New York Woman Goes Shopping and Uses Feathery Canine as a Sample.

"Have you something in brown to match this?

The clerk glanced up inquiringly at the tall woman who held out nothing but a Pomeranian dog, which she was placing upon the counter. He held out his hand politely and questioningly, says the New York Sun.

"This," explained the woman, patting the little feathery dog.

The man still held out his hand, a dazed look growing on his face.

"I want a walking suit to match my dog," the woman said.

The sample barked and called the clerk's attention to business.

"I am sure we can do it, madam," murmured the clerk, glancing over the golden-brown of the dog's coat. "He's just in the stylish color."

"I know and that's what put into my head the idea of having a suit to match him. A friend of mine has a black Pomeranian and she's got a black suit on purpose to wear with him. The effect is stunning, but I think mine will be more so. It is funny that his coat should be just the yellow brown that is the rage this spring."

To be sure that she was getting just the right shade, the material and the dog were carried to the door into the strong sunlight. A perfect match sent the woman with face wreathed with satisfaction into other departments with her precious sample tucked under her arm.

With a smile of accomplished purpose she left the shoe, hosiery and milliery department.

HAS SUED A PRESIDENT.

Pawanee County, Kansas, Man Once Brought Suit for $400 Against Grover Cleveland.

Pawnee county claims to be the residence of the only living man who sued a president of the United States. His name is G. S. Van Eman and he lives at Jennings. Van used to run a sheep ranch up in Lyon county, Kan., and was getting along all right until Grover Cleveland was elected president and the edict went forth that wool was to be put on the free list. Van had about consummated a sale, but claims the fear of tariff changes forced the price of sheep down several points. Furthermore, his regard for his sheep and country was so high that he was ashamed to look a sheep in the face under the conditions that Cleveland forced upon them, so during the reign of Grover he made a practice of beginning at the rear end of a sheep to shear it. This greatly humiliated him and caused him to lose prestige with his hired hands and merinos.

Feeling intensely aggrieved and materially damaged, he sued Grover Cleveland, president of the United States, getting service by publication, and obtained a judgment for $400. Of course, it was never collected, for Grover never got in reach of an execution. But Van claims he felt better, though the debt remains unpaid.

BOOK VANDALS ARE ELUSIVE

Author of Mutilation of Library Volumes Is Very Rarely Discovered.

In the many cases of mutilation of library books only a small percentage is traced to the culprit, declares the New York Herald. There is, of course, a record which enables the attendants to tell who had the book on certain dates, but it is almost impossible to find out just when the mischief was done. There is a clause in the rules and regulations requesting all borrowers to report to the librarian at once any mutilation which a book may have previously suffered, but through the usual carelessness that characterizes the average easy-going New Yorker the discoverer of the vandalism fails to report it, hence when the attention of the attendants is finally drawn to it the damage may be several weeks old.

Illustrations are the particular prey of the library sharks, especially those that appear in the magazines that run to colored pictures. In many cases, too, several pages of the text are abstracted for good measure.

HER FACE STOPPED TRAFFIC

Remark Directed at "Girl Just Ahead" Is Overheard, But Speaker Escapes Scoring.

"There's a girl who ought to be sued for damages by the Union Traction company! Her face stops traffic every time she looks toward the car lines."

"Which girl?"

"The one just ahead of us."

The speakers were two young Chicago men and the "girl just ahead" chanced to overhear the remark. Her eyes blazing with anger, she turned upon her critic and demanded:

"What do you mean by saying my face would stop a trolley car?"

"Pardon me, my dear young lady," quickly responded the offender. "You're mistaken as to what I said. I said your face stops traffic every time you look toward the car lines. Well, that's true. One sight of your pretty face makes the motorman forget his business, and he instinctively turns off the power."

A beatific smile illumined her face, and the incident was closed.

Too Many Smart Men.

Greece is overrun by well-educated men who do not know how to earn a living. The country swarms with doctors who have no patients and lawyers who have no briefs, while laborers to till the soil are at a premium.

The Kawartha Lakes.

The region known as the "Kawartha Lakes" situated about 40 miles to the north of Lake Ontario combines the wildest primeval granite, mountain and forest scenery with lovely grassy, shrub and vine-clad shores. Throughout the chain the tourist and sportsman are at no point remote from busy town or village with excellent transportation service, and yet in comparative seclusion. Canoe and camping parties find here their beau ideal of summer outing. Handsomely illustrated descriptive matter sent free on application to Robert Bushby, Traveling Passenger Agent, Grand Trunk Ry. System, Cortland, N. Y.

CATS AND CANNONADING.

Curious Effect of Port Arthur Bombardment on Felines Is Described by Witness.

A lady who was in Port Arthur during the bombardment by Admiral Togo's fleet has described the curious effect produced on cats by the cannonade. "I was at my window during each bombardment," she relates, "but only through the day, because at night I did not dare to stir out of bed. In front of me there was a little roof on which five or six cats of the neighborhood collected. Each time there was a bombardment the cats duly arrived, and, having observed them, I on the second occasion proceeded to watch them. With my family we passed the hours looking at them. At each gunshot the cats arched their backs and stiffened their legs and seemed both terrified and furious. Then when a hissing shell arrived it gave the signal for a frightful battle. They jumped at each other, raging like tigers, and seemed to hold each other responsible for what was taking place. The effect was so comical that we could not help laughing, although the occasion did not inspire gayety. After having fought, the cats retired for awhile, as though bewildered, but as soon as the bombardment began again they went through the same business. Each time it was always the same."

QUEER TASTES OF WOMEN.

Powdered Sugar, Olive Oil and Mint Sauce on Little Neck Clams One of Their Whims.

"The new waiter came to me looking scared," said the head waiter in a Chicago restaurant where many working girls take their luncheon. "I got him from a downtown place where men are served exclusively. The whims of women privileged to order their own meals frightened him.

"'That girl wants powdered sugar with an order of little necks,' he said, as though he expected me to fall at the news.

"'Give it to her,' I said, 'and give her plenty of it.'

"I have seen women who think steak and onions grossly unhealthy eat raw clams with sugar and olive oil. I have seen them use Worcestershire sauce, tomato ketchup, and sugar as a condiment. A pinch of lemon and a dash of tabasco seems absurd to them. Olive oil is becoming more of a fad all the time in serving both oysters and clams.

"But I was nearly bowled out myself the other day when I saw a young woman who had ordered little neck clams, with a follow of spring lamb and mint sauce, sprinkle her clams with the mint sauce."

TEXAS AND HER VAST AREA

If Populated as Densely as New York She Would Have 50,000,000 Inhabitants.

Some idea of the state of Texas may be formed with the aid of a few statistics from the Louisville Courier-Journal. Its extreme length is 620 and its breadth 765 miles, comprising an area of 265,780 square miles. It has 243 counties, 19,500,000 acres of improved farming land and farm property to the value of $962,000,000. The number of its farms is 352,100.

Its population as shown by the last census was 3,048,710, being in point of numbers the sixth state in the union. Those which exceed it are New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Mississippi and Illinois, whose aggregate population is 23,656,769. Yet their total area is only 262,010 square miles. This is less by 3,770 miles than Texas, which would not be equalized were Connecticut and Rhode Island thrown in. If the population of Texas were as great to the square mile as New York's it would be 49,598,230, or nearly twice that of the five states mentioned.

WIGWAG STOCK QUOTATIONS

Fluctuations in Cereal Prices Made Known by System of Signals in Japan.

"Wireless telegraphy is nothing new to the Japanese," said City Clerk Connelly, of Newark, N. J., to a New York Sun reporter. "They have used it, or something that answers the same purpose, for years."

Mr. Connelly was consul to Osaka and Hiogo for three years, and he speaks with admiration of their cleverness.

"I read the other day," he remarked, "that Japan was up to if not ahead of the world in developing the new system of wireless telegraphy, and I can well understand it. For I don't know how long they have had a system of sending stock fluctuations up and down the entire empire.

"They keep posted from one end of Japan to the other on the slightest movement in the cereal market, during business hours, and they send the messages from the mountain and hill tops.

"They use flags mostly, but part of the way I think they have men to make gestures from one point to another. No one knows just how they do it, or at least a very few, and every time they think outsiders have mastered their code they change the whole system.

"They keep the country posted on every fluctuation in the grain market down to the fraction of a cent."

The inference is that the Russians could not possibly make a demonstration of any sort on the Japanese coast without all the particulars becoming known, almost on the instant, in Tokio no matter how isolated the spot might be upon which the Russians made their attack.

BROWN EYES IN ECLIPSE.

Chicago Artist Declares That Prevailing Color in Dress Goods Makes Unhappy Contrast.

"There is many a pitfall for the complexion in the fashionable brown," says a Chicago artist, according to the Tribune. "As a rule, it intensifies the color of the eyes to match them or wear a deeper shade of the same color. Especially is this true of blue, but in brown it does not always have a happy effect. For instance, the brown eyes that are accompanied by hair that is two or three shades darker, or almost black, are not improved by any of the fashionable reddish or golden browns.

"Instead, these shades clash with a tinge of purple that is always lurking around the eyes and hair in this combination, and the result is a spotted effect. The only brown possible to this complexion is a dark seal that renders it opaque. The woman with hair of a little brighter shade, however, has usually a tinge of red in her cheeks, which is brought out by a brown of a warm reddish shade.

"The Titian haired woman with eyes a shade or two darker may also wear the shades that match either eyes or hair, because her color scheme is pure. Even an occasional freckle on her face shows that the pigment is all upon the same order."

RAREST PLANT ON EARTH.

At One Time But a Single Specimen of the Gordonia Was in Existence.

In speaking of remarkable shrubs we must not forget gordonia, which at one time was probably the rarest wild plant in the world, there being but one specimen in existence. Last autumn, while visiting the Bartram gardens near Philadelphia, says a writer in Woman's Home Companion, I inquired about this shrub, which had been planted there after its discovery in Georgia in 1790. I learned that this original gordonia had died not long ago, but it is pleasing to know that it now has hundreds of descendants scattered over the country. Unless this specimen was a hybrid it must have been the last of its race, and in either case it was discovered only just in time to prevent its total extinction. The foliage of the plant is bright shining green, turning crimson in the fall, and the large blossoms are pure white and very fragrant. The fact that it blooms during September and October, after most of the other shrubs have flowered, gives it a special value.

Under Five Monarchs.

There resides at Folkestone a man named George Keel, who in December next will reach the age of 104 years. He was born at Manton, a village near Marlborough, in Wiltshire, and up to a few years ago followed the calling of a shepherd. He still earns a trifle by attending gardens in Folkestone. Mr. Keel is a good walker. He reads without glasses, but is very deaf. As a non-smoker he declares that those who use tobacco are not emant for the kingdom of Heaven. He uses alcoholic stimulants very sparingly. He is a favorite with the clergy of St. Saviour's church, where he is a regular worshiper. His wife died when she was nearly 90. The centenarian has lived under five sovereigns and well remembers the coronation of George IV.

New Testament Reading.

"A great many people are under the impression that it takes a long while to read the New Testament," remarked a Fulton preacher the other day to a Kansas City Journal reporter, "but as a matter of fact it only requires 60 hours for the average reader to read the entire book, or, in other words, if a man were to read an hour each day he would finish the book inside of two months. I told this to a business man once, and he did not believe me. Thinking it would be a good plan to get him to read it, I advised him to try it, and the result was that he reported that he had read everything in it within 40 hours."

TITLES OF DOUBTFUL ORIGIN

Many of Those in Use in England Would Be Shaken by Close Scrutiny.

Continental titles save of the highest sort have been viewed with suspicion in this country, according to the Springfield, Mass., Republican, but those of England have been accepted with almost as implicit faith as Bank of England notes inspire. Yet the herald's college lately made the remarkable assertion that many persons are using bogus titles in Engand and that others are using titles to which they have not established their claim and probably could not bring any satisfactory proofs. And the editor of Dod's Peerage admits that there are between 56 and 60 baronesess whose claims would not bear too close scrutiny.

For example, an ambitious retired business man named Smith may find in some secluded part of the country some lands formerly owned by some extinct family of Smiths who had possessed a title. He buys the property, quietly claims descent and coolly assumes the title. In London such a course would probably be exposed, but in the country people are less suspicious. Nor is such imposture, it seems, contrary to English law. It appears also that many of the titles which enjoy long standing were assumed in some such way, perhaps centuries ago, and owe whatever validity they have to long use. A general scrutiny of English titles might be a very painful thing.

SAYS JAPS ARE SCORNFUL.

Writer Claims That Mikado's Subjects Believe Themselves the Teachers of Mankind.

A realization that Japan believes itself to be the twentieth century teacher of mankind may prepare the west to understand why the mikado's subjects, despite their reassuring smiles ceremonial phrases and prostrations, are inspired by a pride which in reality scorns even a comparison with races of the west, writes Harold Bolce, in Booklovers Magazine. It is extremely difficult for people who have not entered into commercial relations with Japan to understand this uncompromising conviction of superiority which Asiatics, and particularly the Japanese, entertain. The people of Japan point out that the Jew, as the chosen of God, had his day. The Anglo-Saxon—the "blonde beast" of modern conquest—has been having his unbridled career of dominion. It is now the turn of the finer-grained oriental, who having developed an enlightened cosmopolitanism purged of every taint of provincial prejudice, and owing its inspiration to a mikado who traces his lineage to a god, is to march forth with a message not only to the eastern continent, but to all mankind.

DEATH WATCH OVER SEWER

Man at Mouth of Underground Tunnel Is Mistaken for an Idle Workman.

"What are you doing sitting idling while your fellows do all the work?" said the lawyer from the Stock Exchange building to the underground cable workman, according to the Chicago Record-Herald. The electrician was sitting on a tool box beside a manhole at Washington and LaSalle streets when the lawyer interrupted him. He looked up, and then with a faint smile said:

"I am the death watch."

"Explain yourself. I do not understand you."

"Well, those men in the hole are constantly in danger of suffocation from sewer gas. If I were in the hole I would run the same chance as they do. For their safety I sit here in open air. I am not in range of the gases. If one of them is overcome I get busy, haul him into open air and call a doctor. See?"

The lawyer "saw" and went about his business admitting that there were tricks in all trades, and that this was one of the dangers which beset conduit men that he had never thought of.

IRRIGATE FROM ICE SUPPLY.

Montana People Freeze Water to Be Used During the Summer Months.

In Montana the experiment has been tried of freezing water to be used for irrigation. As soon as the weather becomes such as to melt the ice it is fit for the operations requiring the water.

The plan, which so far is in the nature of an experiment, consists in making a series of shallow basins on the slope of a hill in such locations that, when water is plentiful, they may be filled, each of those below the highest receiving successively the overflow from the one above it.

Once frozen, the ice in these shallow reservoirs is there until the thaw sets in, when it melts so slowly as to keep up a supply of moisture sufficient for the germination and growth of early crops. This unique method has been tried so far only in the vicinity of Dillon but it appears to be successful and is to be given a trial in several other favorable localities.

Ashamed of Hairless Horse.

A farmer near Jackson raised a colt that was as bare of hair as a Mexican dog. The parents of the freak were of the ordinary covered kind, and no theory is advanced as to the cause of the offspring's ridiculous nudity. The animal grew to horsehood, but seemed so "sort of repulsive like" that the owner was ashamed to drive him to town and kept the hairless monster at work on the farm. A Jackson man heard of the horse and for $40 became his owner, and now has an offer of $500 for him, a sum which he has refused on the ground that the freak is worth much more.

In After Years.

Just 30 years ago to-day
She was a leading lady.
But time somehow gets away
And now she's a soubrette gay
Of sweet 16—maybe.
—Cincinnati Enquirer.

WICKED MAN.

"Yes, my poor sister writes that she is unhappily married. She says she will never trust another man."

"But what in the world is wrong?"

"She says she married Harold to reform him, and finds that he has deceived her utterly—that he only ate five cloves to lead her on, and that he only knows two pages of Hoyle when it comes to cardplaying."—Chicago Tribune.

A FITTING TRIBUTE.

A Citizen of Harford, Cortland Co., Pays a Well-Earned Tribute.

The following public statement of Mrs Diantha Allen, wife of Lieutenant Allen, 18th Pennsylvania, Co. D, adds one more emphatic endorsement of merit to the scores that have appeared before:

MR. H. W. BABCOCK, Auburn, N. Y.,

Dear Sir:—I think duty requires me to let you see what Babcock's Rheumatism Cure has done for me. I have been troubled for over two years with muscular rheumatism and a very severe heart trouble. During that time I was as helpless as a child. I saw your advertisement in the paper, and although my age is against me, as I am 74 years old, I determined to give it a trial. While I was using my second bottle I could see my rheumatism was disappearing and my heart trouble was greatly improved. I can walk now and do my own work, while before I had to be lifted from my chair and steadied if moved at all. Your medicine has certainly worked wonders with me. You may use this letter in any way you see fit, for I feel it my duty to God and to let my fellow sufferers know what this medicine has done for me. Yours truly,

A Model Railway.

A recent trip of one of our representatives brought "Truth" in contact, among other things, with the Grand Trunk Railway and its incomparable dining service. A brighter, cleaner, more efficient plan of eating while journeying, does not exist on any railway anywhere, and "Truth" has travelled on most of the leading lines of the world, and is therefore in a position to know. The "Club" Breakfasts are an excellent feature, which appeals to many travellers. The attendants are courteous and obliging, and don't appear to be always looking for a "tip."

The fine, heavy double track of rails between Toronto and Niagara Falls makes it possible to run that distance without delays of any kind, and you are landed at your destination right on time to the minute.

The great improvements on the main line east, between Toronto and Montreal, have been very costly, and have in some cases meant the almost entire reconstruction of the road. The line has been straightened, the grades lessened, and "Truth" is told that very shortly a train will be put on between Toronto and Montreal that will make the distance in very much less time than even The International Limited does now.

"Truth" seldom travels on railway passes; the above statements can therefore be considered perfectly unbiased, and are made purely because of the excellent facilities afforded the general public, and because of the pride, "Truth" feels in one of our great national highways.

We bespeak great things for the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway on its completion.—Toronto Truth.

The Presidential Campaign.

The Presidential campaign may now be said to be fairly open, and preparations for a very lively and exciting time are under way. Probably no presidential election has been approached in many years with so much interest, when there was so little specific issue to fight over. The tariff has long since ceased to become a campaign document; "imperialism" has made itself so ridiculous that only a few non-partisans have the temerity to mention it, and the silver agitation of Mr. Bryan has been thrown over by the Democratic leaders as worse than useless. The policies of the two great parties alone remain as an issue.

The two nominees for President are the best men the two great parties could produce. The nomination of President Roosevelt was inevitable. With few exceptions it has been the rule of the Republican party to renominate Presidents. President Hayes did not want it, and Vice-President Arthur was opposed by the most powerful man at that time in the party, James G. Blaine. A failure to nominate Roosevelt at Chicago would have been a confession that the Republicans were not pleased with his record as President, or that they feared his record would defeat him. There are other reasons why he was nominated. His three years of service in the office have shown him to be admirably equipped intellectually and morally for the most exacting demands which the position can make on its encumbent in trying times. While he has been as conservative as McKinley or Harrison, he has also shown Grant's tenacity of purpose and Lincoln's resourcefulness and appreciation of the will of the people. He grasps situations immediately. He accomplishes results. Not only does he instantly take advantage of opportunity, but he also frequently creates opportunity. He is honest, democratic and fearless; merit and not race, color or religion is his measure among men. In a large part of the country, especially in the West, he is the most popular man of the day, and the only Republican, with the exception of the late Senator Hanna, whose name had been mentioned in connection with the nomination for President in 1904. His entire record as President has been an inspiration to the party. His national irrigation law of 1902, which promises to make the desert blossom, will add more to the West's population than any other act since the homestead law of 1862. When, in 1903, he halted England, Germany and Italy in their projected raid on Venezuela, he made the Monroe "hands-off-the-American continent" declaration of 1823 part of the law of nations. His withdrawal of the troops from Cuba in 1902 and his sponsorship for Panama in 1903 added two republics to the world's map and contributed vastly to the cause of human advancement. His treaty for the construction of the Panama Canal has transmuted a four-centuries-old dream of the nations into fact.

In the past three years Theodore Roosevelt has impressed his personality on universal history. In the four quarters of the globe he is recognized as a world force. He has made his country the most influential factor among the nations, and furnished his countrymen with a new reason for being proud of the name American. The American people have many and decisive reasons for honoring Roosevelt. His campaign in 1904 promises to be memorable in the enthusiasm which it will arouse and in the dimensions of the splendid victory which it assures to his party.

The Railroad Decision.

Of the recent decision of Justice Nash of the Monroe County Supreme Court, as mentioned in our last issue, further details are at hand. It appears that the New York, Auburn & Lansing R. R. Company petitioned the court for a commission to condemn a strip of land owned or controlled or occupied by the Lehigh Valley company, and the petition as presented treated the Lehigh company as the owner of the property sought to be condemned. A man named Wheaton and his wife, by reason of a tax sale title, were included as a party to the case. The attempt of the New York, Auburn & Lansing Co. was in direct opposition to the Railroad Law, which provides (Section 7, subdivision 4) as follows:

No railroad corporation shall have the right to acquire by condemnation any right or easement in or to any real property owned or occupied by any other railroad corporation, except the right to intersect or cross the tracks and lands owned or held for right of way by such other corporation, without appropriating or affecting any lands owned or held for depots or gravel beds.

From this it will be seen that the petitioners attempted to secure from the Lehigh company a long strip of land by condemnation, in direct opposition to the provisions of the law. How they expected Judge Nash to decide in any way other than he did is beyond our power of comprehension, but that is the way of doing things that has been pursued from the start. In his opinion Justice Nash quotes the above section of the Railroad Law, and adds: "Whatever may have been the rule prior to this provision of law, as to the right of one railroad corporation to take by condemnation proceedings the lands or property of another railroad corporation, the only right which now exists is to intersect or cross the tracks and lands owned or held for right of way by another railroad corporation. If the other defendants or either of them have any title in or to the lands or any part of them the petition is defective in not stating the particular right or interest; if they are mere lienors it should have been so stated. An order may be entered dismissing the petition with costs of motion, ten dollars to the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company and the same to the defendants Wheaton." The time when Mr. Craig, under the provisions of his contract (with the $200,000 bond detached) is bound to begin work has not yet arrived. The New York, Auburn & Lansing Co. may appeal the case if they desire. The arguments for other condemnation proceedings have not been made.

According to the daily newspapers, the Syracuse city electric railroad and a Utica and Rome electric road are now controlled by New York Central capitalists, and that the West Shore road and the Auburn road will each be double-tracked and electricity used as motive power. This being the case, the Central company would doubtless be pleased to have the Genoa road as a feeder and might perchance invest some capital with that idea in view. But the franchise for the Genoa road permits the New York, Auburn & Lansing Co. to construct a steam railroad from Auburn to North Lansing. Has the franchise been changed? If the Auburn road is double-tracked and operated by electricity for passenger service and the company sees fit to cut rates, it will be rather a tough proposition for Beebee's Auburn-Syracuse road, it would seem.

A Hero's Neglected Grave.

In the citizens' burial-ground at Winchester, Virginia, is the grave of one of the most distinguished officers of the Revolution, one of Washington's most trusted generals, Daniel Morgan, the noted commander of the Virginia Riflemen. Morgan, as is well known, was among the first to offer his services to the colonies, and at the head of his famous followers he joined the army, among the earliest recruits in the cause of American liberty.

He commanded a regiment in Arnold's expedition to Canada and endured with his hardy troops the perils and hardships of that strenuous campaign. At Saratoga, also, he rendered distinguished service at the head of his riflemen, and after the surrender General Burgoyne said to him: "Sir, you command the finest body of men in the world." General Morgan was the victor at Cowpens where he defeated the noted Tarleton, and this battle alone would have made him famous for all time.

After the Revolution Morgan returned to his beloved Winchester and dwelt there until his death in 1802.

His grave today is sadly neglected and nothing remains of the flat stone which originally covered it but a few scattering fragments, the rest having been carried away by vandal hands.

General Morgan for his distinguished services to his country deserves more than a neglected grave. He sleeps near thousands of those who wore the blue and the gray, and stately shafts commemorate their bravery, but over his lonely resting place lies but a broken stone, and a tattered flag flutters lonesomely in the wind.

In vain has Congress been appealed to, to appropriately mark the last resting place of this hero of the Revolution, and the state of Virginia whose sons he led in many a battle, has as yet refused to honor Morgan as he deserves.

It is sincerely to be hoped that the time is not far distant when a handsome shaft will rise, proclaiming to all lovers of their country that beneath it lies one of the tried and trusted companions of Washington; one of the heroes of that heroic age.—Four-Track News.

THE August Woman's Home Companion contains features for everybody. "The Wonders of Modern Bridge-Building" is a popular article that reads like fiction. Edward A. Steiner, Tolstoy's biographer, tells of a pilgrimage to his home. Rev. Francis E. Clark, D. D., writes of Christian Endeavor. There are short stories by a number of good writers. Henry T. Finck has a scientific discussion of the relative beauty of the sexes.

July Clearing Sale

OF

TODD, BLACKMER & CO.

After that the 1904 slaughter will be over, and those who failed to visit us will not cease to regret it for the next twelve months. Come and buy, and you will have no regret.

With the close of the first week of the sale, the special days ended, and now customers can shop all over the place at almost their own terms. The prices are the same as they were during the special sales, and besides these you will find many new bargains that have appeared since. In fact, new ones are cropping out every day. There are always many odds and ends and remnants that have to be closed out for little or nothing.

We couldn't possibly name all the lines of goods that are being sold out at absurdly low figures, but here are a few of them:

Notions, Laces, Trimmings, Gloves, Umbrellas and Parasols, Underwear of all sorts, Cloaks, Suits and Waists, Dress Goods, Silks, Velvets and Linings, Wash Goods, Linens, Muslins, Prints, White Goods, and Domestics of every kind.

Ask any of your neighbors who have been to the sale and see if they don't tell you it's worth a trip to Ithaca. If you happen to have been here yourself, then come again in the next few days and see the new bargains at —Along with the approach of caucus time comes a revival of all sorts of "railroad rumors." This was to be expected, because some of the politicians have been able to even carry towns on the strength of assisting our road. Scarcely a caucus has been held in a dozen years that was not preceded by a liberal railroad agitation, and so long as it proves effectual in nosing us around why shouldn't they continue to use the argument? A Genoa business man went to Auburn not long ago and was told that the Genoa road was certain to be built and work would be begun at once; that to help the thing along the New York Central was building a spur somewhere, and he could have seen the place if he had had the time to spare; also that the reason nothing had been done before was because the money was shy but now "the boys" have plenty of it. This and a lot more may be true, but there will probably be unbelievers as long as the world stands; there always were. Railroads are never built with the proceeds of subscription papers: no bonds, we are told, have been issued on the Genoa road, neither has the company asked for permission to issue bonds. The company has no franchise to construct an electric road and a steam road is of course out of the question. When there is anything definite to mention concerning this road THE TRIBUNE will be glad to print it, but we will not attempt to mislead the people for any reason whatever. If we have made a mis-statement here we want to be corrected.

HOW OIL PIPES ARE CLEANED

Conduicts on Becoming Incrusted Are Cleaned by a Revolving Knife Passing Through Them.

The long pipes that carry crude petroleum from the oil wells to the refineries many miles distant are cleaned by an ingenious device, says the Omaha Bee. As the oil flows through these underground conduits some of the paraffin in the fluid incrusts the sides of the pipe and proves a serious hindrance to the free passage of the current of oil. The device that is used to remedy this evil is a knife about two feet in length, with a sharp edge, constructed like the thread of a screw; indeed, the knife resembles a huge headless screw. It is, of course, slightly smaller than the pipe through which it is to pass.

When the thickness of the crust of paraffin renders a cleansing necessary this instrument is inserted in the pipe at the oil fields. The pressure of the stream of oil drives it forward, revolving rapidly as it hurries along, and scrapes the channels clean. It turns and twists and cleanses in this manner throughout its whole journey, and finally drops from the pipes in the midst of the vast stream of petroleum that empties into the receiving tanks. Its edges are duller than when it set out on its journey, but otherwise it is in perfect condition. It is at once shipped back to the oil wells, where it is sharpened and laid away until its services are again needed.

JAPAN'S LITERARY LIKINGS.

Subjects of the Mikado Show Decided Preference to the Writings of Carlyle.

The most widely known English writer in Japan is Carlyle. Next to him comes Macaulay, says the Dundee Advertiser. "Emerson is admired by some of the English students, and we see the influences of his writings among many Japanese journalists today." Mill and Herbert Spencer "have had a tremendous influence upon the thought of modern Japan." In poetry, Tennyson, Longfellow—his "Evangeline" is "heard from the lips of any little girl in a girl's seminary in Japan"—Wordsworth, Byron and Milton; and in fiction, Irving, Thackeray and Dickens are best known. "Othello," "Macbeth' 'and "The Merchant of Venice" have been translated by Prof. Yuzo Tsubouchi. Tolstoi has many worshippers, and no one who is not acquainted with German is regarded as a scholar. Rousseau's "Contrat Social" was the book which "first taught the Japanese the idea of civil right and liberty." A translation of it "has been circulated in every Japanese home." The writers of French fiction and drama, on the other hand, "do not seem to find many friends in Japan."

"Fossil Rain Drops."

In slabs of Triassic rock little depressions are often seen which have been called "fossil rain-drops," the idea being that they were formed by showers on muddy sea beaches, and preserved by being covered with a layer of mud at the next high tide. But a correspondent of Nature, in England, suggests in view of recent observations of his on a flood plain in the Dorn valley, that the supposed impressions of rain-drops may really be due to pittings formed by bubbles in a film of mud at the bottom of shallow water. He has watched the formation of many such pittings, and found that after the mud has dried they exactly resemble "fossil rain-drops."

Warning to Farmers.

What has been called the "ginseng craze" has been so prevalent among farmers in many districts of the United States that the department of agriculture has considered it expedient to sound a note of warning. Previous to 1902 China imported from this country only 172,000 pounds of ginseng in four years—a quantity which could be raised on a single farm of 75 acres. "Let ginseng alone. It is a delusion and a snare," is Secretary Wilson's advice to farmers.

THE

New York World

The Thrice-a-Week World long ago established itself in public favor, and it is now recognized as the strongest publication of its kind in the United States. Advertisers and publishers seeking clubbing combinations—and they know best—universally testify to this. It is widely circulated in every State and Territory of the Union, and even in remote South Africa and on the gold fields in the deserts of Australia. These are the things that tell.

This year we have the Presidential campaign, in which all Americans are deeply interested. Already the issues are being discussed and the two great parties are preparing for the first moves. You will not want to miss any details, and if you subscribe now your year's subscription will cover the campaign from beginning to end.

The Thrice-a-Week World is absolutely fair in its political news. Partisan bias is never allowed to affect its news columns, and Democrat and Republican alike can obtain in its pages truthful accounts of all the great political contests.

In addition to all the news, the Thrice-a-Week World furnishes the best serial fiction, elaborate market reports and other features of interest.

The Thrice-a-Week World's regular subscription price is only $1.00 per year, and this pays for 156 papers. We offer this unequalled newspaper and the GENOA TRIBUNE together one year for $1.65. The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2.00.

Printed Envelopes.

Every farmer and business man should use envelopes with his name printed on the corner. It insures the return of the letter if not delivered. One hundred fine envelopes printed for 75 cents. Order by mail or call at THE TRIBUNE office.

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea after Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by J. S. Banker, druggist, Genoa.

"The Highlands of Ontario For Your Holidays"

With the knowledge of what America has to offer to the summer tourist and the rest and health seeker, the thousands of summer travellers who spend their vacation in "The Highlands of Ontario," unhesitatingly pronounce the Muskoka Lakes region the ideal, the perfectly satisfying summer resort. Such an ideal is a combination of two features—primeval nature in a perfect bewilderment of beauty, charm and variety, along with the facilities for most of the modern necessaries and conveniences. In addition to these, the even temperature, the high altitude (1,000 feet above the sea), the health giving ozone from pine, hemlock and fir, and the dark, soft waters of innumerable lakes teeming with the gamiest of fresh water fish. What more has a weary, nerve-racked man or lover of nature to desire?

Handsome, illustrated, descriptive publications will be sent free on application to Robert Bushby, Traveling Passenger Agt., Grand Trunk Ry. System, Cortland, N. Y.

"The Mineral Bath City."

Twenty-one miles north of Detroit is situated Mount Clemens, a City known as "The Carlsbad of America," at which place thousands of people visit every year for treatment of different ailments; and the wonderful cures that are made with rheumatic sufferers are almost miraculous. Principal among the diseases cured are those that accrue from traces of uric acid in the blood. But the waters of the Springs are a panacea and cure for bilious and liver troubles, digestive troubles, nervous disorders, general debility, etc.

A handsome booklet giving all particulars with regard to Mount Clemens can be had by applying to Robert Bushby, Traveling Passenger Agent, Grand Trunk Ry. System, Cortland, N. Y.

Dr. Chiles, the well-known osteopath of Auburn, announces that he now has with him, Dr. Kathryne Severson, one of the first women graduates of the original school of osteopathy at Kirksville, Mo. Both of these doctors enjoyed exceptional advantages, being educated directly under the founder of the system. Osteopathy has within the past few years made wonderful strides in public favor. This progress is based solely on the remarkable results skilled osteopaths have been able to get in cases that have not yielded to other methods of treatment. Write Dr. Chiles, Metcalf Bldg, Auburn, about your case, or better call on him when in Auburn. Literature sent on application.

LEAD THEM HOME.

Lord, we can trust Thee for our holy dead;
They, underneath the shadow of Thy tomb,
Have entered into peace; with bended head
We thank Thee for their rest and for our lightened gloom.

But, Lord, our living—who on stormy seas
Of sin and sorrow still are tempest-tossed!
Our dead have reached their haven, but for these—
Teach us to trust Thee, Lord, for these our loved and lost!

For these we make our passion-prayer by night;
For these we cry to Thee throughout the day;
We see them not—oh, keep them in Thy sight!
From them and us be Thou not far away.

And if not home to us; yet lead them home
To where Thou standest at the Heavenly gate,
That so from Thee they shall not further roam;
And grant us patient hearts Thy gathering-time to wait.

THE ONLY BOND.

Love Is That Which Unites Us to Christ and He to Us.

Every life has its secret—that which accounts for its trend, its choices, its toils, its character, its achievements. It is worth while to ask ourselves: What is the secret of our own life? Of course, there are human loves and there are secondary motives, but what is the great central motive? Is there anything stronger than home and loved ones and earthly ambitions that impels us to toil, to struggle, to sacrifice? Paul gives the secret of his wonderful life in one sentence: "The love of Christ constraineth us." Commentators discuss the question whether this means Christ's love for us, or ours for Him. It must mean both.

Christ's love for us comes first. What the sun is to the trees and grasses and flowers in the springtime the love of Christ is to our love. "We love, because He first loved us."

Christ's love transforms. It repeats itself in our lives. A chaplain on the battlefield came to a man who was wounded, lying on the ground. "Would you like me to read you something from this book—the Bible?" he asked the soldier. "I'm so thirsty," replied the man, "I would rather have a drink of water." Quickly as he could the chaplain brought the water. Then the soldier asked: "Could you put something under my head?" The chaplain took off his light overcoat, rolled it and put it gently under the soldier's head for a pillow. "Now," said the soldier, "if I had something over me! I am very cold." There was only one thing the chaplain could do. He took off his own coat, and spread it over the soldier. The wounded man looked up into his face and said gratefully: "Thank you." Then he added feebly: "If there is anything in that book in your hand that makes a man do for another what you have done for me, please read it to me." Men are ready to hear us read the Book only when our lives interpret what the Book says.

Recently, says the Sunday School Times, a story appeared in one of the papers called "How a Man Coined His Heart." The man was a poor artist. There had been in his life a sad story of unrequited love. The world had not known anything of it. He had kept his secret. But there came a call for a piece of work—a calendar—and the artist put his life's story into it; the springtime, with its beauty; the summer, with its bloom; the autumn, with its decaying hope; the winter, with its dreary desolation. He coined his heart into his picture, and sold it to get bread for his hunger. Christ coined His heart into a great sacrifice of love, and purchased redemption for the world. So, if we are Christ's, are we to coin our hearts into stories of love and service, into deeds of kindness and helpfulness.

Nothing but the love of Christ in us will enable us to do this. A soldier may be without love for the commander or for the cause he serves, and may march and fight merely for the paltry money he receives. But the Christian must love, or his life will count for nothing. There is a legend of an artist who had a marvelous red tint in his pictures. No other had learned the secret, and it died with him. After his death an old wound was discovered near his heart, and the secret of the wonderful color in his paintings was revealed. It was his heart's blood that gave his work its inimitable hue. The legend tells a deep spiritual truth. Only heart's blood will put the heavenly color into our work. What we do without love fades out. When it is the love of Christ that constrains us, our simplest, commonest acts have divine beauty and blessing in them.

The love of Christ is the only bond that can bind lives together inseparably and forever. People talk of reunions in the other world. Yet we need to remember that only those who are bound together here by a common love for Christ shall find each other, know each other, and be together, in the other world.

Some years since, in one of the magazines, was another suggestive story. There was a woman who loved a man. He died, and she sought in some way to reach him where he was, and could not. Then a heavenly messenger came to her and said: "I have been sent to help thee, for thy crying has been heard. What is thy need?" She answered: "That I may find the soul of my husband, who is dead."

The Shining One said to her: "That may be done only if there is a bond between you that death could not break."

She said: "Surely there is a bond. I have lain in his bosom. I have borne the sacred name of wife."

But the angel shook his head and said: "That is no bond."

Then she raised her head proudly and said: "Surely there is a bond. I have held his children in my arms; with their innocence have they bound us together. By the sorrow in which I bore them there is an enduring bond."

But the angel said, very sadly: "Even this will not suffice."

Then the woman paled, but she said: "My spirit and that of my husband were one. In naught were we separate. Each answered each without speech. We were one. Does not that bond hold?"

But the angel answered very low: "It does not hold. In the domain of death all these bonds of which thou speakest crumble to nothing. The very shape of them has departed, so that they are as if they never were. Think yet once more before I leave thee, if there is one thread to bind thee to him whom thou lovest; for, if not, he has passed from thee forever."

The woman was silent, but she cried to herself desperately: "He shall not go from me!" The angel withdrew a little way, and the woman thought and thought, with deep inward communing, and after a space she raised her face and said: "Once, but it was long ago, he and I thought of God together."

The angel gave a loud cry, and his shining wings smote the earth, and he said: "Thou hast found the bond, thou hast found the bond."

The woman looked, and lo! there lay in her hand a tiny thread, faintly golden, as if woven from the strands of the sunlight, and it led into the darkness.

And so it is that only those who think of God together have between them a bond of union which death cannot sever. The only tie which never shall be broken is love for Christ. Those whom this sacred bond unites never shall be separated.

HOW TO BE HAPPY.

The Legend of a Little Prince Who Found the Secret in Kindly Service for Others.

Once there was a king who had a little boy whom he loved. He gave him beautiful rooms to live in, and pictures, and toys, and books. He gave him a pony to ride, and a rowboat on the lake, and servants. He provided teachers who were to teach him lessons that would make him good and great.

But for all this the young prince was not happy. He wore a frown wherever he went, and was always wishing for something new.

At length, one day, a magician came to court. He saw the boy and said to the king: "I can make your son happy, but you must pay me a great price for the secret."

"Well," said the king, "whatever you ask I will give."

So the price was paid, says the Sunday School Gem. Then the magician took the boy into a private room. He wrote something with a white substance on a piece of paper. Next he gave the boy a candle and told him to light it, and hold it under the paper and then see what he could read. He then went away.

The boy did as he had been told, and the white letters turned into a beautiful blue. They formed these words: "Do a kindness to some one every day."

The prince made use of the secret, and soon became the happiest boy in the kingdom.

God's Part in It.

Scientists in many quarters are proclaiming the decadence and certain death of Darwinism. This may be, for many another theory as good has been forgotten in the past ages. Meanwhile the Christian world to-day does not so much concern itself over these matters, for it has come to learn that no matter how scientists decide the world was made, they can never get away from the idea that God did the work. This fundamental held safe, systems of belief as to how it was done may come and go as they please. —Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

THE STARS AND STRIPES

The Oldest, the Proudest, the Mightiest National Banner in the World.

JUNE 14 was observed in Washington, D. C., and many other cities and towns of the country as Flag day, the one hundred and twenty-seventh anniversary of the adoption of the flag which has become the foremost in the world, and which floats over 80,000,000 people in the United States, and 8,000,000 or 10,000,000 more in the islands of the Pacific. The day has been properly set apart as a holiday, and every year shows a wider observance of it, particularly in the schools of the country. This is as it should be. The American flag, besides being the oldest in the world, represents everything that is American in a way that no other flag symbolizes to the people the institutions of their country.

Until within comparatively recent times, countries have not had a national flag. They had one flag to represent the reigning family, which was the banner of the house then on the throne. From the factional troubles which continually afflicted those countries it could be nothing more than the standard of those who happened to be in power. We have seen this illustrated in France, where the "legitimists," "Orleanists," "Bonapartists" and "republicans," each one with a different flag, were contending for the spoliation or oppression. It has been like the glorious light of the sun, which brings peace, life, fertility and growth, and all that follows the vivifying effects of its beneficent light.

Much the grandest in its symbolism of power of any flag which floats in all the breezes which encircle the globe, its sublimer aspect is in the moral and sentimental ideas it represents. It was first set as a sermon in the skies for justice, equality and righteousness for all men. Never for a moment has there been any variableness or shadow of turning in that meaning. Over 1,000,000 men have died to make that meaning prevail to the uttermost. This is shown by the pure aspirations of the men who have maintained it and have died to keep it true and high in the heavens. It is therefore the most sacred flag in the world, because of the signification given it by the heart's blood of these myriads of high-souled men.

It is a flag of pride. Never in its 127 years has it gone down in defeat, never has it receded from one foot of ground put under its control. All the other flags which attempt to follow with it have had their seasons of shame and disaster. Most of them are in comparison with it mere mushrooms, coming up in the place of others which have been swept away, because associated with the wrongs of unhappy far-off times.

But our flag, though having trials such as the others could not have endured, has floated through all these decades in the unblemished sunlight of triumph and success.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE STARS AND STRIPES.

government of the country. Whichever party had been successful would have raised its flag to represent it. It will be remembered that the late Count de Chambord failed to ascend the throne of France because he would not doff the white banner of the Bourbons, and take in its place the tricolor, which has been identified with so much French glory. In addition to the flag representing the royal house, these countries had another flag for the army, one for the navy, one for the merchant marine, and so on.

Our flag is the oldest flag in the world to-day which began by representing everything that is American. It not only means but always has meant the president, congress, judiciary, and merchantmen who sail the wide seas, but it means all American men and women, no matter in what engaged. It means our schools and churches and colleges just as much as our army and navy. Everything under its glorious shadow is a part of the wonderful whole for which it stands.

It is the only flag in the world, too, says the National Tribune, for which no apology need be made, no defense or extenuation set up. In all its 127 years of vigorous life it has invariably stood for the very best that the imagination of man could conceive. It has stood for the highest liberty, the most absolute justice, the most elevated morality. Though in its 127 years it has extended its supremacy over a greater area of the world's surface than Rome governed in her proudest days, yet there has been upon it absolutely no blemish of conquest, Johnnie's Reading.

Sunday-School Teacher — Johnny Wise, you have probably read in the papers of the police getting after those who were breaking the law by keeping their places of business open on Sunday. Do you remember anything you ever heard from the Bible that would apply to that?

Johnny Wise—Yes'm.

"What was it, Johnnie?"

"And even Solomon in all his glory never made a raid like one of these."—Baltimore American.

As a Starter.

All the effects of the insolvent debtor had been disposed of except a dog.

"Well, gentlemen," said the auctioneer, "how much am I offered for this dog? Start him at something."

SOCIETY MEN MUCH NEEDED

Weary, Philadelphia Matron Declares That Business Interferes with Social Requirements.

"What we need is society men," declared a weary matron to a Philadelphia Record man. "Our men are so fagged by their attention to business that they are next to worthless. They regard the average social function as an awful bore, and leave everything pertaining to entertaining and to going about to their wives. In case the poor wife succumbs to the strain they hunt around for a spinster or widowed sister or sister-in-law or other relative who will consent to take upon her shoulders this social side of the matter.

"As for looking after a daughter, their duty is done when they've given carte blanche with a check book. An Englishman of high title often chaperones his motherless daughter during an entire season, and from his knowledge of ineligibles is able to keep her well informed. How about the American papa? His only ammunition consists in an occasional rabid, blustery remark about the nincompoop fortune hunters who hover about the daughter of the house. As for sane, thoughtful counsel, he gives not a bit of it. Society is a game he got into without intention or effort, and he utterly refuses to take any trouble about his fellow players. Even his own daughters have to go it blind! As I said before, what society needs is society men."

POPE DIGNIFIED; NOT PROUD

Pius X. Has Not the "Magnetism" of the "Popular Preacher," But He Is Magnetic.

Pius X. is of a good height, strongly made, even stout, and has a fine grace of carriage, says Booth Tarkington, in Harper's Magazine; his dignity is as great as his position, but utterly without haughtiness or pomposity or pride of office. He has none of the "magnetism" of the "popular preacher," actor or orator; nevertheless, he is remarkably magnetic; it is the magnetism of unmistakable goodness and good will to all the world. Every one was laughing with excitement and the sheer pleasure of seeing him, and because he smiled a little. His voice, mellow, clear and resonant, yet gentle, has in it the quality of lofty and practical goodness that is in his face. It is a strong voice, too, with the strength of the man who could give an incorrigible lout a fine beating for the good of his soul, and it is what might be called a "brave" voice. A man with that kind of voice will not be afraid of anything that might happen to himself only. But more than these things, it carries to one who hears it the benediction that exhales from the spirit of Pius X. to all the world all the time.

STARTING IN MARRIED LIFE.

New Orleans Benefactress Listens to Tale Which Shows Shrewd Calculation.

"Miss Sophie," beloved benefactress of half the poor of New Orleans, says the Youth's oCmpanfon, sat at her desk writing when an elderly woman who nad made many previous demands upon her was ushered in.

"Oh, Miss Sophie," she said, breathlessly, "I want to borrow a dollar, please, right away."

"What do you need the money for, Ermagarde?"

"Well, now, you see, I'm going to get married, and I need it for the license."

"But if the man you are to marry cannot pay for the license, how is he going to support you?"

"That's just what I want to explain to you, Miss Sophie. You see, to-morrow is Thanksgiving, and we are coming to your free dinner. Then you always give us something to take home, and in the evening the King's Daughters are going to have a basket distribution, and we shall each get one. That will keep us a week, easily, and by that time we'll be on our feet."

Manchurian Mohammedans.

Among the occasional travelers we met on the route (in Chinese Turkestan) were a Chinese merchant and his wife, both Mohammedans from Manchuria, and then engaged in making the holy pilgrimage to Mecca, says a writer in the National Geographic Magazine. They were mounted on the little mountain ponies, and had been already more than three months on their way. The end of their pilgrimage was at least five months ahead, but they went confidently and bravely on, the wife no less enthused than her husband, though she perhaps thought she was barred from the delights of paradise, an entrance into which the man was to make certain by his pious zeal. We furnished them directions for their journey and all the help we could give—and they passed out of sight across the snows.

Samoa's Strange Worms.

A puzzle for naturalists, of many years' standing, has just been solved by German and English investigators. Periodically, in the autumn, the sea around the Samoan islands suddenly swarms with headless marine worms, known to natives as the palolo. The creatures are very slender, and average about 18 inches in length. It is now known that the palolo bores into the reef rock of the islands, and that in its complete state it consists of a thicker anterior part, about four inches long, carrying the head, and a more slender and segmented posterior part, which at particular seasons separates off and swims about; and in this headless form the worms are so numerous that the water seems absolutely "alive" with them.

If Not We Make It Right.

THE UP-TO-DATE HOUSE.

When we called at William Spiffer's there was music in the air,
And we complimented William on the talent he had there:
"It must be your wife or daughter who can execute so well
On the difficult piano. Did she learn abroad, pray tell?"
William Spiffer's eye grew winkful; William Spiffer smole a smile:
"'Tis" he said, "a planet, and it's playing all the while."

Soon we heard somebody singing, and her tones were clear and sweet.
"Excellent!" we said to Spiffer. "Such a voice cannot be beat.
Now, that must be Mrs. Spiffer, or perhaps your daughter, Bess—
As an operatic singer she would make a great success."
"'Tis nobody," Spiffer answered, "all that vocal music's from
An electric voicerina—it can surely make things hum."

Then he showed us his collection of mechanical affairs—
"Here's a pocket trolleyola that I use for paying fares;
Here's a gilded readeretta that reads all
my books for me;
Here's a polished batherola, twice as salty
as the sea;
This is my new cardoplayo, which plays
poker with its wheels;
There's the dinerola table which when running serves the meals."

As we left, the butlerola softly came and swung the door,
And a goodbyetta murmured: "Now, be sure to come some more."
Then we wandered to the sidewalk, past
the hammockina swings,
Thinking of the wondrous progress made in labor-saving things.
At the gate we paused a moment just to mop our puzzled brow,
And an iron doggyola wagged its tail and chirped "Bow wow!"

A ROMANCE OF TWO CABS

By ESTELLINE BENNETT

(Copyright, 1904, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

A CAB drove hurriedly up to the entrance of the hotel and stopped. A young man in a high silk hat and long overcoat was out before the obsequious colored door man could reach him.

"Baggage, sir?"

"No," he said, abruptly, and turned to speak to some one in the cab.

"I won't be but a moment, dearest. Don't be impatient."

The girl inside leaned her yellow head back against the cushions of the cab, to the imminent danger of her big black picture hat. She watched the lights come and go in an electric cigar advertisement on the top of a one-story building across the street. Between it and her, carriages, automobiles, bicycles and omnibuses rushed by on the boulevard, and men and women on foot were hurrying home from their day's work. But the girl never took her eyes from the vivid, changing electric sign except to send an occasional swift glance toward the entrance of the hotel. She showed her impatience only in the tight compression of her red lips and the nervous tapping of her little patent leather toe.

The young man walked rapidly across the lobby of the hotel, where the big organ was playing "Hearts and Flowers," to the telephone station. He studied the directory in frantic haste before he called for a number and shut himself in the little booth to talk.

HE STUDIED THE DIRECTORY IN FRANTIC HASTE.

"Hello," he said breathlessly. "Is this Dr. McLeod? Yes? Well I want to get married. Can you do it? In about an hour? Yes. Yes, I've got it. Yes, that's all right. Alright, we'll be there in about an hour."

He happened to glance out of the telephone booth and saw across the lobby, standing by the desk, a stout, elderly man with grey sidewhiskers.

"Say," he shouted wildly into the 'phone, "I say, Dr. McLeod, can't you make that 15 minutes or 30 at the outside? Yes, do, for heaven's sake. We'll be right over."

He slipped around and out the nearest way with his eye on the portly back of the man at the desk. He went around the corner on a run to where his cab was standing.

"North side," he said to the driver. "Five dollars if you get us to Maple street in 15 minutes."

"All right, sir."

The driver swung his whip as the young man jumped inside and slammed the door behind him. They had turned the corner on to State street and were flying along in front of a clanging cable car before the young man had settled himself sufficiently to be aware of the icy tones of the woman.

"May I ask what this means, sir?" she demanded in a cold, familiar voice, that struck terror to the young man's very soul. He leaned forward to look at her and a glare of an electric light from outside fell full upon his clear-cut, clean-shaven features. For a moment they stared at each other in speechless astonishment. Then the woman's sense of humor came to the rescue.

"What do you mean, Mr. Blake," she asked, with an assumption of outraged dignity, "by trying to kidnap a respectable elderly woman old enough to be your mother?"

The young man smiled, a weak, shadowy smile.

"I guess, in my haste to make her my mother, I've made a mistake."

"Where's Lucile?"

The young man shook his head dismally.

"Search me," he said, forgetting what was due his coveted mother-in-law. "I supposed she was in this cab."

"And where were you going?" the girl's mother quietly asked, "if you had found her here?"

The young man never for a moment denied her right to question him. In the simple hurt fashion of a small boy who has been rudely thwarted in his plans to go west and fight Indians, he told of the hastily conceived and strangely frustrated plot. Something of the boyish simplicity of the story, the honest ring in the boy's voice, and something in the clean-cut, determined young face appealed to the woman. After all, what had anybody against him but his youth and the youth of the girl he had made up his mind to marry. To stop the marriage now was only to postpone it.

Somewhere about Jackson boulevard was an irate middle-aged man who, a good many years ago, had been as young as this boy and as good to look upon. Suppose that some one then had tried to prevent her marrying him. Youthful marriages were the fashion in those days, and no one had tried.

"My boy," she said, laying a small, daintily gloved hand on his arm, "let us talk this over and see if we can't come to a rational understanding."

The girl had watched the cigar sign until she saw spots of electricity wherever she looked, when she was startled by the opening of the cab door.

"Five dollars if you overtake that cab ahead of us," shouted a gruff voice to the driver, and instead of the slim youth she was expecting, the girl's father plumped down on the seat beside her.

"Why, papa!" she exclaimed and her father turned and looked at her with an expression of astonished rage on his face that would have frightened anyone who had not known him intimately for 18 years.

"Well!" he said finally, with something of an explosion, "this is a pretty kettle of fish you've got us all into. Where's your mother? What have you got to say for yourself, anyway, young lady?"

"Oh, papa," she said, "don't be so cross."

"Cross! Cross! When a man's own child disobeys him and defies him, do you expect him to be pleasant about it? And where's that young rapscallion that's responsible for all this? You see what mettle he's made of. He's vamoosed. Saw me probably and lit out."

The girl was reduced to tears. Not even the clamor of State street at its noisest hour could drown the roar of her father's wrath. They were both surprised when the cab drew up to the sidewalk and stopped. The father stuck his head out and called to know what was the matter.

"Here's your party, sir."

He leaned over and looked out of the girl's side. Both sat for a moment dazed with wonder. In the glare of light from the florist's window, the figure of the mother and the young man were silhouetted against a background of roses and orchids.

The father got out quickly, followed by the girl.

"We decided that it must be you following us," said the mother, coming forward, "so we got out to wait for you. In his hurry, Mr. Blake got into our cab by mistake and apparently you got into his."

"There were only two cabs there. I saw him get into one and drive off and of course I got into the other and told the driver to catch him."

And papa," the mother said appealingly, "we have it all arranged. We're all going home together and Mr. Blake and Lucile are to be married at home in the spring."

"Oh they are, are they? Nobody's consulted me about it."

"Oh yes," interposed the young man, quickly. "We're consulting you now. Mrs. Marvin thought you would be willing for a compromise. We want your consent. Don't we, Lucile?"

The girl nodded. She was too hysterical to trust herself to speak.

"Yes, dear," said the mother, "give them your consent and leave everything to me. It'll be all right."

He looked at her doubtfully and shook his head.

"I suppose you'll have your way," he said. "You generally do, and your way's usually right; but I'd like to know how he won you over. You were rearing and charging when we left home this morning."

The woman laughed, and the young man and the girl, seeing a rift in the clouds laughed too. The father looked at the young man and smiled grimly.

"I don't know," he said, "that I ever had anything against you except your youth and that's something you'll be getting over every day you live."

There is a plan on foot to bring 10,000 goats to Chicago to give an assurance of pure milk for the children. The scheme is to take the goats around from house to house, so that you can get fresh milk while you wait. This is the way they do in Naples, only there they take the goat into the house. After awhile it will be fashionable to say "Pass the goat" when one wants milk for his coffee or his strawberries.
