JUNE 20—A very pleasant "At Home" was given by Mrs. S. C. French on Friday afternoon, June 15, in honor of her daughter's, Hilda Blue French, first birthday. Eleven mothers with their little ones were present, the only requirement being that each child should have been born in 1905. The oldest child present was Floyd Hall, son of Mrs. U S. Hall, and the youngest Thelma Coon, daughter of Mrs. Asa Coon. Although the day was extremely sultry, each mother was well pleased with her baby's behavior A fine tea was served by the hostess, the birthday cake having one candle lighted while being passed. Three grandparents were present. Miss Hilda received some very nice presents which she will appreciate later. She gave to each of her little guests a small rubber ball on which were painted pink and blue forgetmenots and the dates "1905–1906." The souvenir menu cards were bound in green leather, tied with pink silk cord and tassels, and contained a place for autographs where each mother wrote her child's name We hope they may grow up happy, healthy men and women with a purpose to conquer all difficulties and that the world may be better for their having lived, and a credit to each mother who so zealously guards them now. At 7 o'clock we said good night

"Good night!" The little lips touch ours,
The little arms enfold us,
And, oh, that thus through coming years
They might forever hold us.
"Good night!" We answer back and smile
And kiss the drooping eyes;
But in our trembling hearts the while
The wistful queries rise;
Who, in the weary years to come,
When we are hid from sight,
Will clasp these little hands and kiss
These little lips "good night?"

Buffalo's Pan American and Coney Island's Luna park are fairly outshone by Auburn's electrical display for Old Home week. The city is a tower of strength and beauty by day and a pillar of fire by night. Whether the bewildered beholder glances down the vista of Genesee street, from the City club to Market street, by day or by night a kaleidoscope of color dazzles the eye. Auburnians and the stranger within the gates are pardonably proud of the city beautiful.

Accident at Farleys.

Last Thursday evening at 5 o'clock an accident occurred which cast a gloom over the meeting of Methodist clergymen at Farleys. Revs. Melville Terwilliger of Waterloo, W. G. Boyd of Cayuga and a boy named Frohock were in bathing when Mr. Boyd proposed jumping from a boat. Mr. Terwilliger declined, not being good enough swimmer. Mr. Boyd took the boat and plunged from it two or three times, and the last time the boat drifted out of his reach and he could not regain it. His companions called for him to return and he proceeded toward shore, but soon threw up his hands in exhaustion and sank twice; Mr. Terwilliger seized him as he was going down the third time and brought him to shore in an unconscious state. Dr. McCully was called and every effort put forth to revive him with final success.

House-Cleaning Days.

Among the curious records of old colonial days in an inventory of the goods of a certain Dutch burgher of New Amsterdam, who included among his household possessions 13 scrubbing-brushes, 31 rubbing-brushes, "seven other brushes," and 24 pounds of Spanish soap. The picture presented to the imagination by such a formidable array of implements may be supplemented by another, drawn a century later, evidently by a not wholly unprejudiced eye-witness of what he describes. "The husband gone, the ceremony begins—walls are stripped of their furniture, paintings, prints, looking-glasses, lie in huddled heaps about floors; curtains are torn from testers, beds crammed into windows; chairs and tables, bedsteads and cradles, crowd the yard; and the garden fence bends beneath the weight of carpets, blankets, cloth cloaks, old coats, under petticoats and ragged breeches. This ceremony complete and the house thoroughly renovated, the next operation is to smear the walls and ceilings with brushes dropped into a solution of lime called whitewash, to pour buckets of water over the floor, and scratch all the partitions and wainscots with hard brushes charged with soft soap or stone-cutter's sand." Small wonder that the goodman prudently retires! Ladies looking forward to such a strenuous day are hardly in the frame of mind for light and easy conversation. But—wonder of these wonderful days!—there is now a queer machine that rattles and throbs in the street while its long pipes, climbing into upper windows of a building, proclaim the passing of the old-fashioned house-cleaninng. The vacuum-cleaners, joining the long procession of labor-savers—sewing machines, cooking and dish-washing machines, mangles, carpet-sweepers, bread-mixers and countless others—are banishing one more drudgery. Certainly woman's work is constantly growing physically easier. Whether the more exacting demands of an age which changes its fashions every few months and its fads every few hours counterbalance its advantages may be an open question. But one thing is certain—the woman wise enough and resolute enough to choose the best has in these days a freedom from drudgery and a consequent opportunity never dreamed of by her sister of a hundred, or even 50, years ago.

Acquiring Self-Control.

Zopyrus, the physiognomist, said: "Socrates' features showed that he was stupid, brutal, sensual, and addicted to drunkenness." Socrates upheld the analysis by saying: "By nature, I am addicted to all these sins, and they were only restrained and vanquished by the continual practice of virtue." Emerson says, in effect: "The virtue you would like to have, assume it as already yours, appropriate it, enter into the part and live the character just as the great actor is absorbed in the character of the part he plays." No matter how great your weakness or how much you may regret it, advises a writer in Success Magazine, assume steadily and persistently its opposite until you acquire the habit of holding that thought, or of living the thing, not in its weakness, but in its wholeness, in its entirety. Hold the ideal of an efficient faculty or quality, not of a marred, or deficient one. The way to reach, or to attain to anything, is to bend oneself toward it with all one's might; and we approximate it just in proportion to the intensity and the persistency of our effort to attain it. If you are inclined to be very excitable and nervous, if you "fly all to pieces" over the least annoyance, do not waste your time regretting this weakness, and telling everybody that you cannot help it. Just assume the calm, deliberate, quiet, balanced composure, which characterizes your ideal person in that respect. Persuade yourself that you are not nervous or excitable, that you can control yourself; that you are well balanced; that you do not fly off on a tangent at every little annoyance. You will be amazed to see how the perpetual holding of this serene, calm, quiet attitude will help you to become like your thought.

The opening of a bank with a capital of $25,000 in Tioga, Pa., would not, under ordinary circumstances, constitute a notable event; but as the bank is organized under the auspices of the state grange, is owned and managed by grangers, and is designed to be the first of a series of grange banks, its opening is very interesting.

It is reported that the disaster in San Francisco has resulted in many weddings. Women, driven out of their homes and left destitute, have appealed to the men to whom they were engaged, and marriages have been immediately effected.

Kansas City's suicide record is becoming such that soon it may be polite to ask: "Good-morning; have you tried to kill yourself to-day?"

A Muscogee (I. T.) woman was shot through a window and instantly killed, but none of the papers referred to it as a painless death.

A York, Pa., man willed to be buried in white ducks and a straw hat. What a life he must 'a' led!

Carrying Out the Law.

One hundred and thirty years ago Burke pointed out that the American people were smatterers in law—that in no other country in the world was the law so general a study. To-day, for good and for ill, Americans without legal training have great confidence in their ability to decide legal questions. Their confidence has been largely justified. There are many true stories of country justices who, by combining their good sense with knowledge or ignorance of law, were able to render just and reasonable decisions. On the other hand, says Youth's Companion, many Americans show a too easy assurance in deciding whether a judge has given a good legal decision or whether a prosecuting officer is remiss in not prosecuting evreyone whom the public pronounces a rascal. Courts and district attorneys get an abundance of instruction from the newspapers and the public which the law would not allow them to follow. In the same way the people at home told the generals in the civil war to capture Richmond or capture Washington immediately, while the generals themselves were busy with problems of which their civilian friends never dreamed. Because the public officers do not fling into jail everyone who has offended against moral law, it does not follow that the officers are not doing their duty, or that justice is fettered by "legal technicalities." In the long run, the processes of court justice are parallel to the processes of the best moral justice. The records of American court proceedings form a history of intelligent interpretation of the law. Only by faith in the courts can legislatures determine how to make statutes effective and harmonious with existing laws, and through the courts a law-abiding people finds surest protection against those who break the laws that men have made.

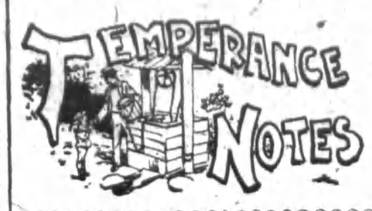
The Immigrant Problem.

In a recent editorial under the title, "Can We Have Too Many?" the Boston Herald discusses what has been called the immigration problem. It cites the following testimony: "Recently Robert Watchorn, commissioner of immigration, said he had no sympathy with those who wished to keep out immigrants because of illiteracy or lack of money. "I came through Castle Garden 26 years ago with $15 in my pockets," said the commissioner, "and when President Roosevelt wanted the right man for this place he selected me out of 80,000,000." Not modest, perhaps, but very much to the point, Dr. John P. Conroy, principal of the public school, No. 179, Manhattan, the president of the club, interrupted to say that he "came through Castle Garden without even the trousers." "We need all the able-bodied, willing workers we can get," declared the commissioner. "We have no cause for alarm. Rather, the peril lies with the European countries, for out of 5,000,000 emigrants who have left their shores, 4,200,000 were able-bodied men and women between the ages of 14 and 44 years." Touching those who are regarded as the least desirable class of immigrants, the Slavs and Poles, the commissioner said these workers have supplanted the Irish and Welsh miners in the anthracite fields, "and now 535 of their sons are in our colleges and universities." Thirty years from now, he predicted, they would be holding office—and he might have added perhaps be favoring the restriction of immigration! The optimistic view of this question is sustained by all our past history and by the wonderful material development of our country, which would have been impossible without the brawn and the brain that have come to us from the mother countries."

The treatment needed to rid any community of Judge Lynch is so simple that there is no excuse for not applying it, says the New York Sun. It consists not only of the prompt and vigorous use of the long-established weapons with which the state has armed its representatives for the protection of its citizens. Where a mob is able for any considerable length of time to defy the law it will be found that the enforcers of the law are incompetent, cowardly or corrupt. The responsibility for these conditions rests on the citizens themselves, who get the kind of government they are willing to tolerate and who by insisting on good administration by decent, capable men can always make impossible such disgraceful incidents as the Springfield outbreak.

A Maryland judge thinks that when a man has been divorced three times he should keep out of matrimony. It is a sensible view. If a man cannot learn by experience the state should take care of him as it does of the deficient classes generally. A man of three divorces is either very unfortunate or he is quite unfitted for married life, and in justice to him or to some woman he might be restrained from further plunges into an element for which he is ill adapted.

If it is possible to identify the corporal who reduced the price of bread from 75 cents to 10 cents a loaf at the point of the bayonet in a San Francisco bakery, he should hear of something to his advantage in chevrons from the colonel of his regiment.



DRINKERS TAKE HEED.

Corporations and Business Firms Becoming More Strict Regarding Employing Drinkers.

Over 2,000,000 of the best positions in the United States are closed to men who drink. In the centers of business men who are placed in positions of trust must be bonded by bonding companies, and not by their friends. One of the main questions that a bonding company asks of one to be bonded is "Do you drink intoxicating liquors?" and they will not bond one who is given to drink.

The Pennsylvania Railroad company not only insists on its men being sober but insists on their keeping out of the way of temptation. On one division the trainmen were given orders not to stop over night at the end of their division at a hotel that had a bar. The hotel near the depot closed the bar because they preferred the patronage of the railroad without drink rather than to lose this patronage and retain the sale of drink.

In Cincinnati a railroad employe lived next door to a saloon. He was much surprised one morning to get a notice from headquarters to change his place of residence or give up his position with the railroad. The only explanation given was that the railroad company did not care for any of its employes to be so closely associated with any saloon.

Yet there are those who are demanding that a saloon shall be placed in every soldier's camp.

WHO PAYS THE BILLS.?

An Important Question Which the Tax Payer Should Try to Answer.

In Burlington, Vt., in one month, under license, 44 drunks took their alternative sentence of ten days in jail. (Who boards the drunks?) In St. Albans, in three months, 77 men took their ten days in jail. (Who paid the bills?)

In Kalkaska, Mich., the chief clerk in a large department store felt it to be his duty as a citizen to complain against a certain saloon keeper, and he did so, and the saloon keeper had to pay the penalty of his violation of law.

The next day the saloon keeper called at the store where this clerk was doing duty and demanded of the merchant that he discharge this clerk forthwith. The merchant remonstrated. He was a valuable man—he could not well dispense with the services of this young man. "Then," said the saloon keeper, "you will pay me what you owe me." The clerk had to go. The saloon keeper, always doing a cash business, as against the merchant who had to do largely a credit business, had so prospered that he held a mortgage against the merchant, and the merchant (and there are others) had to bow to the saloon keeper's demand, and yet people would argue that the saloon helps business.

Three Beers a Day.

Two or three years ago a western merchant did some figuring as to the cost of beer. He inserted it in a local paper as a paid advertisement and it excited so much interest that it was sent as a special telegram to a Chicago newspaper. It was as follows:

"Look at this: Three beers a day for a year, would bring into your home one barrel of flour, 50 pounds of sugar, 12 pounds of cornstarch, 10 pounds of macaroni, 10 quarts of beans, four 12-pound hams, one bushel of sweet potatoes, 10 pounds of rice 20 pounds of crackers, 100 bars of soap, three 12-pound turkeys, five quarts of cranberries, 10 bunches of celery, 10 pounds of prunes, four dozen oranges and 25 good beefsteaks."

They Don't Pay.

The saloon doesn't pay. As an economic measure it is an absolute failure. The only man who makes money out of the saloon is the keeper. In Monmouth, Ill., six saloons were licensed at $1,000 each, and paid their license fees and began business. In less than two weeks from the time the $6,000 license fees were paid in and the saloons opened, the "city fathers" voted an appropriation of $5,300 for additional police protection to take care of the extra business those saloons were thrusting upon the city.

Why Some Men Drink.

Prof. William James says "An unhealthy minded person suffering from all sorts of regrets where ambitions and aspirations has been obstructed, suffers from bodily discomfort, not distinctly localized, but breeding a general mistrust, and state of depression. It is this condition that develops the thirst for alcohol, and more than half of all persons who drink, do so at first to secure the temporary anaesthesia from these morbid feelings, which had they been normal at first would not have existed."

Self Indicted.

When they tell you that there is just as much liquor drunk with as without saloons they admit their connivance with lawlessness, for an anti-saloon administration could and would enforce the law. The saloon administration never wishes the law enforced. It destroys their arguments.—American Issue.

Miss Marjory's Adventure.

By Marie Gerard.

THE condition of Sir Piers Gordon was a cause of much disturbance to his daughter, Mistress Marjory. For the man who had led the charge under Prince Rupert's own eye, times out of number, sat ever by the ingle nook, his head bowed on his hands, taking heed of nothing. Thirty years had passed since Charles, whom men styled the Martyr, had perished on the scaffold; Charles II. had come into his own again, and Sir Piers had expected great things. He had made great sacrifices for the Stuarts, and was one of many at that day who believed that past services would act as paving stones to the road of royal favor, in which he and they were greatly mistaken. For Sir Piers, being a broken man, with an impoverished estate, and having no kinship with those in power, had, of course, nothing to recommend him. Sir Piers attended personally for a time at Whitehall and Hampton. He even rode in the King's cavalcade both to Bath and Newmarket; but beyond a few gracious words, which cost His Majesty nothing, the prematurely aging Baronet of Stancombe, in Wiltshire, gained nothing. Instead, he landed himself further in debt, and came to know one Aaron Montana, a goldsmith and money lender of East Chepe, who, having cast a rope about the neck of Sir Piers, like unto a silken t' ead at the first, took care that year by year the strands strengthened into a formidable coil, stout enough to hang a much heavier man.

The years that followed were full of trouble; for the Lady Gordon was carried to her grave; and Sir Piers's only and well beloved son, Anthony, went across the sea to seek his fortune in the armies of the great Louis and was but seldom heard of at Stancombe Manor.

The marvel was that, brought up amid such gloomy surroundings, Mistress Marjory, now aged 19 and in the flower of her youth and beauty, had kept her spirits bright and her courage like fine-tempered steel. Marjory was the child of Sir Piers's old age and the apple of his eye. If it had not been for her beauty and grace, her marvellous winsomeness, every one for miles round would have averred that she should have been born a boy. For she could ride and fence and shoot a pistol as well as her brother, ten years older than herself, who had acted as her mentor in these accomplishments, until Mistress Marjory knew as much as her instructor, and the latter was moved by his ambitions and the intolerable strain at home to depart to a more congenial atmosphere, that of the camp and the battlefield. Marjory, it is to be feared, stuck at very little when the whim took her, and, although a gentlewoman to her dainty fingertips, had no idea of social restraints, of which, indeed, there were none at poor, deserted, impoverished Stancombe.

The household at the Manor consisted only of a middle-aged housekeeper-cook, a young girl under her, and a youth by name of Robert Clayton, who assisted indoors and out, waiting at table redolent of the stable. Clayton was Mistress Marjory's own particular slave, body and soul He rode behind her when she was pleased to take him out hawking, or if the foxhounds, maintained and hunted by Lord James Harvey, were within a dozen miles of Stancombe. Two horses were left for the barouche, which, since Dame Gordon's death, rarely left the carriage house. On one of these the rough boy was wont to be mounted while Mistress Marjory rode her bay mare with one white stocking, which had been bred and broken in by Anthony Gordon, and by him presented to his sister. Surefoot, the said mare, like her mistress, was of rare grace and breeding, with not a little thrown in, but no vice. She kicked a bit, but only in her playful way, and would not have hurt a fly, except by accident.

Clayton brought his mistress what little news was obtainable in the country side, and latterly, retailed great stories of a certan mysterious horseman, who was called by the country folk of Wiltshire "Three Fingered Jack," from the fact that from his bridle-hand two fingers had been lopped at some period of his career. "Three Fingered Jack" was reputed to be a gentleman of birth and position, who had taken to the road owing to the depletion of his patrimony and the exiguous condition of his purse. Marjory permitted herself a fellow feeling for him, as they were in the like case. She was in addition drawn toward the highwayman, at any rate as regards the interest in his movements, by the fact that he, too, rode a mare with one white stocking, "just like Surefoot" as Clayton was wont to remark at intervals of his stories.

Some weeks before Christmas, in the year of our Lord 1673, Sir Piers received a letter which greatly disturbed him. The baronet had been unable to meet the last instalment of interest due to Montana; the latter had written to the effect that he could wait no longer; that he was about to proceed to Stancombe with a view to the signature by Sir Piers of certain documents which Montana would bring with him. He should then sell certain portions of the estate, and, if needs be, the manor house itself, to satisfy the debt and accruing interest. The old man was well aware that nothing he owed the goldsmith of East Chepe ought by any process of figures amount to the sum Montana made out to be his due; but not being a man of accounts and having no one to advise him Sir Piers felt himself quite at Montana's mercy.

Mistress Marjory wrinkled her forehead and puzzled over the letter and figures; but her gifts did not lie in the direction of elucidating such matters as these. So Christmas Eve drew on when the great yellow coach of four horses, in which Aaron Montana took his expeditions abroad, might be expected at Stancombe. Once before in the years that had passed the same highly ornamented vehicle, with the money lender inside, had drawn up before the wide portico of the manor, greatly to the disgust of the inmates of the house. It was bad enough then, when Montana only came to threaten. It was worse now by far when he came to put his threat into execution.

Mistress Marjory wrinkled her brow more than ever, and had long consultations with her servant and ally, Robert Clayton. Then after a while her face cleared. The sun, metaphorically, shone once more after rain. Marjory Gordon, in other words, almost laughed.

CHAPTER II

MISTRESS MARJORY and Robert Clayton had resolved themselves into a committee of ways and means to consider the carrying out of the former's designs. As a matter of fact, the young lady had already thought it all out for herself; but she had the diplomacy of her sex. Robert liked to be consulted. His help was indispensable, and as this was an affair of some considerable risk, and quite different from anything Clayton had had to do before, Marjory Gordon had been a little in doubt of her henchman's compliance.

"You will have to put on—" Robert stopped and, looking down, rubbed one foot against the other.

"I know that," she said, sharply; she was blushing furiously, and trying to conceal the fact from him, and to ignore it to herself.

"Where will you get what you want from, Mistress?"

"I have them by me. They once belonged to Mr. Anthony when he was small."

"You will feel strange in them, especially at first," Clayton suggested. He was still not looking at her, being a nicely brought up lad.

"I have tried them on," she answered, and then turned away.

The snow assisted Mistress Marjory's plans. It was a Christmas of the right sort, a white Christmas, in the year 1673. It would serve to delay the yellow chariot; and had that ominous vehicle appeared in the daytime all the deep-laid plans would have been upset.

After 3 o'clock, on these December days, it was dusk, and after 4 P. M. it was quite dark, except for the gleaming of the snow as it lay on the ground, and decked the trees and hedgerows. Mistress Marjory partook of dinner with her father at their usual hour of 3 o'clock on that Christmas Eve. She had a high color and was obviously excited; but Sir Piers, deep in his own anxious thoughts and depression, noticed nothing. His mind was full of his prospective visitor. He was rehearsing for the thousandth time what he should say to Montana and what Montana was likely to say to him.

Always a sparing eater, to-day the Baronet took hardly anything; but Marjory saw that his glass was plenished frequently with the strong home-brewed ale of the manor. Sir Piers always slept in the settee by the fire after the principal meal, and this afternoon his daughter preferred that his rest should be a long one; not that her coming and going attracted much attention, but on this occasion she was specially anxious to avoid questioning.

At 4 o'clock Sir Piers was sound asleep. The household, too, had retired to the great kitchen at the back of the mansion. Most of the rooms of the Manor suggested by their size uncomfortable comparisons with the past splendor of the house. A slim boy, booted to the thighs and spurred, slipped out from the front door and ran down the drive. He wore a short sword. As he ran he slipped on a mask. Over his shoulders was a horseman's cape, which he frequently pulled down, as if he wished it longer.

The snow was not actually falling, but lay thick on the ground, except for a narrow channel which had been swept from the front door to the entrance of the drive. The stables and coach house, surrounded by trees on three sides, lay a little distance to the left from the manor house itself. The slim youth called Robert twice in clear, but not loud tones. There was a response from within. Immediately afterward could be heard the sound of horses' feet on a stone pavement. A young man appeared leading a bay mare. It was Robert Clayton bringing out Surefoot.

"Shall I help you up, Mistress?"

"You are not to call me that; say 'Sir,' if anything. No, of course not. I do not require any assistance. The voice was meant to be assured; but it trembled a little.

While Clayton fetched out his own horse Mistress Marjory looked to the priming of the pistols in her holsters. She had charged them herself and knew they contained nothing more deadly than powder. This particular highwayman only intended to frighten the occupant of the yellow chariot into giving up his papers. She had no designs either on his purse or his person.

They had ridden for an hour, hearing nothing, seeing nothing. Robert had come to the conclusion long ago that it was a bootless errand. He was anxious to turn back, and had ventured to suggest the same to his young mistress more than once; but the latter was obdurate, although she had begun to doubt herself. Still, Aaron had said he would come to the Manor on Christmas Eve, and when it was a case of money he was known to be ever as good as his word.

Suddenly Surefoot, hitherto quiescent, stepping daintily, showed signs of animation. The nostrils dilated, sending out deep breaths charged with moisture into the fog-laden air. The mobile ears twitched backward and forward. Marjory as yet could hear nothing, see nothing; but she could trust the mare that something other than the road, the hedgerows and the trees was in front.

A few minutes elapsed. The rider detected on the night air what the horse had heard before—namely, the sound of horses trampling on the snowy bottom. And almost immediately afterward round a distant corner came the lights of a coach. Marjory leaned forward and loosed a pistol from its holster, holding it in her right hand. She called back to Robert not to come up too close. But her voice was hardly recognizable. This particular highwayman was very frightened. She had produced an effect upon herself, if not upon Montana.

There was an incline in the road, up which the heavy coach came slowly. Marjory withdrew under the shadow of the high hedge and waited. This was the worst time of all. The perspiration stood out in beads upon her forehead. The veins of her head were throbbing. Her heart under the surtout she was wearing seemed on the point of bursting. Still she mustered courage to spur Surefoot at the critical moment into the middle of the road. Marjory called out something which she intended to be, "Stop or I fire!" but which was only a confused murmur. The pistol in her hand went off, somehow. Immediately afterward Marjory slid off Surefoot and lay her length in the snow.

This particular highwayman had essayed a task beyond his strength.

CHAPTER III

SUREFOOT was so surprised at her rider's behavior that she at first stood stock still and then turned round and galloped full speed backward in the direction of her stable. Robert Clayton attempted to catch the bridle of the runaway, as Surefoot passed him, but without success. The road was wide. The mare made a detour when she reached her stable companion, no doubt expecting interference.

In the meantime Mistress Marjory lay unconscious in the snow by the side of the road. Her hat had fallen off and her beautiful hair which had been carefully coiled up under it, had broken loose. It lay in luxuriant confusion, partly shading her face, partly brought into relief on the white background.

The first to arrive on the scene was the occupant of the coach, not Aaron Montana, but a singularly handsome gentleman just past his first manhood, dressed quietly, but in the height of fashion. In a few quick steps the stranger reached the side of the prostrate highwayman. He looked down. He saw the coils of hair. First he smiled, then he frowned.

Three lackeys had clambered down from the front and back of the coach. They were well armed. An actual highwayman, even the notable "Three Fingered Jack" would have had a warm reception, for in addition to the servants the owner of the equipage did not look a person likely to surrender easily whatever he possessed.

Seeing what he did see, the master ordered the lackeys back to their places. It was too dark for them to distinguish anything except a form lying on the ground.

To complicate matters the snow began to fall again, and the heavens darkened in consequence.

Robert Clayton had now come up.

"Your master is in a faint; we will carry him to the coach if your horse will stand."

"He will not move, sir, if he is told to stand still."

"That is well."

The stranger and the groom carried Mistress Marjory and placed her in a recumbent position on the back seat of the roomy coach.

"Now get in and sit opposite to your master. You can take a little snow in your hand and gently chafe his forehead and nostrils. I will ride my horse at the rear. As soon as this gentleman is capable of giving instructions ask him whither he would prefer to be driven."

Robert Clayton was about to speak; but the stranger silenced him.

"Best say nothing; just do as I bid you."

The gentleman handed in the highwayman's hat; then mounting the groom's horse he motioned to the coachman to proceed.

A quarter of an hour passed. Clayton looked out of the window. The stranger rode up, but kept in the background so as not to see within the carriage.

Miss Marjory sat back white and frightened, listening.

"My master bids me ask, sir, are you not Aaron Montana, the goldsmith of East Chepe?"

A smile passed over the stranger's face. It was a winning, attractive face when that smile lodged there. "No; I am not," he said.

Silence broken only by a whisper. Then Robert Clayton's voice again.

"My master bids me apologize for the trouble he has would like to be put down at the great gates of Stancombe Manor."

"Egad! I am going there myself!" exclaimed the owner of the coach in astonishment.

"Then you must be Master Montana," a silvery voice insisted from the depths of the carriage. This particular highwayman had a very charming voice.

"Is a moneylender in these days the only possible visitor to gallant Sir Piers Gordon, the bravest of the brave?"

"Oh, sir! Forgive me! We expected Montana—I came to meet him; I wanted to frighten him; I did not intend to do him any harm; I wanted to make him give up some papers." There was a sound suspiciously like partially suppressed sobs.

"I think you had better get out, young man," the unknown remarked, with that tone of authority which seemed to become him so well. "We will exchange places, and your master and I can come to an understanding—as we are both bound for Stancombe Manor"

Robert Clayton was delighted to carry out the instructions, as the situation was getting so complicated that it passed his imagination what to do or say.

So the stranger finished the journey in the coach opposite the highwayman and Robert Clayton pounded on behind in the falling snow.

CHAPTER IV.

SIR PIERS GORDON was sitting in his high-backed chair when the stranger was announced. The baronet, who had been informed of the arrival of a coach, rose up to receive, as he thought, Aaron Montana.

The old man almost fell back in surprise when his eyes rested on his guest.

"My Lord Western!" he exclaimed. "You here in my poor house? I expected—"

"Yes; I know. Montana, the East Chepe goldsmith. Your daughter, whom I met accidentally, informed me. I passed him on the road at the inn, where I slept last night. I did not speak with him myself; but the landlord informed me that he had been robbed on the way by some gentleman of the road, who had taken away some papers which he valued more than his purse and rings, of which he had likewise been relieved. At any rate, Montana cannot now be here until to-morrow; and if you will permit me, Sir Piers, I will see him on your behalf. Your son and I have ever been, as you know, the greatest of friends, and I shall only be acting on his behalf."

"I am afraid, my lord, this is a matter I must see to myself—much as I value your lordship's kindness."

"May I first state the errand upon which I am come, Sir Piers? By great good favor I have been chosen to represent His Gracious Majesty."

Sir Piers gazed at Lord Western, speechless with surprise. The blood had rushed to his ashen cheeks. His hands drummed nervously on the arms of his chair.

"The King," Lord Western went on, "has conferred upon you the Knighthood of the Bath, and will be glad to welcome you at Whitehall when the weather is suitable, and you are equal to the fatigues of the journey, to bestow the insignia with his own hands. In addition, His Majesty has bestowed upon you and your next heir succeeding, in recognition of your great service to his house; a pension of three hundred pounds sterling, to be paid out of the excise."

"Then Charles has remembered me after all," Sir Piers stammered, hardly knowing what he said, in his infinite surprise.

A smile flitted across Lord Western's handsome face.

"The King," he said, "has a good memory, but a short purse. Recently both have received stimulus from Charles's good cousin and friend, Louis the Great, with whom your son, Master Anthony, has won high favor."

"Then I have to thank the King of France for these benefits, rather than the King of England," remarked Sir Piers stiffly.

"Nay; rather thank God, that you have a son who is like to be a worthy scion of a noble house and of a great favor.

Lord Western handed his snuff box to Sir Piers and then helped himself. Snuff, on occasions, had its uses other than those obvious on the surface.

* * * * * * *

On the following day Aaron Montana arrived at the Manor. He was shown into the morning room, which, in the old days of the estate, had been used as the steward's office. Sir Piers was of late his own steward, receiving his rents himself.

My Lord Western was alone in the room. The money lender had come in with bluster and threatening in his eye. On perceiving the peer, one of the richest men in England, and among the most considered, Montana's face fell, and he put on expeditiously the garb of abject humility.

Lord Western noted the change as he did everything. As once before, he first smiled, then frowned. He smiled as he thought of the money lender's discomfiture; he frowned as he thought of the gallant old soldier driven to seek the aid of such a man.

"I repesent," he said, "Sir Piers Gordon as his son's friend. You will please to state your business, Mr. Montana, without reservation."

"I would rather, much rather, see the noble baronet himself—it is all so private—between himself and me—this small matter—" he said deprecatingly.

"I regret that I cannot oblige you; save Sir Piers's authority to act in his name and his behalf. Please to state your business clearly, so that a plain man can understand it."

Lord Western listened impatiently to a long rambling statement. At length the money lender, under considerable pressure, produced a summary of accounts, showed how much he considered Sir Piers owed him money lent, and the exorbitant interests charged upon it.

"You have doubtless the necessary papers," Lord Western inquired quietly, "bearing Sir Piers's acknowledgment of the various sums you have advanced."

"No, I have not," the money lender admitted angrily, striking his fist on the table. "I was robbed by a villain in a mask who threatened to take my life; but I will get them back and he shall hang, he shall hang as high as Haman." Then Montana changed his tone. "Sir Piers is a gentleman. He will not let the man who has befriended him be the loser because a thief has taken the documents."

"You are right, Montana; Sir Piers is a gentleman; you have lent him money on excellent security. Here is a statement of the sums, with 10 per centum interest. I am prepared to pay you this amount if you will give me quittance in full."

"Ten per centum!" exclaimed the visitor. "Ah! it is not sufficient."

"Then we will wait until you get back the papers," Lord Western suggested.

Montana thought matters over; but when he quitted the room, with a view to a speedy return, the money was in his wallet, and a receipt in full was in Lord Western's keeping.

* * * * * * *

After that first visit my lord found his way on other occasions to Stancombe Manor. Sir Piers had a great opinion of him and found great pleasure in his society. But Mistress Marjory was ever shy, and avoided being in his presence as much as possible, which caused her father much surprise and no little annoyance. Yet he could not move her to more dutiful and friendly ways.

Then one day Lord Western found Mistress Marjory alone. It was in the summer time, and she sat in the arbor in the grounds, not knowing my lord had come to Stancombe. She blushed on seeing him. Then Lord Western knelt and kissed her hand.

"You once demanded my life," he said. "Now I ask for yours in return. I will ever hold it as the dearest thing in the world."

And as there was no escape when my lord made up his mind, Mistress Marjory was fain to yield to his will—at which, when Sir Piers was informed of it, he was more surprised than ever.

Police Court Sherlock Holmes.

"A man's occupation," said a magistrate, "marks him so unmistakably that I can tell at a glance what he does for a living.

"There is, for instance, the violinist. You can tell a violinist from the fact that he carries his head to one side.

"The groom and the cavalryman have bow legs, and, when they stand still they hold their legs wide apart, as though there was a horse between them.

"The painter may be detected by the mark of the palette hole in his thumb.

"The pianist's enormous hands identify him. From constant practice they become abnormal. Weber, you know, could stretch two octaves.

"Men who work amid the vapors of mercury, copper or arsenic have a green mucous membrane, and greenish hair and skin.

"The players of flutes and clarinets have thick, distended cheeks and tough and leathery lips.

"The scrubbers of floors have swollen knees, and often, afflicted with the disease called housemaid's knee, they limp."

Thatched Roofs in England.

"The thatched roof, which makes the English cottage picturesque, is doomed," said an architect. "For some years it has been going gradually. Soon it will be altogether a thing of the past.

"Fire insurance is the cause of the thatched roof's disappearance. No company will insure a cottage or its contents if the roof is thatched. They who want insurance must substitute for the roof of thatch a tiled one.

"As long as the English cottager remains very poor so that his house and furniture are not worth insuring, he keeps a thatched roof over his head.

"As soon as he begins to prosper and lays in household goods of value he takes out a fire policy and away then goes his thatched roof."

India's Population.

According to the latest Indian census, that of 1901, the population of India was 294,361,056, and the total number of people employed in various capacities by the Government was 1,490,276. Of these, 245,803 were partially agriculturists, and about as many more were employed in occupations not strictly official, thus leaving about a million who could be called Goverment officials.

You Must Grow or Die.

Of course there is no future for stale brains or for a man who stands still and ceases to grow. He is old who thinks he is old, and useless who thinks he is useless. When a man has ceased to grow he begins to die, and many people are half dead at fifty not because of their age, but because of their mental attitude, because of the way they face life.—Success Magazine.

WHERE THEY GO.

During the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1905, immigrants to the number of 1,026,499 arrived at the American ports of entry. It is estimated that at the port of New York alone the total for the present fiscal year, which ends on the 30th inst., will be from 1,000,000 to 1,200,000.

During the month of May alone 120,951 aliens were landed at New York. Where did they then go? A circular prepared at Ellis Island gives the following interesting facts regarding their distribution:

Alabama	56	Nebraska	614
Alaska	17	Nevada	65
Arizona	104	New Hampshire	470
Arkansas	26	New Jersey	8,424
California	717	New Mexico	30
Colorado	576	New York	48,175
Connecticut	4,311	North Carolina	18
Delaware	159	North Dakota	463
Dist. of Columbia	165	Ohio	3,252
Florida	73	Oklahoma	7
Georgia	64	Oregon	213
Hawaii	3	Pennsylvania	19,263
Idaho	70	Philippines	1
Illinois	10,204	Rhode Island	902
Indiana	753	South Carolina	44
Indian Territory	17	South Dakota	303
Iowa	697	Tennessee	73
Kansas	226	Texas	68
Kentucky	76	Utah	267
Louisiana	59	Vermont	263
Maine	210	Virginia	150
Maryland	513	Washington	510
Massachusetts	6,469	West Virginia	799
Michigan	2,666	Wisconsin	2,159
Minnesota	1,003	Wyoming	111
Mississippi	50
Missouri	1,051	Total	120,951
Montana	262

It will be observed that by far the greatest share remained in the state of New York, with Pennsylvania and Indiana ranking next as abiding places for the new arrivals. Probably the figures fairly represent the relative local opportunities for finding work to do. The Southern states, which say they want immigrants, are low in the list.

It is hard to say just what lesson is taught by these statistics of distribution, but it seems fair to infer that there has been a lack of system in letting the immigrants know where their services are in urgent demand. If they possessed the real pioneer spirit they would, of course, go West, seek virgin fields, and build homes and communities. But scarcely any of them have the energy and courage for such enterprises.

The problem of distributing the new-comers seems to be left to take care of itself. It must eventually be faced, however, as must that of intelligent restriction of immigration. It looks now as if Congress might adjourn without enacting new legislation. There is one encouraging fact in the situation. If we are accumulating a population of adults whose habits and sympathies are alien to our own, we are at the same time educating their children in our public schools and training them for good American citizenship.

LIQUID AIR FALLACIES

The death of Charles E. Tripler, whose name was connected with advanced experiments in the compression of air, recalls the sensational experiments which interested the public a few years ago, and which were made the basis of an extensive but not phenomenally successful stock speculation.

The liquifying of the gases of the atmosphere was not unknown before the Tripler experiments It was known, experimentally, that air would become liquified under sufficient pressure, and the process was not uncommon in well-equipped laboratories. In these experiments, the first step was to apply the pressure and the second to remove the heat developed in the process by the use of cold water. Tripler's improvement on the process, broadly speaking, consisted in utilizing the expansion of a portion of the compressed air to chill the remainder, thus avoiding the heat waste. It was later claimed that this process was not original with Tripler, having been used by German and English scientists. It was conceded, however, that Tripler made a marked improvement in the apparatus used in the experiment.

Unfortunately for Tripler's lasting fame, he fell into the hands of conscienceless promoters. Since his recent death it has been claimed by his friends that he firmly believed for a long time that he had discovered a process by which he could controvert the law of the conservation of energy; that is, that he had found a means of getting something from nothing. There now seems to be little doubt that the experimenter, in the absence of scientific training, fancied that, by means of his improved appliances, he could generate eight gallons of liquid air by utilizing the energy stored in one gallon. When once this idea had found a place in the untrained mind of the experimenter, he easily became the dupe of men who saw an opportunity to exploit the new perpetual motion, and give the public the benefit of the discovery, and a tempting stock proposition was speedily framed and presented to investors. Lecturers were employed, and the really wonderful results, in a spectacular sense, formed the sensation of the day. It was announced that ocean steamers would be propelled across the Atlantic, the initial energy required being only that which was required to produce a single gallon of liquified air; the multiplying process going on while the vessel was on her voyage. With or without the knowledge of Tripler, it was claimed that the new process of generating energy would relegate the steam engine and the dynamo to the scrap heap and revolutionize all industries in which the expenditure of energy in mechanical form was involved.

Charles E. Tripler lived to see the fallacy of these claims exposed. Indeed, they were exposed in this city, when, just before the curtain at the Lyceum Theater rose on what was to be a really interesting entertainment, a persistent newspaper reporter extracted from the lecturer the admission that the expenditure of twenty horse power of energy was required to produce liquid air which would give back one horse power of energy at the shaft.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

ROOSEVELT WILL SEE FOR HIMSELF.

The President proposes to inform himself as to the conditions in the canal zone and the progress of work on the canal by actual observation. He will visit the isthmus in November and will remain long enough to make a thorough personal inspection. The trip will violate precedent in that it will take a president of the United States outside the territorial limits of the country during his term of office, but the precedent is based on no constitutional or statutory provision, and the common sense reasons for its establishment do not apply in this case, because of wireless telegraphy and because the President will not be in foreign territory or under a foreign flag at any time during his absence from Washington He will make the voyage in a national ship, and the canal strip is national territory. Besides, he will be helping to establish a more important precedent than the one above mentioned—a precedent requiring American statesmen to acquire, as far as possible, first-hand information as to the condition and needs of outlying dependencies whose affairs they administer.

WELLMAN POLAR AIRSHIP EXPEDITION.

On Friday, the 15th inst., Walter Wellman, the intrepid explorer who is about to attempt the 1,200-mile journey from Tromsoe, Norway, to the North Pole and back in the largest dirigible balloon that has ever been built, started from Paris. A special freight train was employed to transport the airship, its appurtenances, and supplies to Norway. Mr. Wellman will be accompanied on his journey of exploration by an appointee of the United States Weather Bureau, an expert aeronaut, and a mechanic. Notwithstanding that a recent test of the two motors of the airship is said to have shown the development of 100 horse-power as against the 75 contracted for, Wellman expressed himself as much better satisfied with the balloon part of his airship than with its mechanical features. He expects to get the latter perfected, however, and to make a number of trial tests before starting on the actual journey about the first of August. In case of an accident to the airship, the explorers expect to make their way back over the ice on sledges drawn by the motor ski-supported bicycle.—Scientific American.

Grangers' Picnic.

Upwards of 500 people were present at the Grange picnic at Cascade on Wednesday of last week. The speakers of the day were State Lecturer Fred Shepard who gave a fine address on Grange work, and Mr Wetzler of Cornell university. The latter gave an interesting talk on the agricultural work at Cornell. Dr. F. A. Dudley of King Ferry made a few remarks. Members from Sherwood Grange contributed literary work and there was an excellent musical program. Mr and Mrs. Lynch of the hotel did all in their power to entertain the guests. Some brought baskets of provisions and spread tables on the spacious lawn. Everybody had a most enjoyable day.

Alterations

—AT—

Saperstein's, Auburn, N. Y.

Extensive improvements are to be made in Saperstein, the Clothier's Store, 56 State Street, Auburn, N. Y., and in view of these alterations, with the mess and dirt which will accompany them, Saperstein has inaugurated an Alteration Sale which commenced, Saturday, June 23, when prices were placed on his Summer Goods, which will force them to move quickly, before the carpenters, masons and other workmen commence the changes.

This Alteration Sale offers many rich possibilities of saving money, and without doubt, hundreds of neighboring people will avail themselves of the opportunity of purchasing from this fine Stock at greatly reduced prices.

As everyone knows, Mr Saperstein has been in business in Auburn for ten years, and is in Auburn to stay, and every customer at this Sale will find every statement in his advertising fully guaranteed.

In this paper is given a list of the Opening Sale Prices, and it will be full of interest to everyone who desires to make a dollar go farthest in purchasing.

Weekly Compendium of Local Happenings—

Various Items of Interest to Genoa People.

—We celebrate the Fourth.

—Listen for the boom of the sunrise guns next Wednesday.

—Mrs. Mary Sellen is spending a few days with friends at Auburn.

—Independence ball at East Venice hall next Tuesday evening.

—Mrs. A. L. Miller has returned to her home in this village for the summer.

—Miss C. Millicent Sellen has returned home from the Rochester Business College.

—A leaf of pieplant which grew in Mrs. Ellen Rundell's garden measured 51 by 33 inches.

—There was a large attendance at Sid Reeves' barn dance Friday night, and everybody had a good time.

—The little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. P. Hopkins was quite seriously hurt by falling from a tree one day last week.

—Next Wednesday being the great national holiday, the postoffice will be open only upon the arrival and departure of the mails.

—Hon. M. C. Burch of Washington, D. C., Assistant U. S. Attorney has recently made a short visit with his nephew, A. M. Seekeel. Mr. Burch is on his way to the far northwest upon professional business for the government.—Union Springs Advertiser.

—Our last week's issue was so crowded with advertising matter that considerable news was of necessity omitted. However, such occurences are few and far between and the printer has to have an inning once in a while. That's what makes the wheels go round.

—Caroline Cushman, widow of of the late John Crawfoot, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. F. Streeter, at Venice on Monday, June 25, 1906, aged 83 years. She is survived by two sons and two daughters, who all reside in this vicinity. The funeral service was held at the Venice church Wednesday at 3 o'clock, with prayer at the residence at 2 o'clock.

—A newspaper man who is a student of the whys and wherefores interviewed thirty successful men and found that all of them when boys had been governed strictly and frequently thrashed He also interviewed thirty loafers and discovered that twenty-seven of them had been household pets without government and the other three grew up in the streets.

—Read Saperstein's ad.

—This weather is all right.

—Club dance at King Ferry next Monday evening, July 2.

—Boys, pick out your partners for the athletic events the 4th.

—Edgar H. Tifft of Ithaca is spending a few days with relatives in this vicinity.

—Mrs. Ai Lanterman is spending a few days of this week with friends at Groton.

—Prof. Clark and family have moved to Ensenore, not expecting to return to Genoa.

—See the window display of the Genoa clothing store; also the ad on the first page of this issue.

—Mrs. James Turney and daughter, Florence, and Miss Mayme Sullivan spent last week at Ithaca.

—On the second page of this issue you will find a summary of the events scheduled for the celebration here July 4th.

—The veterans of Southern Cayuga will hold their annual reunion at Cascade tomorrow, All veterans and their friends are invited.

Mrs. D. E. Singer will serve ice cream and cake at her parlors, July 4th. Better buy a dish.

—The editor inspected the garden of Mrs. Matilda Smith one day this week. It is as good as any in town and she has done all the work herself, except the plowing and fitting.

—Fix up a little for the 4th. Cut the grass along the streets. Have your flags etc. ready. Let's have the red, white and blue displayed from every house and business place.

—We would respectfully suggest that the men of the Presbyterian church get together some day and cut the grass, level the yard and make things look a little better around the premises. This suggestion is also extended to the owners and occupants of other village property.

—J B. Young died at his farm residence on the Indian Field road early Sunday morning, after a severe and paintul illness of several weeks. The funeral service was held at the Moravia home Tuesday afternoon under the auspices of Moravia Lodge, I. O. O F and assisted by Rev J. A. Rodger The profusion of beautiful flowers, the large attendance of bereaved relatives and friends and fraternal brethren, and the impressive service, signified with affecting force the esteem for the deceased as a man of honesty and integrity and strength of purpose. The interment was made in the beautiful cemetery at East Venice. The deceased is survived by the wife and one sister, Mrs. Jennie Hough of Batavia. Mr. Young was born in the town of Venice 78 years ago and later took up his residence in Genoa, and was prominently identified with the business and political interests of the village until some ten years since when he built a fine residence at Moravia and removed to that village.

—Miss Louie Mason is home from Auburn for a visit.

—Mrs. E. L. Karn of Ithaca is the guest of friends and relatives in this vicinity.

—Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Sill were recent guests of B. F. Sampson and wife of Cortland.

—Mrs. F. C. Purinton is spending some time with her daughter, Mrs. S. L. Purdie, at Brooklyn.

—A. T. Smith of Bellrown was in Genoa Saturday to meet two of his grandchildren from Freeville.

—The Groton Journal asks its readers, "Where are you going the Fourth?" Most everybody is coming to Genoa.

—Letters remain uncalled for at the post office as follows: Mrs. Patrick Doyle, L. E. Myers, two for Mrs E. Maynard.

—Thos. Sill has recovered from the attack of blood poisoning and is today killing a beef and preparing to reopen his market tomorrow.

—A post office inspector was in town the other day, looking up the robbery of last January. The case has not yet been abandoned by the authorities.

—Many residents of this village and vicinity spent all or part of the week at Auburn. The Old Home Week was a great event in the history of the county seat.

—Perry Conger is at Northfield, Mass., for a week. Mrs. Searles and Mrs. Kirby Sharpsteen of No. Lansing wern guests at W. Sharpsteen's Monday.—Groton Journal.

—Dowie's dupes in Zion City should be corralled in a paretic hospital. Of each $1,000 deposited in the prophet's bank the depositors will receive from 50 to 75 cents.

—Last week it was announced through THE TRIBUNE that there would be services at the Baptist church Sunday morning. After the paper was printed and circulated, the service was postponed until evening.

—At the last meeting of Willow Glen Union, 1637, American Society of Equity, George Boyer, J. G. Barger and A. S. Reeves were elected delegates to the county meeting to be held at Venice Center July 4

Go to Mrs. D. E. Singer's July 4 for good ice cream, bananas, fresh candy, etc.

—Mrs. Jennie Hough of Batavia has been a guest of her niece, Mrs E. H. Sharp, this week, having been called here by the death of her brother, Jesse B. Young. Miss Ruth Avery returned to Genoa with Mrs. Hough.

—The following officers were elected at the regular meeting of Genoa Star Lodge, 483, I. O. O. F. C. A. Ames, N. G.; Geo. Easson, V. G.; A. L. Loomis, secretary; C. Leonard, treasurer. The installation will take place July 11. C. A. Ames was elected delegate to the Grand Lodge, and Charles Baker alternate.

—We understand that work on the railroad continues and that the first car of freight over the road arrived at Mapleton Tuesday, being a carload of phosphate for C A. Morgan of Merrifield Let the good work go on! We hope they will stretch the rails to Venice Center in time to bring ten thousand people to the annual town picnic, and then on to Genoa in time for the fair,

—Since the program printed on page 2 was put in type a question of speed has developed between S. Wright and John C. Keefe, and so they will try it out on the Genoa track July 4th. Mr. Wright will start his fast mare, Susie W., and Mr. Keefe will start J. B. S., a well-known speedy nag. We are told there is a side issue of $50 on this event. Half-mile heats will be run, and this will make a race worth seeing. Add this to the program of events and see if you don't want to spend the Fourth at Genoa

THE WEDDING GIFT.

"Fair shines the sun; the breezes gently blow,
Blue are the skies, and life is all aglow,
When youth and maiden fair, midst gift and smile
Join fate to fate within the sacred pile"

In the wedding gift there is a chance to "lend a hand" in supplying the cargo of the "Skiff of Life." And it isn't a bad idea to be a bit practical about it, for it is the practical gift that is needed and wears.

In offering suggestions as to what to give in a case like this, we do it with the dining room in mind, because the gift given by the friend of bride or groom will be of use to either and thought of by both.

A sugar and creamer is an inexpensive, vastly practical gift—in daily use the year around, or a set of knives and forks, a bread tray, in fact, if you call and inspect A. T. HOYT'S elegant, exclusive stock, you cannot fail to find just what you wish to give. Let us show you the beautiful assortment we have in our cases. MORAL PRINCIPLE.

The Lack Is That Our Performances Cannot Keep Up with Our Ideals.

It is the fashion nowadays to deplore the general want of moral principle. We all continually deplore it. Why should we not? Yet as a matter of fact, there is rather more of moral principle abroad in the land than there ever was before, declares the New York Mail. Moral principle never cut so large a figure in the affairs of this American people as it does now. The number of offenses against the moral and legal codes has enormously increased. Our godly ancestors had one moral qualm where we have 20. It never occurred to them that a lottery was wrong, or that it was wicked to drink rum, or to whip a child or a wife, or to beat a horse or an ox within an inch of its life, or to enslave the black man and cheat and debauch the red man. Nine out of ten of the little conscientious niceties of life are discoveries of the last 50 years. More societies to do all sorts of good work and all kinds of reforms were created in the nineteenth century than had been formed or even thought of before, from the beginning of the world. Moral principle? We have vast stores of it—more, in fact, than we know what to do with. The trouble is that our performances cannot keep up with our principles. We realize bitterly the sad gap that exists between our moral ideals and our moral practices. But why should we be discouraged on that account? We have marked out a better road for our feet to follow than the mind of man ever dreamed before. All we have to do now is to travel it consistently. It is hard, but let us be glad at least that we have entered on the way.—Circleville (O.) Watchman.

MOROCCO AND ALCOHOL.

Attitude of the European Powers Upon a Question Vital to the Country's Welfare.

Mr. Cunningham Graham, well known as an authority on Moroccan affairs, has written to the press very strongly upon the subject of prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in Morocco. It will be remembered that at the Algeciras conference the other day, the Moorish delegate proposed that an almost prohibitive duty should be imposed upon the introduction of intoxicants into his country. The proposal was unanimously rejected "with mingled feelings of amusement and annoyance." That, says Mr. Graham, means: "That the concord of Europe is in favor of forcing the free entry of alcoholic liquors into a country in which their use is not only prohibited by custom, but also by religion. There are some who still remember, with shame, the forcing of opium on the Chinese at the point of the bayonet, in the name of Progress and Christianity." The Moors are surely decaying fast enough politically, says the National Advocate. It is for Europe to try and save them, and not to accelerate their ruin, by the imposition of an abominable traffic.

Effect of Alcohol.

Dr. Monro, of Glasgow, says: "Even after moderate quantities of alcohol the vessels of the skin dilate, and thus a larger quantity of blood is exposed to the cooling or heating influence of the surrounding medium. Men and animals after the imbition of alcohol are more at the mercy of their environment, for cold will no longer make their blood-vessels contract. On the other hand, we have reason to believe that when the surrounding air is warmer than the blood, alcohol will raise the temperature, such a result being facilitated by a co-incident diminution of perspiration. We may thus conclude that alcohol, in any dose, perhaps, lowers temperature when combined with external cold, and that it raises temperature when taken in a tropical atmosphere."

When Drink Habit Is Formed.

About a year and a half ago at a convention of saloon keepers in Ohio, a speaker said: "Men past 30 seldom acquire a drinking habit. It must be the boys trained to drink who will become our regular customers. Money judiciously expended now and then in treating boys will yield an exorbitant per cent. in the years to come."—Facts and Figures.

Following the Flag.

When our soldiers went to Cuba and the Philippines, health was the most important consideration. Willis T. Morgan, retired Commissary Sergeant U. S. A., of Rural Route 1, Concord, N. H., says: "I was two years in Cuba and two years in the Philippines, and being subject to colds, I took Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, which kept me in perfect health. And now, in New Hampshire, we find it the best medicine in the world for coughs, colds, bronchial troubles and all lung diseases. Guaranteed at J. S. Banker's, Genoa and A. E. BOSTON'S BACHELOR TAX.

Boston is seriously contemplating a tax on bachelors. It has a bureau of statistics that for lack of any other useful employment is considering what to do with the bachelors who furnish a part of its figures, and it decides that they must either be married or taxed out of existence.

But, here! Why should the law take it out on men alone? Why tax the bachelor when the spinster is allowed to live in the very shadow of the State House with her cats and nerves, responsible to nobody for her spinstership? As a result of taxing bachelors many a hitherto unmarried man will go sullenly to church and promise to support a woman—if he has figured it out that she comes cheaper than the tax; yet why not inspire a similar zeal for partnership among the women? Some bachelors will pay, any way, but a woman's instincts are more economical, and rather than draw her money out of the savings bank for such a purpose she will invade the bachelor apartment house with weapons and compel some resident to help her avoid the tax.—Boston Post.

AMERICAN TRADE IN RUSSIA.

It is, of course, unnecessary to believe that the action of the Czar and his advisers in removing the discriminating duties from American manufactures is simply a benefaction bestowed upon the people of the United States. Russia needs the American machinery. Famine and pestilence are abroad in that country. Throughout wide districts government aid must be bestowed upon the people to keep them from dying of starvation. New machinery for mills is necessary in order that Russian manufacturers may compete with those of Germany and other countries. Millions of rubles are to be paid out by the government for agricultural machinery in order that the starving peasants may raise crops. Interior works of various kinds are projected to bring prosperity to regions that now face hunger and are filled with mutterings of revolt. The Czar serves his country well by entering into friendly trade relations with the United States.

OUR 16,000-TON FLEET.

We have now afloat or under way, for the United States navy, eight battleships of the 16,000 ton class—the Connecticut, Louisiana, Kansas, Minnesota, New Hampshire, Vermont, South Carolina and Michigan. Of these, the Connecticut, Louisiana and Minnesota are well advanced. Their keels were laid in 1903.

It cuts no particular figure with us that the British navy vastly surpasses our own in its offensive mass, because in the providence of God there is no likelihood that it will ever be used against us. These ships are only to be mentioned because the British navy sets the pace in this kind of construction, and gives us an idea of the sort of naval standard toward which we have to work if we undertake to build battleships of the first class.

However, our eight 16,000 ton battleships will outclass, when completed, any eight ships of any other navy except that of Great Britain, so that we may consider that our rank in this respect is to be decidedly high.—New York Mail.

TSI ANN AS A REFORMER.

In September, 1898, the Empress Dowager, in the name of the conservatism of China, dethroned and imprisoned her nephew, the Emperor, because he had fallen under the influence of the reformers. She denounced all the innovations he had sought to introduce, and those of his friends that she did not capture and execute were driven into exile. But though she came into power to restore the old she has remained in power by conceding to the new. In less than three years she had substantially adopted her nephew's programme and has now gone beyond it. By the edict of August 29, 1901, it was ordered, to the amazement of the literati, that the essays of candidates for degrees should not be on some moot point of purely Chinese scholarship, relating to a remote past, but on such modern topics as western science, government, laws and police.

THE FUTURE OF RUSSIA.

Russia may be quite sure of escaping molestation that would threaten her at home so long as she does not provoke it by an aggressive foreign policy. There is no nation that covets any territory belonging to Russia and within her recognized boundaries. She has been wise enough to withstand any temptation to scatter her resources in unprofitable colonial ventures. Her expansion policy has been that of acquiring contiguous, not isolated, territory. Her forces are not scattered all over the earth in spots that have to be defended even when they do not make any adequate return for the cost. She has not cultivated the foolish notion that trade follows the flag. She knows that it does not, unless the flag is converted into a symbol of arbitrary, selfish and exclusive opportunity.—Boston Herald.

"Nothing but bombs," says a professor of the University of Finland, "makes an impression on the Russian bureaucrats." "Impression" certainly is a mild word to use, particularly if the bomb explodes under the carriage of the victim.

Says a great critic: "Humor has never yet won a battle, built a city or bred a horse." Of course not. It has only averted battles, made cities fit to live in and enabled people to get along happily without horses.

Various Views of Charlotte Corday.

The contemporaries of Charlotte Corday, said Dr. Cabanes, have thought that "her complexion had the transparency of milk, the carnation of roses and the velvetiness of peaches." They have thought also that "she was not pretty. Her face was hard, insolent and as if marked with erysipelas." One witness says that "Mlle. Corday was not handsome, but her expression was so sweet, so sweet!" Some say that she was tall rather than small; others say that she was tall; many say that she was decidedly small. Her passport makes her height five feet one inch. Her hair, according to an official document, was chestnut; according to another official document it was blond; Mme. Hauer, wife of the painter who made Charlotte's portrait, says that her hair was "cendre"—that is, mouse or drab or ash colored. Abbe Dinone, who had a lock of her hair, says that it was "neither red nor 'cendre.'" Dr. Cabanes says decisively that she was beautiful, of average height, and that her hair was chestnut. History, founded on authentic documents, says that her expression was sweet and sour; that her complexion was of milk and roses and marked at the same time as by erysipelas, and she was of tall, small and medium height; that she was blond, dark and neither dark nor blond. History is a science.

The Wonderful Parasol Ant.

The greatest known curiosity of insect life, as far as habits are concerned at least, is to be found in the queer "parasol" or "umbrella" ant, so common in all parts of tropical America from Texas to Venezuela. The common name by which the creature is known has been bestowed because of a queer habit this species of ant has of stripping certain kinds of trees and shrubs of their foliage and carrying the leaves to their nests. An army of these ants which have been off on a foraging expedition present the queerest sight imaginable as they march in long columns by twos, fours and sixes, each holding the stem of a leaf in his jaws, the leaf itself shading the little insect's body like a parasol does the face and shoulders of a lady. The early naturalists imagined that these ants carried leaves for the sole purpose of protecting themselves against the rays of the tropical sun, but investigation shows that they have another use for the bits of green they gather. The leaves are only wanted as soil upon which to grow a certain species of fungi of which the parasol ant is very fond.

THRICE-A-WEEK WORLD.

For the autumn season now at hand the most valuable paper to you will be the New York Thrice a-week World, because it offers you more at the price than any other paper published anywhere in the world.

This is a time of great events. We are having great wars, and other changes of a stirring kind are occurring both at home and abroad. The Thrice a-Week World comes to you every other day except Sunday with all the news fully, accurately and promptly told.

The Thrice a Week World is fair in its political reports. You can get the truth from its columns whether you are a Republican or a Democrat, and that is what you want.

The Thrice-a-Week World always has a serial story running and it is always a first class story by a first class author. It publishes better fiction than any other newspaper in the United States. Special attention is also given to markets and there are many other valuable features. The regular subscription price is only $1, and that pays for 156 papers. We offer this unequalled newspaper and THE GENOA TRIBUNE together one year for only $1 65. The regular price for the two papers is $2

A PUMPKIN-YELLOW WALL.

Recommended for a Summer Home with Mission Furniture—About Other Decoration.

This is an excellent wall paper color for a summer home room furnished in the mission furniture. The wood trims about the room should be stained some dark hue, such as weathered or fumed oak, to correspond with the dark tone of the furniture. In this case the best color to use at the windows is yellow like the paper.

The paper chosen may be cartridge, burlap may be put on the walls and stained, or the walls may be rough plastered and sanded, and then tinted. This last is most satisfactory. It is especially to be recommended where mission furniture is used, for it seems particularly well adapted to the simplicity of construction expressed by the straight line furniture. In addition to this it has the advantage of being the cheapest form of wall treatment available. If this method of decoration be adopted, a plate rail may be used on the walls two-thirds of the distance from the floor, and above that a lighter tint of yellow will make a most agreeable contrast and do away with the necessity of a frieze.

If the room is of awkward height, either too low or too high, some of the modern designs in stripes are particularly useful. Should the room be too high the stripes ought not to go to the ceiling, but should end some distance below it, and at this point a picture molding should be applied. If the room is too low the reverse treatment should be applied, and the paper carried over on the molding on the ceiling for a few inches. In this case no molding should be used, and the furniture should be kept away from the walls.

The use of advancing colors like reds or yellows will tend to make the room look smaller and more cheerful, particularly if it have a cold exposure while the use of the receding colors, blues or greens, will give the room an appearance of increased size, and help tone down the often too vivid light.—Chicago Tribune.

THE NOISE CATCHER OF PLEASANT TOWN

Until Simon Growlerly arrived in Pleasant Town, everybody agreed that it was the most delightful place in the United States. There were no factory whistles, the railroad was so far away that the noise of its tooting sounded only like an agreeable distant echo.

A person might stay in Pleasant Town a year and never hear a sound except the rustling of trees and the drone of insects.

But all this was changed when Simon Growlerly appeared.

The people of Pleasant Town were shocked beyond description when they discovered that his object was to build a great boiler shop right in the middle of the town. They tried to buy him out, but the minute Simon Growlerly found that the noise would displease all the people very much, he was bound and determined to erect his works. This shows just what kind of a man he was.

When things seemed to be about as bad as they could be, Simon Growlerly announced that he was going to run his boiler shop night and day, and he hired one hundred more men. Then the babies and the grown people could not sleep, and it looked as if everybody would have to move away and leave the town to the mean boiler manufacturer, but just then Dick Sawyer, who was accounted the smartest boy in the place, came out with a wonderful invention that he had perfected in secret.

It was nothing more or less than a Noise Catcher. Dick Sawyer placed the queer machine near the Growlerly boiler factory and wound up a great spring that set all the parts to buzzing, very quietly and musically. The moment this happened the noise from the boiler factory vanished as if by magic and the only sounds that could be heard throughout all the place were the good old sounds of rustling trees and buzzing insects. The wonderful machine caught all the noise and conducted it into a huge cylinder of wax, which was inside of the contrivance.

Old Simon Growlerly was furious when he saw what Dick had done, for he not only liked to irritate people with the noise, but he had been calculating that the inhabitants would be glad to sell him their houses cheap, and now he found his plans upset by a mere sixteen-year-old lad.

After eight months of this, Simon Growlerly announced that he was going to build a shop to make steam whistles.

Dick and his chum, Bob Merritt, were talking things over one night when Bob said suddenly:

"I've got a splendid idea! Follow me."

They hurried to the Noise Catcher and began to move it toward the outskirts of the town where Simon Growlerly lived in a beautiful big house.

The next morning when he looked out of his window, he was amazed to see the Noise Catcher erected opposite his house on a vacant piece of land owned by Bob's father. Shortly afterward, Dick and Bob knocked at the door and without wasting any words told old Growlerly that they had come to ask him not to build the steam whistle factory or any other noisy shop in Pleasant Town. Simon Growlerly lay back in his chair and laughed till he was purple in the face.

"You boys must be crazy!" said he.

Dick and Bob merely hurried to the Noise Catcher and wound it up. Then they ran away with all their might, stuffing their ears with cotton as they ran.

The next moment the Noise Catcher gave forth positively the very worst noise that ever had been heard in the world.

All the windows of the Growlerly house burst into fragments at the very first revolution of the great cylinder. The wall paper split from the walls. The plaster fell in a shower. The weather vane and the lightning rods twisted. The cattle fell flat and didn't even dare to bellow. Old Growlerly himself fell into a fit.

When he awoke, Dick and Bob were standing over him. "The next performance on the great Noise Catcher," said Dick, "will be only an hour's noise, given forth by the machine in one second. How do you think that you will enjoy it?"

But old Growlerly didn't think that he would enjoy it at all. He got on his knees and begged Dick to take the machine away. He promised to stop his boiler factory and to never build another noisy shop in Pleasant Town or anywhere else, if only Dick would not turn the Noise Catcher loose again.

Dick got him to put his promise into writing, and then he gave the wax cylinder to old Growlerly, who promptly threw it into the fire, where it melted away, and thus did away with all danger of ever letting go of that terrible noise that it held. —New York News.

Archie's Little Mother

"I want my muzzer! Where's my muzzer gone?" "There is nothing in nature so helpless as a little child," thought the gentleman, who was passing along the street, and stopped to listen to the piping voice that sounded from almost under his feet.

He looked down and saw a mite of a boy, in very short frocks, with long yellow curls and a face flushed with tears.

He was evidently in the greatest distress, and when the gentleman extended a hand the little fellow clutched it at once.

"I want my muzzer!" he wailed again.

"Are you lost?" asked the gentleman.

"No; me ain't lost," answered the little one, quickly—"muzzer's lost."

"The poor child has been deserted," said the gentleman to himself, when the boy set up a cry "Muzzer! Here tums muzzer!"

At the same time, a girl, not much larger than the baby boy, came running across the street and caught the lost one by the arms.

"You bad boy!" she cried, "to run away from us that way. Haven't I got enough to worry me now?"

The gentleman looked on with a smile.

"Is this your brother?" he asked.

"Yes, this is Archie," she answered, with the gravity of a grown woman.

"But he called you his mother?"

"So I am," said the girl, in a matter-of-fact way; "ain't I, Archie?"

"Yes," said Archie, promptly, "you'se my muzzer."

"And where is his real mother?" asked the gentleman.

"Marm goes out washin' every day," replied the little mother. patting Archie softly on the head, "and I take care of brother."

"And where is father?"

"Father's dead, long ago. Brother Billy sells papers, and I do the housework and mind Archie. I'm mother to Billy, as well as Archie, when marm's away."

"How old are you?"

"I'm nine next March? Billy's ten last June, and Archie ain't three yet."

"Don't you get tired being mother?"

"'Course I do; but what of it? 'Spect I've got to do the best I can. Pretty soon Billy is goin' to have a stand, and after awhile a store, and we'll live upstairs, I reckon. Then I'll have a chance to go to school."

"And you never have any fun?"

"Don't I, though! I was on two excursions given by the rich ladies, and I have heaps of fun, playin' round the streets, when it don't rain or snow or get too cold. Arcie's real good now, since he's cut all his teeth and got over the measles."

Then she gave a sudden start as the city clock struck twelve.

"My! I've got to go! Billy will be home for dinner, hungry as an elephant."

The gentleman slipped a coin in her hand.

"Something to buy candy for Archie," he said.

"My goodness!" cried the little mother, "you're good, you are! Thankee! Come along, Archie, we're going to see Brother Billy."

"All right, muzzer," assented Archie, and away the pair trotted merrily.—Golden Days.

The White Rabbit's Circle.

A wildcat, roaming disconsolately in the woods, longed for companionship. There were no other cats near, and he felt very lonely.

Suddenly it occurred to him that there might be plenty of white rabbits around, and that he felt hungry as well as lonesome. So the big wildcat began to sing a plaintive song, the burden of which was: "Oh, my sweet white rabbit, when you are scared you run in a circle."

A white rabbit heard him, and said to itself: "Ho, ho! That dangerous fellow, the wildcat, is about, is he? Well, I will show him that I do not run in a circle."

So off the rabbit started, and ran with all his might. Then he heard the song, nearer than before, and off he started again. Several times he did this, and each time the song seemed nearer. You see, the rabbit had formed the bad habit of running in a circle, and now he could run no other way, try as he might.

So he kept circling on ever getting nearer to the wildcat, until at last the cat, with a final burst of melody, said: "Oh, my sweet white rabbit, when you are scared you run in a circle," and pounced upon him and had him for supper.

This is the story the Indians tell, and it shows how a bad habit gets so fastened on one that, even to save his life, he cannot break it.

Knicker—Has Smith's auto every convenience?

Bocker—Yes; he carries his own cop to arrest him and his own judge to try him.

You cannot induce a lower animal to eat heartily when not feeling well. A sick dog starves himself, and gets well. The stomach, once overworked, must have rest the same as your feet or eyes. You don't have to starve to rest your stomach. KODOL FOR DYSPEPSIA takes up the work for your stomach, digests what you eat and gives it a rest. Puts it back in condition again. You can't feel good with a disordered stomach. Try Kodol. Sold by J. S. Banker.

A PUBLIC DANGER.

How Cities in England and Scotland Are Warning People Against Drink.

In view of the increasing interest taken by municipalities in England and Scotland in the question of public health as affected by the use of intoxicating liquor, many of the cities and large towns have decided to issue large posters in their respective areas in order to warn the people against the use of alcohol. Several of the London borough councils, Liverpool, Leeds, Tunbridge Wells in England, Glasgow and Dundee Scotland, are among the places that have taken such action. The trade has raised an action in the law courts in order to arrest the spread of the movement. The following is the form of poster issued by the city of Dundee, which is typical of that issued by other municipalities:

CITY OF DUNDEE.

PHYSICAL DETERIORATION AND ALCOHOLISM.

The report of the committee, presented to Parliament by command of His Majesty, states that:

The abuse of alcoholic stimulants is a most potent and deadly agent of physical deterioration.

Alcoholic persons are specially liable to tuberculosis and all inflammatory disorders.

Evidence was placed before the committee showing that in abstinence is to be sought the source of muscular vigor and activity.

The lunacy figures show a large and increasing number of admissions of both sexes which are due to drink.

The following facts recognized by the medical profession are published in order to carry out the recommendation of the committee and to bring home to men and women the fatal effects of alcohol on physical efficiency:

(a) Alcoholism is a chronic poisoning resulting from the habitual abuse of alcohol (whether as spirits, wine, or beer), which may never go as far as drunkenness.

(b) It is a mistake to say that stimulants are necessary for those doing hard work.

(c) Alcohol is really a narcotic, dulling the nerves, like laudanum or opium. Its first effect is to weaken a man's self-control while his passions are excited; hence the number of crimes which occur under its influence.

(d) For persons in ordinary health the practice of drinking even the milder alcoholic drinks apart from meals is most injurious.

(e) The habit of drinking to excess leads to the ruin of families, the neglect of social duties, disgust for work, misery, theft, and crime. It leads also to the hospital, for alcohol produces the most various and the most fatal diseases, including paralysis, insanity, diseases of the stomach and liver and dropsy. It also paves the way to consumption, and frequenters of public houses furnish a large proportion of the victims of this disease. It complicates and aggravates all acute diseases; typhoid fever, pneumonia and erysipelas are much more fatal in the subject of alcoholism.

(f) The sins of parents who have drunk to excess are visited on the children, both morally and physically.

(g) In short, alcoholism is the most terrible enemy to personal health ,to family happiness ,and to national prosperity. William Longair, Lord Provost; Chas. Templeman, M. D., S. Sc., Medical Officer of Health; Wm. H. Blyth Martin, Town Clerk.

Town House, Dundee, January, 1906.

Prohibition in Kansas.

Dr. Charles M. Sheldon recently declared that the majority for prohibition is larger in Kansas to-day than in 1880. Letters read from Gov. Hoch and Congressman Scott stated the benefits of prohibition. Among other facts mentioned were these: Eighty-five counties of 105 have no paupers, 35 county jails have no prisoners, and one jail is used by farmers to store corn. A quarter of a million people 20 years of age or more have never seen a saloon. He stated that in his journey from Topeka to Hartford he saw more drunken men and boys than in his 17 years' residence in Kansas.

How It Feels.

A widely traveled gentleman lately said: "It is somewhat interesting to note the various ways in which intoxicants affect the various nationalities. Having traveled to a considerable extent I have perceived that when a Frenchman has had too much, he wants to dance; a German to sing; a Spaniard to gamble; a Britisher to eat; an Italian to brag; an Irishman to fight; and—an American to deliver a speech."—Champion of Fair Play.

Without Drink Mob Impossible.

Let there be an abstinence from intoxicating drinks throughout this country during the period of a single generation and a mob would be as impossible as combustion without oxygen.—Horace Mann.

The Light of a Cigarette.

As a light to illuminate a boy's path to the saloon door a cigarette excels electricity.
