Sherwood.

Oct. 26—The Poplar Ridge correspondent to the Auburn Daily Advertiser gave so good an account of the Republican rally at Sherwood last Thursday that it needs but little addition. However we are all quite as liable to mistakes as the speaker mentioned in said article. S. G. Otis does not happen to be town committeeman but is president of the Sherwood Republican club, and do not think, dear readers, that 10,000 people witnessed the great event. Another serious mistake on the part of our friend from Poplar Ridge I'd like to correct. It is not practice the Sherwood band needs, but a new director. They are thinking seriously of trying to obtain the services of the Poplar Ridge correspondent, in fact he may look for a call at any time. No doubt with his leadership they will soon reach a point of perfection where they may be able to waft even him through the pearly gates, provided St. Peter has his back turned. But to lay aside their "fatigued uniforms" and all their other deficiencies I will say this in their favor, they were all sober and not one of them was ever guilty of "stopping a clock."

How To Gain Flesh

Persons have been known to gain a pound a day by taking an ounce of Scott's Emulsion. It is strange, but it often happens.

Somehow the ounce produces the pound; it seems to start the digestive machinery going properly, so that the patient is able to digest and absorb his ordinary food which he could not do before, and that is the way the gain is made.

A certain amount of flesh is necessary for health; if you have not got it you can get it by taking

The Scrap Book

Mistaken Courtesy.

A guileless rustic who wished to be employed on an English railway emerged from the examination room and informed his expectant father that he had failed because he was color blind.

"But you can't have!" said his father. "You're no more color blind than I am."

"I know that, feyther," he replied, "but it's all through bein' polite."

"What do you mean? Explain yourself."

"Well, feyther, I went into a room, and a chap held somethin' up for me to look at. 'This is green, isn't it?' ses he. 'Come, now, you're positive it's green?' quite pleading-like, and, though I could see plain enough that it wor red, I couldn't find it in my heart to tell him so. So I agreed with him, and they bundled me out. No more perliteness for me. It don't pay."

SOWING THE SEED.

Some are sowing the seed of word and deed,
Which the cold know not nor the careless heed,
Of the gentle word and the kindly deed
That hath blessed the earth in its sorest need.
Sweet will the harvest be.

And some are sowing the seed of pain,
Of dire remorse and a maddened brain,
And the stars shall fall and the sun shall wane
Ere they root the weeds from the soil again.
Dark will the harvest be.

All Right Either Way.

General Dabney H. Maury tells in his "Recollections of a Virginian" of an old lady in Fredericksburg who was reduced to taking in boarders in order to make both ends meet. On one occasion of peculiar stress the larder was so empty that the good lady took to her bed and summoned her servant. "Nancy," she said, "there's nothing in the house for my boarders to eat except mush. But give them that. If they are Christians they will accept it in resignation and thankfulness, and if they are not Christians it is a deal too good for them."

Lamartine's Modesty.

Lamartine in 1848 was at the acme of his glory and a cabinet minister. He had just contributed "La Marseillaise de la Paix" to the Revue des Deux Mondes, and Buloz, the editor, called on him at the ministry. "I believe I owe you 2,000 francs. Here is the money," said Lamartine, producing a bundle of bank notes.

"Pray deduct the amount of the Revue's indebtedness to you for your poem," said the editor.

"I meant to make you a present of it," rejoined the poet.

"Not at all. I insist upon paying you."

"How much?"

"Your own price, whatever it may be."

"Ah, well, if you will have it so I must oblige you," said Lamartine, and, with a magnificent gesture, he swept up the whole bundle of notes representing the 2,000 francs and restored them, with solemn dignity, to his pocket.

Grew Some.

A keeper in a zoo was feeding the pythons. Several live rabbits were tossed into the cage and were immediately and greedily seized by the reptiles. The struggling rabbits, although seemingly almost as large as the snakes, were swallowed whole one after another. The grisly sight prompted the scholarly looking man to exclaim:

"Grewsome, eh, keeper?"

The keeper turned a glance of scorn upon the professor:

"Yaas, and you'd 'a' grew some, too, if you'd e't all that live stock, I guess."

A Parting Shot.

Two young persons had been engaged, had quarreled, but were too proud to "make up." Furthermore, both were anxious to have it believed they had entirely forgotten each other.

One day the young man called, ostensibly on business with her father, on which occasion it chanced she should answer the doorbell.

The young man was game. "Pardon me," he said, with the politest of bows—"Miss Eaton, I believe. Is your father in?"

"I am sorry to say he is not," the young woman responded without the slightest sign of recognition. "Do you wish to see him personally?"

"Yes," replied the young man as he turned to go down the steps.

"I beg your pardon," called out the young woman as he reached the lowest step, "but who shall I say called?"

Effects of Reason.

Reason, like the magnetic influence imparted to iron, gives to matter properties and powers which it possessed not before, but without extending its bulk, augmenting its weight or altering its organization. Like that to which I have compared it, it is visible only by its efforts and perceptible only by its operations.—Caleb C. Colton.

Fleeing From Fate.

An English village rector while walking out one day noticed an old man in front of him hobbling along as fast as his legs could carry him and apparently trying to escape him. Seeing that it was one of his congregation, who had not been to church of late, the vicar hurried after him.

"Hello, John!" said he. "How is it that I haven't seen you at church lately?"

At first the rector could get nothing out of him, but after a little persuasion he said:

"Well, zir, it be your youngest darter, Nelly, I be afeared of."

"What! Afraid of Nelly, a girl of nineteen and only just returned from school?"

"Yes, zir. You see," replied John, "when I went a-cortin' an old forchin teller told me as 'ow I should be spliced three times, first to a black an' then to a yeller an' then to a ginger. Now, when I buried my poor yeller Sally three months ago an' your darter wi' the ginger 'air comed 'ome from schule I says to myself, I says: 'That's 'er. That's the ginger 'un, an' if I don't keep away from church she'll nab me.'"

In a Bad Way.

The English spoken by the "Pennsylvania Dutch," as the inhabitants of certain districts in the eastern part of the state are popularly known, affords some rare specimens of expression. A man who was passing a small house on the outskirts of "Sous Besselem"—that is the nearest possible spelling of the local pronunciation—heard the daughter of the family calling her brother in to supper. "George," she said, "you come right in now. Pa's on the table, and ma's half et!"

A Careful Man.

When Dawson reached town he was suddenly seized with a terrific toothache, and he flew to a dentist. Investigation showed that the tooth was in such a condition that the only way to extract it comfortably was to put the sufferer under the influence of gas. Consequently Dawson threw himself back in the chair, and the tube was applied. He did not succumb any too readily, but in the course of time he was sleeping peacefully, and the offending molar was removed.

"How much, doctor?" asked the patient after the ordeal was over.

"Ten dollars," said the dentist, business being dull.

"Ten dollars!" roared Dawson.

"Yes, sir," said the dentist. "It was an unusually hard job getting that tooth out, and you required twice the ordinary amount of gas."

"Humph!" ejaculated Dawson as he paid up. "Here's your money, but I tell you right now the next time I take gas from you you've got to put a meter on me."—Harper's Weekly.

"Ours."

Today a woman's property is sacred—at any rate as sacred as a man's. A certain host remarked before his guests lately that he would send his motor to the station to meet So-and-so.

"Our motor," corrected the hostess, who wants tone.

As the lady had actually bought the motor, the correction was severe and rankled. Next morning the host came down very late to breakfast. He was chaffed about this and explained: "I'm sorry. The fact is I mislaid our trousers."

Little Courtesies.

William Wirt's letter to his daughter on the "small, sweet courtesies of life" contains a passage from which a deal of happiness might be learned: "I want to tell you a secret. The way to make yourself pleasing to others is to show them attention. The whole world is like the miller at Mansfield, who cared for nobody—no, not he—because nobody cared for him. And the whole world would serve you so if you gave them the same cause. Let every one, therefore, see that you do care for them by showing them what Sterne so happily calls the small courtesies, in which there is no parade, whose voice is too still to tease and which manifest themselves by tender and affectionate looks and little acts of attention, giving others the preference in every little enjoyment at the table, in the field, walking, sitting or standing."

Chopin's Kick.

Chopin hated playing at social festivities. To a lady who after the dinner asked him to play he melancholically answered: "Is it really necessary? I ate only so little."

Schoolmates.

A conductor sent a new brakeman to put some tramps off the train. They were riding in a box car. The brakeman dropped into the car and said, "Where are you fellows going?" "To Atchison." "Well, you can't go to Atchison on this train, so get off." "You get!" came the reply. And as the new brakeman was looking into the business end of a gun he took the advice given him and "got." He went back to the caboose, and the conductor asked him if he had put the fellows off. "No," he answered. "I did not have the heart to put them off. They want to go to Atchison, and, besides, they are old schoolmates of mine." The conductor used some strong language and then said he would put them off himself. He went over to the car and met with the same experience as the brakeman. When he got back to the caboose the brakeman said, "Well, did you put them off?" "Naw; they're schoolmates of mine too."

An Unfortunate Participle.

A college professor who preferred the participle "gotten" to "got" telegraphed to his wife: "Have gotten tickets for the theater tonight. Meet me there."

The telegraph operator rendered this into "Have got ten tickets," etc.

Mrs. Professor was delighted with the opportunity of entertaining her friends and accordingly made up a party of eight besides herself, whose greetings to the professor at the rendezvous were probably more cordial than his feeling until matters were explained. He now makes an exception to his customary use of "gotten."

Saturday Night Talks

By REV. F. E. DAVISON, Rutland, Vt.

THE FAST YOUNG MAN.

Nov. 1, '08.—(2 Sam. 15.)

The pen picture which is drawn in the Scriptures of the fast young man is exceeding graphic. Absolem was handsome in form and feature, elegant in apparel, courtly in manners, adventurous, hearty, enthusiastic, so rich and yet so affable; so high-born, and yet so gracious, the very prince of good fellows, genial, generous, "good hearted." He was like his successor of to-day. On the street corner, in the lobby of the theatre, in the bar room and the club room, you encounter him. Radiant and rubicund, winning in his manner and lavish with his money he seems to the unsophisticated the very beau-ideal of young American manhood. He flourishes his cane and puffs his cigarette, and flashes his diamonds and speeds his automobile to the envy of honest men and the delight of silly women, and yet, is utterly base. Absolem, given over to lust and extravagance and love of display, was ready in order to carry his point to be guilty of the basest perfidy, even to redden his hands in his own father's blood.

Hair or Brains.

So with the fast young man of modern times. Pride of personal appearance is the chief thing with him. All Jerusalem knew just how much Absolem's hair weighed, when once a year the barber clipped it, and many a Jewish maiden raved over his abundant locks, and felt highly honored if she secured a curl. In those days, just as now, some men were noted for what was on their heads, others were conspicuous for what was in them. Absolem had plenty of hair on his head, but it was bald inside. So the fast young man of this century keeps his clothes up to date, but not his morals. He changes his opinions as readily as he does his shoes. His ideas are as variegated as his neckties. His friends are as transient as his fashions. With him the object to be gained is the chief thing; as to the methods he is indifferent. If a kind act will gain his purpose, he will use it; if a trick or a lie will suit better, he uses that. He is smooth, artful, insidious, soft as the south wind, to those whose help he needs, cruel as a tempest to those who bar his way—in politics, trade or society, he is a scourge, a nuisance and a pest.

If such a young man enters society, let innocence and beauty fly into hiding. The vulture is as devoid of pity. When he enters a pure home, muffle the bell, drape the door in black—death has already come. With winning speech and charming address he will call forth affection, he will pose as an angel of light, he will garb himself in the livery of heaven, he will wear a mask until his true character has been discovered, when he will pass on to fresh conquests, counting it nothing that a trusting heart is broken and a sweet life left in desolation.

Born Politician.

Sometimes the fast young man has an inclination toward politics. Absolem did. He was a born politician. Not a statesman,—there was not an ounce of statesmanship in his make-up—but a sly, sleek, wiley, crooked, underhanded, scheming, pot-house machine manipulator. He made it his business to corrupt men. He sat at the city gate, shook hands like an alderman, smiled, asked after the family, knew everybody, and called them by their given name, judged them promptly, and then merely hinted that it might be an advantage if there was a change in administration and a younger man were king. And so he sat and hinted, and shook hands and smiled, until thousands were drawn away from their allegiance to David. The reptile! His fair exterior was but the glistening of the serpent's coil. His words were honey but the poison of asps was under his tongue.

Such is the picture of the heir apparent to the throne of Israel. Fortunate indeed it was for the kingdom that the fast young man came to a miserable end, before he reached the goal of his ambition. Not all fast young men are of just this villainous type, but the tendency of such a life is to lead down to the depths of shame, and burn out every trace of virtue and native nobleness. Fortunate those who are warned and stop in time. To have a rich father, and have nothing to do but eat and drink and dress and drive, seems to many a condition highly desirable. But in too many cases it is the most damning thing that can happen to a boy. A fortune is in a multitude of instances, a positive misfortune. The young man who can develop real manhood, in such environment is like the fabled salamander, able to live in fire. It was not in anger but in mercy that the creator ordained that man should eat bread in the sweat of his face. It is evermore true that honest toil is good for the mind, the muscle, and the morals. Never from rock or headland did beacon gleam with clearer light than that which flashes from the career of the dissolute Absolem, to warn young men of the perils that lie before them.

SHORT SERMON FOR A SUNDAY HALF-HOUR

By Charles F. Aked, D. D.

[By the Rev. Charles F. Aked, D. D., Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, New York.]

The Advantages of Disadvantages.

And Moses put forth his hand, and laid hold of the serpent, and it became a rod in his hand.—Exodus iv., 4.

He put forth his hand, and the serpent, dangerous, destructive, deadly, became a rod, a stay, a support, a defence. In the hand of a strong man, the pernicious thing became beneficient.

This is God's way in nature. The supremely destructve forces of the universe are among the supremely great and supremely blessed of the educative agencies of life. Man has entered into conflict with them, and contending with them has grown strong and wise.

Where nature is prodigal of her bounty, where a suit of clothes grows on every tree and a dinner is found under every bush, man slumbers. Where nature enters into conflict with man, bids him try conclusions with this old earth, its storms and seas, surrounds him with hardship and hazard, he finds himself. He puts forth his hand and the serpent becomes a rod.

But these forces of nature have their terrors. They crush, maim, blind, burn, destroy, overwhelm, appall. And so man becomes not only stronger and a cunninger man but a better man. He is educated by adversity and his heart is educated not less than his head. He learns pity. He enters into compassion. He develops philanthropy. The shipwreck launches the lifeboat. Living men in our port hasten to die, that dying men across the bar may live. The plague is stopped because the bacteriologist has lived and loved and died.

God's way in nature, God's way in history, is God's way for each one of us in our own life. Let us grasp the serpent that it may become a rod.

On the bank of my native Trent I have seen some townsman, magnificently equipped, with outfit that must have cost a little fortune, fling his line in vain. The shadows of evening fell and his face lengthened, and there was never a fish in his creel. And beside him a ragged rascal of a village school boy, with bare feet and unwashed hands, with his home made rod and twopenny line, and penny float and halfpenny tackle, swinging out the reach and dace and greedy perch at almost every swing." These things are written allegorically!" It s not the costliest outfit that takes the biggest fish.

Cardinal Wolsey, Daniel De Foe and Henry Kirke White—it would be impossible to name in a breath three men more unlike one another—were all the sons of butchers. Jeremy Taylor, one of the greatest of English preachers; Richard Arkwright, the real founder of our cotton industries, and Turner, the painter, were all barbers. John Bunyan was a tinker, Robert Burns a ploughman, Ben Jonson a bricklayer. George Stephenson was an engine fireman and taught himself arithmetic on the side of colliery wagons. Wilkie learned art with a piece of chalk and a barn door. West made his first brushes out of a cat's tail. Watt constructed his first model out of an old syringe. Humphrey Davy extemporized his scientific appliances from kitchen pots and pans and Faraday his from glass bottles. Elihu Burritt mastered eighteen ancient and modern languages while earning his living as a blacksmith.

Believe, then, that neither feeble health, nor cramping poverty, nor crushing sorrow, nor accomplished sin, nor evil habits need paralyze the aspirations of your essential manhood, nor quench its immortality. Put forth your hand, my brother, and the serpent shall become a rod!

Be Cheerful.

"A light heart lives long." Think only healthful thoughts. As he thinketh in his heart, so is he." "Seek peace, and pursue it." "Work like a man, but don't be worked to death. Avoid anger and excitement; a moment's anger may be fatal." Associate with healthy people; health is contagious as well as disease. "Don't carry the whole load on your shoulders, far less the universe; trust the Eternal." Never despair; "Lost hope is fatal disease." "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."

The Life Beyond.

The man who falls down flat in one place, may flourish like a palm tree in the next.

By Clarence Wallace.

"Well" whispered Marion to me, 'I guess it doesn't make any difference if we did have to wear silk gowns that you washed, turned, mended and made over. Guess what I just heard."

"What did you just hear?" I asked.

"Why," proceeded Marion, delightedly, "I was standing over by those ferns a minute ago and just round the corner I heard Mrs. Lewis say to Claudie Brooks: 'I don't see how the Harcourt girls manage to dress so well,' and Claudia—spiteful old thing—said: 'I think they ought to be ashamed; everybody knows they can't afford it.' But just then that grand looking Mr. Maxwell came over to them and it wasn't two minutes before I heard him ask who that striking girl with the red roses in her hair was. That was you, Eleanor. Now aren't you flattered?"

"Dreadfully," I answered. "Anything more?"

"Yes, indeed," whispered Marion. "The best of it all was that he asked right away if you were one of the

MRS. LEWIS WAS ANGRY.

Harcourts who had owned the old place up town, and he asked her—Oh, look!"

Marion's volubility was checked at this point by the appearance of the already mentioned Mr. Maxwell with our hostess on his arm. He was a grave, handsome man, about 30, I thought, and after Mrs. Lewis had presented him he sat down beside me. He had talked about a good many things and had almost wearied of my monosyllabic replies, I fancy, when he finally brought up Harcourt, and I proceeded to astonish him by forgetting that we were strangers, and telling him the most ridiculous things with characteristic recklessness. I told him how we, Marion and I, went a round about way to avoid passing the dear old place, and how, when there was no way out of it, we went by with our heads turned away, because we loved it so. I told him we had been born there and that every big room and every dingy panel brought up a memory that we loved. And it was not until Marion came for me to go home that I realized that he had listened to me silently for about an hour, and that Mrs. Lewis was angry with me for monopolizing the lion of the evening. I went home terribly ashamed and convinced that notwithstanding that he looked very sympathetic, he was probably shocked.

But some days later, after Mr. Maxwell called with Mrs. Lewis and was so nice, I guess he didn't mind after all. And in the weeks following he came frequently and we met at several places. Somehow I told that man everything—I couldn't seem to help it. He always knew just when to smile, and I never said a silly thing to cover up a deeper feeling in all those weeks that I did not see sympathy and understanding in his face. Well, it was a pleasant time, as I remember it, and I got to thinking a good deal about him and to liking him very much. There was only one thing to dampen our pleasure. One day the news came to us that Mr. Griffin, who held a mortgage upon Harcourt, had sold it to strangers, and Marion and I told ourselves that from that time our claim upon it would be only that of any outsiders, who might look at its dear old walls and pass it by. As I say, this darkened our lives a little, but there were still Mr. Maxwell's visits to look forward to, so it was worth while existing But one evening when he called he said: "Miss Eleanor, I am going away tomorrow and I want you to do something for me. Will you?"

"I don't know," I answered in a low voice. Somehow I couldn't for the life of me manage anything else. But he didn't seem to notice that I said nothing about regretting his going away. He simply asked me if I would go down to Harcourt with him. I was too miserable to resist, and we went.

My heart beat heavily as we walked up the dear old oak avenue, and when we had mounted the broad steps and opened the door I could not see the familiar dim old hall because my eyes were blinded with tears. "Oh, well," thought I, as I stealthily dried them away, "you're a dear old place, but you're nothing to me now, and I've got no right to cry about you." But later, when we went up to the long hall above and found that some impatient person had removed our few remaining pieces of old furniture and had hung new paintings there over crimson hangings I felt I couldn't stand any more. "What does this mean?" I cried.

"The purchaser hopes to livehere," explained Mr. Maxwell, "and he is getting it ready for occupancy."

Here, I suppose, the poor man was bewildered enough, for I had restrained myself as long as I could, and I rushed to the one place where the hated crimson did not cover the panels, laid my head against their friendly support and burst out crying.

"Oh, why did you bring me here?" I said. "I can't stand everything. I would rather have this old place burned to the ground, with only the poor old chimney left to show where it stood, than to see it fitted with the most beautiful things in the world by strangers. Everything I care about turns out wrong." I concluded with a sigh. "I am losing my home, and now you—"

I stopped, frozen with horror. What had I said! But Norman Maxwell suddenly put me into the window seat and sat down beside me. "Eleanor, look at me," he said. But I absolutely couldn't lift my head, so he put his hand under my reluctant chin and turned my face toward him. "Eleanor," he went on, "don't you know 'Ive loved you all the time and that I was going away with the heartache, confident that you did not care for me? Don't you care just a little more about me than for an ordinary friend?"

"Oh!" I exclaimed, very much afraid that my stupidity had forced him into it. "I shouldn't have said—I didn't mean to—" But he put his arms around me and then I knew it wasn't because of what I had said.

Well, I was so happy that I cried and laughed in my own ridiculous fashion, and when we went home Marion says it was difficult to tell which beamed brightest my eyes or my nose. But I think I have wept the last sorry tears I shall ever have shed, for the best man in the world has bought Harcourt for me and it is to be our home when we are married.

Playgrounds For Children.

The number of children's playgrounds is increasing rapidly in many cities. Recent statistics, covering 24 cities between 25,000 and 300,000 population, show there has been in two years an increase of 94 per cent in school playgrounds, 48 per cent in park and municipal playgrounds, and a total increase of all kinds of playgrounds of 54 per cent in that period.

An Experimental Railroad.

An experimental railroad for testing signaling devices, materials used in track construction and different types of motor cars for railroad use has been built by the railway department of the German Government. The road is double-tracked and is oval-shaped, having a length of 5,760 feet. The straight stretch is about 800 feet long.

Biggest Cannon Ball.

What is said to be the biggest cannon ball ever made weighed 2600 pounds and was manufactured at the Krupp works, Essen, for the Government of the Czar. The gun from which this projectile was fired is placed in the fortifications of Cronstadt. This gun has a range of 12 miles and it has been estimated that each shot costs $1500.

Change of Scene.

Change of scene comes to us as a rest at least to many of us. It is a holiday from cares that may beset us. It awakens in us new ideas, helps to obliterate old and uncanny ones; renews the energies that were well-nigh exhausted, and seems to remind us that life after all is worth living.—Baily's Magazine.

Where Bullets Fell

David Parker, of Fayette, N. Y., a veteran of the civil war, who lost a foot at Gettysburg, says: "The good Electric Bitters have done is worth more than five hundred dollars to me. I spent much money doctoring for a bad case of stomach trouble, to little purpose. I then tried Electric Bitters, and they cured me. I now take them as a tonic, and they keep me strong and well." 50c. at J. S Banker's, Genoa, and F. T. Atwater's, King Ferry, drug stores.

Says She Knew Mollie Pitcher.

Contradicting the assertions of several historians who have questioned the identity of a woman buried in Carlisle, Pa., and honored as the Mollie Pitcher of Revolutionary War days, Mrs. Elizabeth Dehuff of Carlisle, who is 91 years old and says she is the only living person who knew Mollie Pitcher, has made a solemn sworn statement about the heroine of American history. She said in her affidavit that Mollie McCauley lived near her and died in a house near her own. She said the woman was short, heavily built and had white hair. She said Mollie often told stories of the battlefield, of carrying water to the soldiers, and of taking her first husband's place at the cannon when he was killed. Mrs. Dehuff asserted she went to school with Mollie Pitcher's son, John L. Hays. "Mollie," she said, was a good, kind-hearted woman. There was something good in her, although she was rough and coarse in her expression. She always would visit the sick and was willing to stay up all night with them. She was known commonly as "Mollie" Pitcher. That was what we all called her."

An Easy Way to Sew on Ruffles.

Make a tuck about three-eighths of an inch wide, folding on a line one inch from the edge. Sew the ruffle on, having the raw seam on the right side of the material. Now fold the tuck down over the seam and stitch on the lower edge. The lower edge of the tuck should just cover the seam line where the ruffle was stitched This is better than regular seam covering, as it does not draw when washed, and is much less trouble than cutting and folding a bias piece. Of course it can be used, only where ruffles are joined to edges.

Popular With Young Women.

Philadelphia has in the past boasted the largest Y. M. C. A. building in the United States Cleveland, Ohio, has now captured one equally as large, where more than 1,500 young women have registered in the educational classes since the opening. The scientific kitchen and domestic chemistry department are two very practical adjuncts, and their courses are proving very popular with the residents.

Nagging the College Girl.

The American college girl, with her fifteen sciences, including biology, chemistry, anthropology, archeology and astronomy, is brought under the searchlight in a recent number of the Paris New Review. The writer, Louis Madelin, a Frenchman, of course, declares that all education is forced in this country and that the higher education of women especially is of the mushroom variety. In general M. Madelin is shocked at the latitude which American girl students have in the matter of French literature. Again, the American girls "adore energy," and this "cult of energy" is conspicuous among "stylish young girls devoted to speculative studies of science and art."

This Frenchman's last word, which is that there is too much luxury in the American women's colleges, will find appreciation in the hearts of many anxious parents in this country. He says that the "college is not a seminary of science." There is no meditation and no austerity. Society enters everywhere, and "when vacation comes and they leave the comfortable, luxurious surroundings" of the college "what can the daughters of workingmen talk to their parents about?"

American educators and publicists have recently taken up the college girl's case with a view to readjustment. Not long ago President Hise of the University of Wisconsin fathered a scheme for the partial or total segregation of the sexes in coeducational institutions. Reviewing the causes that led to this movement, Mr. W. A. Curtis in the Independent asserts that women have lost their original influence and standing in the coeducational institutions and are getting to be looked upon by the men with hostility. Than this "nothing could be more absurdly untrue," says the New York Evening Post, because the authorities of coeducational institutions have constantly to contend with the neglect of studies for social functions where the sexes fraternize. True to his thesis, Mr. Curtis gives the grounds for the alleged hostility of college men to their student sisters. He says that "the college girl is visibly preparing herself to compete with the college boy and live without him," and thus in college, as elsewhere in the world, "woman is hated solely because more and more man is prevented from loving her," all of which, the Evening Post declares, is "pernicious nonsense." Furthermore, this staid organ of conservatism points out that the advocates of coeducation, who are up in arms against President Hise's proposition for the segregation of the sexes, maintain that coeducation is itself the cure of every ill ascribed to it. It concludes: "They believe that the excesses of frivolous social functions will abate when men and women have been associated more in their serious interests. They see in the coeducational work of the universities the beginnings of the foundation of a new, more wholesome and more interesting relation of the sexes."

Crops Here and Across the Sea.

Crops valued at $8,000,000,000 are predicted by the government experts who take observations each month of the growing season. Some few crops may establish new records, and it is believed that should one or two disappoint expectations in general the averages of the past ten years will be exceeded.

Equally trustworthy reports from the British islands indicate that crop conditions in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales are not promising, and the yield may be the lowest for several years. The prospective deficiencies, measured by the indications recorded at the same time last year, are 5 per cent for wheat, 13 per cent for barley and 6 per cent for oats. The probabilities are also against an abundant corn crop in those countries. Evidently there will be a good foreign market this year for our surplus cereals after the home demand has been taken care of.

The kaiser declares it to be his "deepest conviction that the peace of Europe is not in danger," and there is nobody on the continent whose convictions on this subject carry more weight than those of the German war lord.

A New Jersey farmer, attacked by two footpads, whipped both and tore from one a coat containing a gold watch and $25. What a hit he would make driving a stagecoach in Yellowstone park!

President Diaz has been invited to serve an eighth term as ruler of Mexico. How those kings and sultans and czars and shahs of the effete east must envy this "benevolent despot!"

With the rise to power of Sultan Mulai Hafid it now becomes painfully apparent that it is about time for Sultan Abdul Aziz to change his tense.

Harry Thaw's mental condition never seems to prevent him from taking a very active interest in his financial affairs.

Coughs of Children

Especially night coughs. Nature needs a little help to quiet the irritation, control the inflammation, check the progress of the disease. Our advice is—give the children Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Ask your doctor if this is his advice also. He knows best. Do as he says.

Ayer's — We publish our formulas. We banish alcohol from our medicines. We urge you to consult your doctor

If you think constipation is of trifling consequence, just ask your doctor. He will disabuse you of that notion in short order. "Correct it, at once!" he will say. Then ask him about Ayer's Pills. A mild liver pill, all vegetable.

—Made by the J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.—

Money is Full of Microbes.

According to a recent report made by the director of the research laboratory of New York, he found upon microscopic examination that an average piece of paper money moderately clean, carries 22,500 bacteria. An average dirty bill will have upon it something like 73,000 bacteria. Not all bacteria, of course, are harmful, but in such a number as 73,000 are many that menace the public health. It has been determined by miscropic examination that many living and active bacteria can be sheltered and sustained on a coin. For that reason children should be taught never to put coins in their mouths.

Netting Troubled Waters.

An interesting attempt to diminish the force of the waves has been tried recently at Havre. The inventor is Baron d'Alessandro, an Italian, residing in Paris The apparatus consists of a network of waterproof hemp, 360 feet long, by 50 feet broad, anchored on the surface of the water. It flattens out heavy waves and prevents them from breaking, after the manner of oil spread upon the sea.

A boy doesn't begin to have good sense until he admits that his father knows as much as he does.

The average man will stand without hitching a good deal better than if tied with an apron string.

Pink and White Wedding.

A pretty wedding, with pink and white as the color scheme, was that of Miss Lina Mae Sisson and Mr Clarence Reynolds Smith, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Smith of Sherwood, which took place at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Sisson, at Venice Center, on Wednesday evening.

The cousins of the bride, Miss Gertrude Purinton and Mr. George Sisson, were the attendants of the couple during the ceremony which was performed by Mrs Olive A. Ryon of Poplar Ridge, the ring service being used, at 6:30 o'clock. The bride wore a dress of white net over pink and carried pink and white carnations. The bridesmaid was dressed in white. The wedding march was played by the groom's sister, Miss Blanche Smith, of Sherwood.

After congratulations, the company were seated at tables and a very fine wedding dinner was served. Misses Iva Mosher and Jessie Parker, friends of the bride, served at the bride's table.

Eighty guests were present including a number from Auburn, Moravia, Sherwood, Poplar Ridge, Levanna, Watkins and Genoa. A large number of useful and valuable gifts were received, consisting of $50 in currency, silver, china, linen, rugs, chair, stove, etc.

THE HIGHER LIFE

Selected Gems of Thought from Press and Pulpit of All Sects.

Developing Character.

So, too, the race rises. For only when the social consciousness arises from the plane of individualistic selfishness to that of social and collective sympathy and mutual interest, is it possible to develop a nobler civic character and honorable citizenship.—Rev. E. Phillips, Baptist.

How God Gives.

God has never stinted His Giving. His bounty has been measureless since the beginning of time. No man can name or understand the free gifts of God. To be giving, giving, giving and to keep no count of His gifts is part of the very nature of God, for His name is love.—Rev. J. B. Clark, Methodist.

Barriers to Progress.

Excuses are never steps to progres; usually they are barriers It does not take any great amount of ability to devise an excuse. In fact, the persons who are most adept at giving excuses are usually the shirkers, the cowards and the inefficient. —Rev. E. McSovitt, Baptist.

Selecting a Guide.

Let it be the passion of your lives to know God. Take Christ as your spiritual guide. All questions and mysteries may not be resolved at once, or ever in this life; but you will walk onward in an increasing light, and some day you will see eye to eye and know even as also you have been known.—Rev. C. H. Patton, Presbyterian.

Conquoring Circumstances.

It is a common saying that "we are creatures of circumstances." This is true only so far as we are willing to have it so. "The remark of greatness," said Maccaulay, "is to rise above one's environment and conquor circumstance." But if we are left to ourselves, the probabilities are greatly against it.—Rev. F. Russell, Methodist Episcopal.

Thinking About God.

When you think of God do you like to think of Him on the grandest scale you can conceive, to gather around your thought of Him all the best, the holiest, the most tender and loving and solemn suggestions your mind can create or receive? Or do You hate to believe, do you take a pleasure in reducing faith to a minimum? In a word, are you and I people of faith, or are we of a faithless generation?—Rev. W. W. Wilson, Methodist.

The Real Memorial.

There have been countries, ancient Egypt, for instance, where death has had more than its rightful share of thought. There the chief occupation of a king was to build himself an imperishable tomb, in which his imperishable mummy should at last be housed. In our time and land, we believe it is better to be remembered for the good we have done than to be mummified; better to build a Christian home of joy than a pyramid of pride.—Christian Herald.

Weeding Out Evil.

Samaria needed some one to remind it of the actualities of God, to put conscience before curiosity: to interrupt the bargain-counter theory of life. It took hold—it wrought. And whenever religion and ethics, ethics and religion, are united, then and there the public mind responds —and trickery and villainy have to pack their wares. The first result of the lancet is not pleasant; but it gets rid of the festering poison. The only way to cure a felon is to cut the bone.—Rev. Matthew Clark, Baptist.

How Blessings Come.

The greatest blessings arrive by the way of sorrow. One who has never suffered cannot enjoy life's richest blessing. One who has never been encircled by the brightness of the day. The sweetest songs of earth have been sung in sorrow The richest things in character have been reached through pain. The human heart yields its noblest music in the winter of trial. A glimpse of the heavenly life is given in the Apocalypse, and this truth is set forth in it. The redeemed are singing their praises to God.—Rev. Wallace Smith, Episcopal.

Defining Our Philosophy.

The German philosopher said that the philosophy you have entirely depends upon the sort of man you are; Your bent; what kind of twist nature gave your mind when she put it together. You may educate the fussy, pedantic little man beyond all reason, plow him deep and cultivate him, but when the crop comes you find that nothing positively will grow in him except a fussy, pedantic little view of things. How did this man come to be this kind of person? Ask his mother. He was born that way; it is his original bent.—Rev. C. S. Patton, Presbyterian.

Praying for Strength.

A man was ever left in the lurch who, feeling his own inability to meet the situation made an earnest appeal to God. There are times in our lives when circumstances are too much for us. We are at our wit's end. What then? Omnipotence is at our command, if we will have it. God stands ready; but we must send for him. To your knees! God is our refuge and our strength; he is an ever present help in time of trouble; "a refuge from the storm and a shadow from the heat, when the blast of the terrible one is a storm against the wall."—Rev. R. Phillips, Baptist.

TEMPERANCE TOPICS.

Why I Hate the Liquor Traffic.

Personally I have seen so much of the evils of the liquor traffic, so much of its economic waste, so much of its physical ruin, so much of its mental blight, so much of it tears and heartache, that I have come to regard the busines as one that must be held and controlled by strong and effective laws. I bear no malice toward those engaged in the business, but I hate the traffic. I hate it for its arrogance. I hate it for its hypocrisy. I hate it for its cant and craft and false pretense. I hate it for its commercialism. I hate it for its greed and avarice. I hate it for its sordid love of gain at any price.

I hate it for its domination in politics. I hate it fo its corrupting influence in civic affairs. I hate it for its incessant effort to debauch the suffrage of the country; for the cowards it makes of public men. I hate it for its utter disregard of law. I hate it for its ruthless trampling of the solemn compacts of state constitutions.

I hate it for the load it straps to labor's back, for the palsied hands it gives to toil, for its wounds to genius, for the tragedies of its might-have-beens. I hate it for the human wrecks it has caused. I hate it for the almhouses it peoples, for the prisons it fills, for the insanity it begets, for its countless graves in potters' fields.

It hate it for the mental ruin it imposes upon its victims, for its spiritual blight, for its moral degradation. I hate it for the crimes it has committed. I hate it for the homes it has destroyed, I hate it for the hearts it has broken. I hate it for the malice it has planted in the hearts of men—for its poison, for its bitterness—for the dead sea fruit with which it starves their souls.

I hate it for the grief it causes womanhood—the scalding tears, the hopes deferred, the strangled aspirations, its burdens of want and care.

I hate it for its heartles cruelty to the aged, the infirm and the helpless, for the shadow it throws upon the lives of children, for its monstrous injustice to blameless little ones.

I hate it as virtue hates error, as righteousness hates sin, as justice hates wrong, as liberty hates tyranny, as freedom hates oppression.

I hate it as Abraham Lincoln hated slavery. And as he sometimes saw in prophetic vision the end of slavery and the coming of the time when the sun should shine and the rain should fall upon no slave in all the Republic, so I sometimes seem to see the end of this unholy traffic, the coming of the time when, if it does not wholly cease to be, it shall find no safe habitation anywhere beneath "Old Glory's" stainless stars.—Extracts from a speech delivered before the Indiana State Republican Convention by Governor Hanly.

Where the Bottle is Banished.

The South is going dry. Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, have won their victories. Other States are fighting with every prospect of success. The triumph has been quick and decisive in each case. Recent results in New England and the Middle West show that the temperance forces in other parts have taken fresh courage and inspiration from the Southern victories. Prohibition is winning in many places unexpected trumphs—for nothing succeeds like success

What is the secret of this sudden change of front? The temperance leaders are not more brilliant than formerly. The American voter has not changed his character. The liquor business is not more loathsome—it could not be. And we the manhood of the nation is swinging into the ranks of temperance.

We believe these victories are the result of the long and seemingly unprofitable years when the prohibition cause was apparently at a standstill. Little was done in legislation during that period, but we are finding that much was done in education. The Southern white man was convinced that the negro and liquor made a deadly combination. It took murders and worse other crimes, and the avenging mob law to teach it, but he has learned his lesson well.

Employer and employes in all our cities have been convinced that a drinking workman is a poor workman. And all classes are learning that the liquor traffic is repulsive, expensive and dangerous.

There is a lesson in all this for reformers. It is the world-old lesson that patience and industry bring victory in the long run. The long years of preparation are as necessary as the final conflict.—Home Herald.

The First Steps.

The first steps toward reform in child-labor laws must be the destruction of the diabolical liquor traffic, which steals the wages of so many drunken fathers whose little children are forced to go to work to help make up the loss. The rum demon is generally the slave-driver of child workers.—Pittsburg Christian Advocatee.

A few years ago the men ho predicted that, in 1907, whiskey would be legally prohibited by one hundred counties in Kentucky would have been locked up as a lunatic.

Indigestion

Stomach trouble is but a symptom of, and not in itself a true disease. We think of Dyspepsia, Heartburn, and Indigestion as real diseases, yet they are symptoms only of a certain specific Nerve sickness—nothing else.

It was this fact that first correctly led Dr. Shoop in the creation of that now very popular Stomach Remedy—Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Going direct to the stomach nerves, alone brought that success and favor to Dr. Shoop and his Restorative. Without that original and highly vital principle, no such lasting accomplishments were ever to be had.

For stomach distress, bloating, biliousness, bad breath and sallow complexion, try Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tablets or Liquid—and see for yourself what it can and will do. We sell and cheerfully recommend

TREES OF CALIFORNIA.

The Sequoia There Grows 400 Feet High and 26 in Diameter.

The sequoia here in Humboldt is the tallest tree in the United States. But the tourist from the East or West knows it not. What would he say to the information that in the northwest of California grows a mighty continuous forest of these great trees and that it takes days to travel merely from end to end of that forest, which is longer than the distance from Boston to New York or from St. Louis to Chicago. Yet such is the case.

On the ridges and flats of Humboldt is the forest, and of that forest the trees grow to 26 feet in diameter and tower 400 feet in the sky. Do you know what those figures mean. Measure the room in which you are now sitting. If it is a very large room the longest dimensions would just contain one of these trunks. Look out of your window and see the people more than a city block away. That is the distance from which one sees the topmost bough of these stupendous giants.

The redwood of California is the great tree of the Pacific coast. Two thousand acres of it exist in Oregon along the Chetco River. South of the Chetco a continuous redwood belt begins and increases in width from ten miles at Del Norte county to eighteen or twenty miles and keeps on unbroken to southern Humboldt county. Here is a gap, but in Mendocino the belt becomes dense again and widens out to thirty-five miles. South of that county the tree grows in isolated patches.

The climate and topography of northern California have brought about this limited distribution. North and south along the coast in nearly parallel ridges lie the mountains of the Coast Range, steep and rising to altitudes of 1,000 to 2,000 feet. A few large rivers, the Smith, Klamath, Mad, Eel, Russian and many smaller streams cut through them to enter the sea, and along their courses in places are broad bottom lands and gentle slopes.

West of the Coast Range the climate is even and moderate, with a temperature running from just below freezing to eighty degrees. Snow lies on the tops of only the highest ridges. Thirty to sixty inches of rain falls in the autumn and winter, and during the summer sea fog bathes the coast.

But east of the mountains, less than fifty miles from the sea, lie hot interior valleys never visited by fog, parched and rainless in summer and wet only occasionally by the winter rains—conditions too unfavorable to permit the growth of redwood. It requires very little from the soil except that it be moist. It is so dependent on moisture of the air that this factor mainly or wholly determines its distribution and the eastern limits of the forests are determined by the distance inland to which sea fog may drift.

There are two types of the tree —that which grows on the hillsides, and the second, which grows on the flats along the rivers and streams. The usual type is that of the slope, that is the growth found on the steep sides of the coast ranges, and side by side with the redwood grew other trees, such as red fir, tanbark oak, white fir and madrone. As the slopes become moderate, the altitude lower, the soil deeper, the forest becomes denser until on the rich flats and in the gulches the second type is developed. On the best redwood flats no other tree grows.

On the slopes 225 feet is about the maximum length and 10 feet its greatest diameter, while on the flats, under better conditions, the tree grows to be 350 feet high with a diameter of thirty feet, and occasionally giants exceed this. Most of the redwoods are fom 400 to 800 years old. The oldest tree scientifically measured was 1,400 years. After the tree has passed 500 years it usually begins to die down from the top. It has a straight, slightly tapered trunk without limbs for more than one hundred feet and a crown of horizontal branches that may occupy a third to a half of its length. The roots strike downward at a sharp angle and are so large and so numerous that they form a compact mass. The bark is of a reddish gray color, fibrous in texture, gives to the full grown tree a fluted appearance and offers such a remarkable resistance to fire that except under great heat it is not combustible. Insects do it little harm, the wind can hardly uproot it and fungi seldom affect it.—Humboldt Standard.

Seventy Miles of Pies.

A woman of Boston has been celebrating her "golden anniversary" as a cook. During forty years out of the fifty she has been employed at one restaurant for which she has baked no fewer than 394,000 pies. A local statistician has estimated that these pies, if laid out in a row, would cover seventy miles. She confesses also to the manufacture of 788,000 puddings and 2,100,000 doughnuts.

One good thing about bad habits is how you wouldn't enjoy life if you broke yourself of them.

VEGETABLE HELPS.

Rules to Enable Young Housewives to Get More Out of Them.

How to prepare vegetables so as to get the most out of them:

Potatoes: scrub and pare when necessary. It is not always necessary to pare new potatoes, because the thin, delicate skin, not yet tough, will come off by rubbing.

Parsnips: scrub until white, and trim off the fine, thread-like roots.

Beets: wash carefully and do not cut, for if the skin be broken the sugary juices, which give the delicate flavor to the vegetable, will escape.

Turnips: scrub, cut in slices and pare.

Carrots: scrub, and scrape off the thin outer surface.

Celery: wash and scrape off any rusty portions.

Onions, peel and soak.

Cabbage and cauliflower: trim and soak, top down in cold, slightly salted water, to draw out any insects.

Spinach and other greens: pick over very carefully and wash in several waters.

Hard shell squashes: wash, split, and cook in the shell.

Asparagus: wash, break off the tough ends, tie in bundles, and cook in a deep kettle, standing upright in the water.

Peas and beans: shell and wash quickly.

String beans: strip off the ends and strings on each side, cut or break into small pieces and wash.

Green corn: husk with clean hands but do not wash it.

Fresh vegetables do not require any soaking in cold water, and it is better not to prepare them until you are ready to cook them. But if they are at all wilted, soaking will freshen them, and if they must be prepared any time before cooking, they should be covered with fresh cold water, to prevent them from wilting or becoming discolored.

For a fresh green vegetables use soft water, salted and freshly boiling. Cook rapidly until soft. The time will depend upon the age and freshness of the vegetables.

With green peas, shelled beans, green corn, celery and spinach, use as little water as possible.

Cook cabbage and cauliflower uncovered in a kettle of rapidly boiling salted water, with a saltspoonful of soda in it.

Put onions over in cold water, let them come to a boil, drain, put cold water on them and return to the fire; do this three times, then let them boil until they are soft.

All other vegetables cook in water enough to cover, and drain it off after cooking.

Summer squash, cabbage and other water vegetables should be pressed in a cloth or strainer and well drained.

Would Mortgage the Farm.

A farmer on Rural Route 2, Empire, Ga., W. A. Floyd by name, says: "Bucklen's Arnica Salve cured the two worst sores I ever saw: one on my hand and one on my leg. It is worth more than its weight in gold. I would not be without it if I had to mortgage the farm to get it." Only 25c. at J. S. Banker's, Genoa, and F. T. Atwater's, King Ferry, drug stores.

"I have a severe cold," said the sweet singer. "I shall have to use a cough sirup."

"Use only tar sirup," spoke up the manager.

"Does it make any difference?"

"Yes; everything depends on the pitch of your voice."

New Zealand is described by its inhabitants as "the happiest country in the world." It is now a dominion. Some of the pretty names given to it by New Zealanders are "The Fortunate Isles," "The Wonderland of the Pacific," "All Lands In One" and "The Star of the South."

Stomach troubles would more quickly disappear if the idea of treating the cause, rather than the effect, would come into practice. A tiny, inside, hidden nerve, says Dr. Shoop, governs and gives strength to the stomach. A branch also goes to the Heart, and one to the Kidneys. When these "inside nerves" fail, then the organs must falter. Dr. Shoop's Restorative is directed specifically to these failing nerves. Within 48 hours after starting the Restorative treatment patients say they realize a gain. Sold by J. S. Banker, Genoa.

FROCKS FOR YOUNG WOMEN.

A Charming Lack of Pretension in Many of the New Styles.

Beauty unadorned is no longer a popular phrase, for young women of to-day are so well up with the times that they like their beauty enhanced in as many ways as possible, although it is done in simpler fashion. There is a charming lack of pretension in many of the new frocks, two of the most successful of which are illustrated. The first is a dotted voile in natural color with figure of deep cream color and dark brown, done with silk embroidery floss. The skirt is gouged slightly about the waistline and trimmed at the bottom with narrow bands of embroidered braid with kiltings in natural

The blouse is slightly suggestive of the Mandarin lines so much worn and is laid in tucks at the shoulders, the fronts being draped in fischu fashion and bordered with braid and kiltings. There is a vest formed of bands of insertion put together with hand-stitcher. The puffed sleeves are trimmed with braid and kilted silk.

Striped suting is used for the second costume, the skirt having a draped front panel trimmed at the side with buttons covered with silk. With this is worn a simple Eton jacket trimmed with silk passamenterie ornaments and garnished with revers and a detachable vest of eyeletter batiste. The cuffs match the revers and finish elbow sleeves finished with two little frills of Valenciennes lace.

Sealskin in the Making.

How many of the fair wearers of sealskin know how this fur is prepared?

In the skin of a dog or a cat it will be noticed that at the roots of the longer, coarser hair of the animal, there are fine, short hairs called "under fur." In most animals these hairs are so few that they are usually overlooked. Not so with sealskin.

The operations which the pelt undergoes to bring out this under fur are really simple.

The skin, after going through various processes to cleanse it of grease, etc., is stretched out flat, with the flesh side uppermost. A flat knife is then passed over it, thinning the skin considerably. In doing this it loosens the roots of the longer hairs which are more deeply embedded than those of the under fur. The rough hairs are thus got rid of without injury to the softer fur.

Next the pelt passes through operations which soften and preserve it. Then comes the dyeing by which the uniform tint so generally admired is obtained. And now the fur is ready for making up into cosy wraps —Montreal Standard.

Hints About Eggs.

Eggs when boiling, frequently burst. This is caused by their being too full of air and may be prevented by pricking one end with a needle before putting them into the water, which makes an outlet for the air.

Eggs become unwholesome if kept in refrigerators; a fungus forms in them which is easily found by the miscroscope, although it is not noticeable to the taste.

Stale eggs are glassy and smooth of shell. The shell of a fresh egg has a limelike surface. A boiled egg which is dull and dries quickly on the shell when taken from the kettle is fresh.

Boiled eggs which adhere to the shell are fesh.

Explanations.

Nothing is more fatal to friendly relations than complaints and reproaches and demands for explanations. People must be judged in the wholeness of their conduct. A thousand subtle influences, unexpected and unforseen events, have their action and reaction on life. A thousand things occur that can neither be analyzed nor defined. Many a temporary alienation is effectively overcome by silence. Reproaches, questionings, but widen the gulf. Leaving it alone, taking up other interests and ideas, bridges it over.—Lilian Whiting.

To Preserve Lemons.

Put a layer of dry, fine sand, an inch in depth at the bottom of an earthenware jar. Place a row of lemons on this, stalk downward, and be careful that they do not touch one another. Cover them with another layer of sand fully three inches in depth. Lay on it more lemons and repeat until the jar is full. Store in a cool, dry place. Lemons thus preserved will keep for months.

LAST OF FAMOUS TRAIL.

Old Route Over Which Cattle Were Driven North From Texas.

The last vestige of the old National cow trail stretching up through Texas and Cimarron counties toward the northwest, will probably be obliterated by the march of a few years more of civilization, but now in spite of the fact that the tread of cattle has not been heard over this historic trail since 1890 the old trails are still marked by well defined paths, running parallel, where the cattle walked single file, one behind the other. There are usually from a dozen to twenty such paths, silent landmarks of the days when thousands of cattle were trailed northward from southern Texas and Mexico to North Colorado, Montana and Wyoming.

For many years the Texas cattlemen took their herds at will across the country, all of it unfenced and uncultivated, but as soon as there began to be any settlers at all in the "Oklahoma Panhandle" they entered serious protests against that method of transporting the herds because the southern cattle communicated the Texas fever to their own herds. At first an attempt was made by Col. Jack Hardesty and other pioneer cowmen to prevent the passage of the southern cattle entirely, bringing on what was known as the "Jack Hardesty war." Hardesty and his associates hired a number of armed fighting men and placed them along the routes usually traversed with instructions to stop all southern cattle. Of course the blockade was of only temporary duration, as the Texans took the matter up with the authorities at Washington and the Hardesty forces disbanded when they found themselves likely to have to face Federal troops.

As soon as the settlers became more numerous they effected an organization known as the "League," for the purpose of compelling the southern cattle to be driven along one well defined trail, thus minimizing the danger of infection to cattle on other parts of the range. A sort of patrol was established, one member being delegated to keep the herds on the trail and to go with them a part of the way through specified territory. In the one or two cases where the Texans were unwilling to comply with this regulation, they were visited by a committee from the league and informed that they could either follow the trail as other herds had done or the entire outfit of horses, cattle and men, would be escorted back to the Texas line.

It has now been something like fifteen or sixteen years since driving cattle overland from the South to the Northern ranges was abandoned, and few of the present residents along the line of the old trail have any idea of the number of cattle that formerly passed over it. They began coming early in May, and herd after herd passed until well up to July, the herds numbering from 1,500 to 2,500 head of cattle, and with from seven to twelve men with each outfit. Each man was generously furnished with a mount of horses ranging from five to seven head.

At night the herds were rounded up on the open prairies, and guards, consisting usually of two men, would ride around them all night. The guard was changed three times during the night, and the fourth guard, going on at daybreak, was known as the "cocktail," the duty of this guard being to remove the cattle from the bed ground to grass, a little further along the trail.

The "punchers" who composed these outfits were generally men who ages ranged from 30 to 50 years, weatherbeaten, storm-tried and big hearted fellows. When quarrels arose the cooler heads usually prevented gun plays, and the boys fought it out with their fists. They enjoyed a game of "one come along two," and considered two deuces good enough to stay on until the raise came. Their manners were often rough, but they were big hearted men, who would give their last cent to a needy friend.

Some of them who settled down and became owners themselves, are still living in the country across which they drove cattle years ago, and look back sometimes almost with a sigh of regret to the old days. —Kansas City Journal.

A Yoga's Feat.

For fourteen years Bava Luchman Dass received from the priests of the Black Caves of central India the necessary education in order to become a Yoga, as a yoga must be capable of taking the 48 postures of the Hindo idol.

Perhaps his greatest trick consists in balancing himself on the ends of his fingers while the whole of his body is in the air. Bava stated that in order to obtain the rank of Yoga in the Black Caves of India he had to continue in this position on the ends of his fingers under the eyes of the judges, without second's interval for seven days and nights.—Strand Magaine.

The Real Peril.

It's up to the chap who is unable to see any good in the world to consult an oculist.

THE HIGHER LIFE

Selected Gems of Thought from Press and Pulpit of All Sects.

Fighting our Foes.

Without the girdle of truth he will fall and fail in the conflict. The foes of life are too fierce for any life to win the victory over them if that life is founded in falsehood or ungirdled with truth.—Rev. F. Willis, Reformed.

The Interest of Eternal Life.

God has planted within us the instint of eternal life. Indeed, it is more than an instinct. The inner man of which we are speaking was made to endure. His desires and capacities are not compassed by time. Why, then, do we cruch and throttle him?—Rev. E. M. Luke, Unitarian.

Pleasing the Lord.

The Lord cares more for our gratitude than for our gold. He asks material gifts from us only that we may thus be helped to manifest the spirit of thanksgiving. Not all the treasures that we could pour before the alter of God would Honor Him or please Him so much.—Rev. M. Luke, Unitarian.

The Hurrying Evil.

The frequency of hurry disqualifies men for sane judgment. Yet, how we hurry to express our opinion even before we know the fact! With what haste we speak the word of condemnation, and sometimes even the word of praise, and both as the result of imperfect knowledge.—Rev. F. Russell, Methodist Episcopal.

Cause of our Trouble.

"Violation of law—sin—has caused all man's trouble and sorrow, sickness and death. There is a remedy for it all. There is happiness for all here in this life. He who obeys the laws of his country, enjoys the largest liberty. He who obeys the law of God will enjoy the greatest liberty and consequent happiness in this and the next world.—Rev. Ralph Tompkins, Episcopal.

Cannot be Purchased.

Man sells; God gives. Pride likes to pay and patronize, when what God asks is penitence and humility. There are other things not to be had for money beside godliness and manliness. Good health, good taste, common sense, scholarship, life. "Wherefore (says the proverb) is there a price in the hand of a fool to get wisdom, seeing he hath no heart to it?" Friendship, love, esteem—these are not bought and sold.

Where Noble Minds are Found.

In all ages the noblest minds have been those who have penetrated beneath the surface of things and discerned the great spiritual realities. We are told that Moses endured as seeing him who is invisible. The most conspicuous thing about Jesus was his consciousness of the unseen. He lived in the atmosphere of spiritual reality. He seemed to know God on intimate terms, and to live in heaven as much as he lived upon earth.—Rev. F. Willis, Reformed.

Laws of God.

God has his laws—they are and must be inexorable. Man has broken himself against these laws—he cannot break the laws, but he has broken himself. I throw myself over a great precipice on the rocks a thousand feet below—I do not break the rocks which have been there from the morning of creation—I break myself. Now, God is not to be blamed for my rash and foolish act, nor is he to be held responsible, for the suffering which results.—Rev. Edw. Smith, Methodist.

What the World Offers.

Rule the world and you may get the deepest delight out of it, you can make it help you to be wiser, gentler, nobler, more gracious, more Christ-like, more full of God. But let it once get the bit in its teeth, and you are gone. Many a man says, "It is mine—this money I have got; this social or this political position I have won; this cup of pleasure which I lift to my lips at will;" when only the truth would be spoken if one and all of these should rise up and say, "Thou fool—thou art mine!"—Christian Herald.

Seeking for Truth.

Welcome, interrogation point! If a reverential spirit accompanies inquiry nothing is too sacred to entertain the thoughtful question of an honest heart. In religion and philosophy, in science and ethics, let the interrogation point be granted the right of way. 'Reach hither thy finger and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand and thrust it into my side, and be not faithless but believing." Let the bold highlander whose abode is in the uplands of truth never flinch before the Coilantogle combat.—Rev. R. Townsend, Methodist.

In touch with the Creator.

One believes, not so much in the unknown as in the known. The worship of an unknown God cannot possibly stimulate faith. A religion that deals wholly, or mainly, with the supernatural cannot hope to mold and inspire men. The God of faith must be a God working through nature, through humanity; must be a total experience, inner and outer; must be the life of life and not merely a figment of the imagination. To say that it is the unknowable, the uncertain, that promotes faith is to rob faith of its very content. By so doing you substitute dreams for realities. Are all who believe not in this God unfaithful? Of course not. —Rev. F. Willis, Reformed.

Locke Grange for Hewitt.

At a meeting of Locke Grange, P. of H., No. 868, held Oct. 21, the following resolution was adopted:

Whereas, the Republican party of the Fortieth Senatorial district in convention assembled, have nominated Hon. Charles J. Hewitt as their candidate for state senator. Mr. Hewitt is an active and prominent member of this Grange and an ardent supporter of our principles and has served several terms as a member of the board of supervisors in this county and three terms as member of assembly in the Second Assembly District of Cayuga, and being a practical business man, we believe him eminently fitted to fill the office to which he has been nominated. Therefore be it

Resolved, That we will support him unanimously and invite our Brother Grangers in this district to do likewise and our secretary be instructed to forward a copy of these resolutions to each Grange in this senatorial district."

Mr. Hewitt was born and raised to manhood on a farm, and all of his and his wife's relatives are farmers, and a large number of them are members of the Grange. He himself followed farming as a vocation until he was 24 years of age.

Sixteen years ago he engaged in the produce business, together with retail coal, lumber, etc. By close attention to business and honest, upright dealings, he has been successful and is now connected with various other enterprises, among which is the Citizens Bank of Locke, of which he is the president.

We, as Grangers, are very anxious to see him succeed. Knowing him as we do, we feel that the Grangers will have at least one staunch friend in the senate if he is elected, which we confidently believe that he will be and we want him to feel that he had the entire support of the Grangers in his district.

Trusting you will give him your support and help us to elect him, we are

Yours fraternally,
LOCKE GRANGE, P. OF H.

The Condemned Well.

We wish to correct a statement in last week's issue in regard to the well at Westmiller's. Mr Westmiller put in a new pump about the first of May; at that time he pumped nearly all the water out and then used for cows and horses for about four weeks The family have used since that time from the well until their sickness. Since the last issue of your paper the well has been cleaned. The contents were about 6 ft. of water, 2 white shirt buttons, a tin cup, the chain from the old pump, and several pails of dirty water, about ½ pail of mud in all.

MRS. SEYMOUR WEAVER,
MRS. THOMAS HENRY,
WARREN WESTMILLER.

We wish to state to the public: We have used water from the well for the past eight years at times during the summer months and said well was never left open.

The King's Daughters.

The seventh annual convention of the New York State branch of the King's Daughters was held in Auburn last week Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, and was reported as one of the most successful in the history of the organization.

The roll call showed a total of 300 delegates at the convention. The report of the county secretaries accounted for 15 circles with a total membership of 697. The Binghamton city union furnishes a district nurse for that city at an expense of $600 a year. The Albany city union reported on a Penny Providence Savings Funds which is successfully managed by the Albany circle.

Ten distinct lines of work were reported as carried on by the circles and special emphasis was placed on the assistance which these circles give to the pastors of the churches in taking care of all the odds and ends and disagreeable parts of the parish work.

Rev. E. H. Dickinson, D D., of Buffalo gave an address on Thursday evening.

The following officers were elected: State secretary, Mrs. D. H. Laird of Woodville; recording secretary, Mrs L Howe of Canandaigua; state treasurer, Mrs. A. H. Clark of Auburn; member of the central council, Mrs G J. Michelbach of Binghamton.

Big Masonic Event.

Friday last was a day long to be remembered by the Masons of Auburn and surrounding towns. On that day, for the first time in 20 years, Auburn was honored by a visit from the grand master, who visited St. Paul's lodge. The grand master, Judge Samuel Nelson Sawyer, was accompanied by several of his official staff and the gathering was a notable one from a Masonic standpoint.

At 2 o'clock, at the lodge rooms, the third degree was exemplified upon a class of five candidates. The room was filled and forty different subordinate lodges were represented.

In the evening, a banquet was held in the Burtis Annex, at which covers were laid for 400. The arrangements for the dinner were in charge of members of Salem Town and Auburn chapters, Order of Eastern Star. Addresses were given by Grand Master Sawyer of Palmyra, Robert J. Kenworthy of New York, deputy grand master, George S. Tinklepaugh of Palmyra, the grand marshal, and Rev. H. W. Smith of Port Byron the grand chaplain.

Among the other notables present were William H. Miller of New York, grand treasurer; Frank B. Aiken, of Trumansburg, district deputy; Theodore LaFever of New York, district deputy; Frank Burgess of Newark, district deputy.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

The Ladies' World.

A serial story that promises remarkably well begins in the November number of the Ladies' World It is called "Hearts Insurgent," and the author is Grace MacGowan Cooke, whose name alone guarantees excellence. Beside this there is a quantity of short fiction by Harriet Rowland, Catalina Paez, Bessie R. Hoover and others that is more than usually interesting. The special articles on The Holy Land, The Boy and His Parents, and What Women Can Do to Earn Money are continued; and, in excellent time, there are several pages of suggestions for Christmas gifts to be made at home by grown-ups and children. The Household, Fashions and Dressmaking departments are exceptionally good this month, full of tempting things both to eat and to wear, and there is another of those very practical articles on Winter Dressing on Dollars and Sense. This number also contains a new song by the author of The Sweetest Story Ever Told, called "I've a Little Blue-Eyed Lassie." The children are well provided for, and altogether the issue is a most attractive one.—[New York: Fifty Cents a Year.]

"Farm Versus City."

The Jamestown Evening Journal of Oct. 20, in a report of a Grange meeting, had the following to say concerning a paper read by Mr. Howe, an old Genoa resident:

"Squire Howe read a paper on "Farm Versus City" at Monday's meeting of Union Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, in Odd Fellows' hall This paper was very interesting, Mr. Howe bringing up some important points in connection with the subject. After the reading, there was a general discussion which consumed most of the afternoon. The questions, Do the Farmers in Your Neighborhood Get the Results for the Sale of Produce, That They Should? and Is Our Grange Increasing or Decreasing in Interest and Usefulness to Its Members? All agreed that its interest and usefulness are increasing."
