How is this for a church-going horse? George Gallenger last Sunday morning hitched up his faithful animal as usual to take them to church, drove around to the front of the house and left the horse to wait for the family to finish their toilet for church. The animal, thinking he had waited a proper length of time, started for church without his master. Arriving there, he went up to the stepping block as had been his custom, and then to the shed. This shows that this animal had been reared to walk in the straight and narrow way. - Fabius correspondent.

SYSTEM OF HOUSEKEEPING.

Domestic Finance Has Come to Be Conducted on a Scientific Basis.

In the slow days of the old-fashioned woman the housekeeper was obliged to go to her husband and ask for money to defray the domestic expenses piece by piece. If he was a very decent sort of a man she received the amount, and perhaps a little bit more. When she wanted spending money for herself she isked him for that, and if he was a disagreeable person, he would say: "Where Is that 25 cents I gave you over a week

But, whether he was generous or ungenerous, he held the purse by a general if unwritten law, and he thought it was all right, while it made no sort of difference what she thought. He suffered himself in a way without knowing it. No woman was going to tease her husband for money to buy him delightfully surprising presents, even at Christmas time, and so it happened that he was at fault for the bargain-counter gifts that, so it is said, he used to receive.

However, the business woman who marries has revolutionized matters and has thought out solutions that are far head of even the allowance plan. In one household it is down to a fine system. In this case it happens that the wife has a small but sure income of her own, while the man has a sure and comfortably large salary. As things used to be managed, the woman's income would have been her spending money, but this is the way they have done. The total income is pooled and then divided into two equal parts, so that they may share and share alike. Then, the next step, a family purse has been established, for which both are equally taxed. When the funds in the it affords. When speaking of this Mr. family purse begin to run low each member of the firm puts in five or ten dollars more and then uses the rest of the divided fund for personal bills till the time of the next taxation.

When it is necessary to give a united present to anyone, out of the family purse comes the money to buy it. If the family wishes to go to the theater, the family purse has to pay that bill. Everything is systematized as only the bottle. I was soon relieved of all new woman knows how to sympathize pain. I have since recommended this it, and in a manner to which no one but the new woman and the new woman's husband would ever submit. Perhaps he at times chafes under the inflexible and unbending rule and longs for a little less mathematical precision, and perhaps he would even breathe a sigh of relief if he were allowed to go to other extremes from the rule of the past and be put on an allowance himself. The method adopted in another household is not so original and is more oppressive, because it necessitates a rigid keeping of accounts, and because there is no private purse at all. Everything goes into the general purse. From this common fund each of the family borrows and then at the end of the week offers an itemized statement of how much has been spent and of the manner in which it has been spent. cality and see what it is like during That weekly rendering of accounts tends to discourage reckless extravagance and is on the whole depressing.

> It goes quite without saying that these families are of rather limited membership. What would happen to the carefully arranged systems in the case of larger numbers to provide with food and clothes and toys might show a survival of the tried and true methods of managing the family finance.

No two of the up-to-date families employ exactly the same methods. The woman in each case prefers to originate ldeas and lay down her own rules for regulating the family purse and getting on a fair money basis. But there is one thing upon which the housekeepers of limited income agree, and that is a batred for bills, and therefore the envelope system is popular. The idea is to have a series of envelopes, one for the butcher, another for the grocer, another for the coal dealer. and so on, with one for each of the persons who may be expected to present claims.

Of course, a small amount going into each of these envelopes every day doesn't seem so great in the long run as the total sum paid out in one lump. But there are drawbacks. It takes a woman of superior mold not to borrow from the milkman or the gasman or the baker, or from their envelopes, rather, which amounts to the same thing. The difficulty is increased in one household by the propensity which the man of the family has developed of taking his turn at borrowing, too, and the result is that even the envelopes have to borrow from one another.

The most decided reaction from the condemned old-time method shows itself in the real live methods that rule in some households, in which the woman manages the purse and doles out the spending money to her husband. It is the best all-around plan. The man In the case is spared all financial worry, except that of earning the money, while the woman is more economical than she would be if she received a certain sum just to spend. Of course, there are cases where it does not work well, as in the instance of the woman who gave her husband such a narrow margin for incidental expenses that he was forced to run away, but in most cases he is not driven to that extreme, fortunately for the future growth and popularity of the plan.-Chicago Chronicle.

Cocoanut Ice.

Grate the white flesh of a cocoanut pretty finely and mix it to a paste with two tablespoonfuls of caster sugar and the stiffly-whipped white of an egg. run it into a square tin and cut it into bars as it is setting. Put away, wrapped in grease-proof paper, in an air-tight tin. If preferred, half the "tee" can be colored a delicate pink with a drop or two of carmine and see in layers with the plain white. -Philadelphia Press.

BORE LIKE GIMLETS.

The Lee-Metford Bullet Could Go Through an Entire Company of Soldiers.

The lee-metford bullet is about four times as long as it is thick, and to keep it straight in its flight it has to be made to rotate at a tremendous rate by the rifling of the gun. Obviously. this long, narrow bullet meets with much less resistance from the air than the old spherical ball of the smooth bore musket, says the Cincinnati En-

But the swift rotation has another effect. When the bullet strikes a man it bores its way in like a gimlet, and nothing can stop it. As the bullet leaves the muzzle it is twisting on its axis 133,200 times per minute. That is the rate with ordinary powder, When cordite is used the bullet is made to revolve no less than 144,000 times per minute, or 2,400 times per second.

Sometimes, however, this rapid revolution brings about curious results. If it gets the least bit out of the straight line it has a tendency glance off when it strikes a hard or tough object. This accounts for those miraculous escapes one hears of in all

A lee-metford bullet striking a button or a soldier's belt or notebook or a coin in the pocket, when it has the slightest deflection from a straight line, is pretty sure to glance off without doing any harm.

It may even penetrate the skin of the chest, and on meeting with a rib turn aside without doing further mischief. Yet if this same bullet had struck perfectly straight it would have been able to penetrate the ribs of a whole company one after another.

LONG-LOST SHELL.

Still in Good Order When Taken from the Water After Forty-Four Years.

The longest time that is known to have elapsed between the firing of a shell and its explosion is 44 years. Recently a shell which had been fired into the Russian harbor of Sebastopol during the Crimean war at least 44 years ago was hauled up by some fishermen, and it exploded on being taken from the water, killing one of the men and wounding several of the others, notwithstanding the long period which had elapsed since it had left the British gun which fired it. Finds of shells are exceedingly dangerous, if they happen to be unexploded ones, as a similar accident happened not long since at Bolton-le-Sands, where a dredger named Wilson fished up one that had been fired from the artillery camp at Bare, and took it home. An attempt to break it up cost him an eye, a foot and a broken head, besides causing serious damage to property.

The Vicissitudes of War.

Henry Labouchere, while addressing a peace meeting in England, was hit on the head by a flying chair, and a number of his hearers had to be taken home in ambulances. The Chicago Times-Herald concludes that Henry must be one of those who will have peace, even if they are compelled to fight for it.

CROATS COMING NOW.

Mill Another Blement Being Added to the Cosmopolitan Population of This Country.

Croatia is officially described in the somewhat complicated geographical subdivisions of Austria as "a province of the empire forming with Slavonia a kingdom united with Hungary." Until last year the tide of foreign immigration into the United States, which has included people of almost every race and nationality, did not bring any material number of Croats, and in the census figures of 1890 it was not thought necessary to make any separate subdivision for Croats, though Portuguese residents of this country, Greeks, East Indians, Turks, Pacific Islanders. Central Americans and natives of the province of Luxemburg were separately enumerated. According to the figures presented at the barge office it appears that in 1898 the number of Croats who arrived at this port as immigrants was 6.837. In 1899 the number was nearly doubled, being 13.574, and, while the figures of January, 1960, have not been completed, it is certain that the propertion of increase to retofore established will be maintained this year.

the increased prosperity of the United since March, 1897, there has not on'y been an increase in the number of immigrants, but an even greater increase in the number of countries from which immigrants have been drawn to the United States. Thus, there has been a large addition | indicated horse power is considerably to the number of Syrian immigrants. and New York, though the first city to have a Syrian colony is no longer the only one. There has been a very large increase, too, in the number of Greek immigrants, and there has been some addition to the number from Turkey, Portugal and northern Africa, and a very marked increase in the number of immigrants from Finland.

NOTHING FOR THEM TO EAT.

That's Why the Buzzards Keep Out of Charleston's Streets on Sunday.

One of the curious sights in Charleston, S. C., is a flock of buzzards which. six days in the week, hover around the streets and alleys, and particularly the market places of that city, says a Washington letter to the Chicago Record. They are the public scavengers, and are protected by law. They clean the streets of garbage and other filth, and work from dawn to sunset in a most energetic and faithful manner on familiar terms with the population. They have learned not to fear anyone, but swoop down wherever they like and carry off all the decaying animal and vegetable matter they find. When the sun goes down they fly across the lay and roost in the dark groves that line the banks of the

They never work on Sunday. Charleston is a very religious city. The observance of the Sabbath is more strict there perhaps than in any place of its size in the country. The people, mostly Presbyterians and Huguenots, retain the old-fashioned ideas about the Fourth Commandment. Even the vultures respect this sentiment and "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." When they disappear Saturday night they are never seen again until Monday morning, and this has been their habit as long as the oldest inhabitant can remember.

JOE LOBSTER.

A Fish Dealer Says They All Have Their Names on the Inside of Their Thighs.

"Did you ever see the name a lobster is born with?" asked a fish dealer the other day. "It is marked on his body. No? Well, I'll show you

The dealer, says the New York Sun, took a live lobster out of a heap on the marble slab.

"Its name is Joe." the dealer said, after he had inspected one of its legs. Now, can you find it?"

The customer took the lobster gingerly by the back of the neck, where it could not reach his hand with its nippers. Turning it on its back so that the brown legs at its side flopped backwards, a smooth streak half an inch long and nearly as wide was seen on the inside of the thigh. In this streak, like a mosaic, were short lines, as though some one had printed on it with indelible brown ink in backhand the characters J O E.

"Some lobsters are named Jim." the dealer said, "some Jack, others John; and I once clearly made out the name Julia."

What Might Have Been.

A writer is thus quoted by the Chicago News: "I happen to know a case which illustrates forcibly how easy an accident might have affected the whole course of history. A few engineers, of whom Sir Bevans Edwards is the only survivor, composed the party which blew up the docks at Sebastopol. There was a shaft 30 feet deep, with a gallery running horizontally from it. At the bottom of the shaft, just inside the gallery, stood one Gordon-after of China in his hand. The powder was lowered in four barrels and one of these slipped from the slings, fell to the bottom of the shaft and broke up, so that Gordon was left standing up to his knees in gunpowder with a lighted candle in his hand. That there was no premature explosion was a miracle, and if that miracle had not been worked the odds are that a different dynasty would be ruling in China, and that Lord Kitchener would never have had the opportunity of making his famous march to Khartoum."

A FLEET IN ONE SHIP.

The Great German Steamship Deutschland and Her Enormous Capacity.

It is doubtful if all the vessels which plied regularly between America and Europe before the day of steamships could have carried, at a lading, a much greater quantity of merchandise than can be loaded upon a single ship which was recently launched for the trans-Atlantic traffic. The new German steamship, Deutschland, 16,000 tons, is in herself quite the equivalent in carrying power to a whole fleet of vessels of 80 years ago, says Youth's Companion.

This remarkable vessel now marks The fact of the matter is that with the maximum in the competition between the trans-Atlantic lines to produce the greatest and most successful ships. She is the rival of the Oceanic, launched last year at Belfast, and while her gross tonnage is slightly less than that of the Oceanic, and her length but a foot and a half more, her greater, and her speed is expected to reach 23 knots an hour. Year by year the great trans-Atlantic fleet expands and becomes more wonderful. It flies the flag of Britain, of Germany, of France, of Holland, of Norway, and only to a limited extent that of the United States. Of all the vast fleet of passenger steamers regularly plying between the United States and Europe, but two were built in this country. The question: "Why is this so?" can hardly be asked too often in our legislative halls.

Franklin's Willows.

A member of the Civic club, of Philadelphia, the other day brought to light the interesting fact that the first willow trees in Philadelphia grew on the site of the custom house, and resulted from an accidental discovery on the part of Benjamin Franklin. He found a wicker basket, which had been thrown in a damp place, sprouting. He was much interested, and gave some of the cuttings to Charles Morris, who planted them on his place. The stalks took root readily and thrived, and a number of fine young willow trees re-

Obituary.

Benjamin L. Avery was born at Morris, N. Y., February 2, 1832, and died in this village on Thursday, March 29, 1900, at 9:30 p. m., closing an active life of more than ordinary note. During his nearly forty years' residence in this village, he has been closely identified with all progressive movements, and has been a leading citizen in much of the work tending to elevate the tone of the community. social, physical and political Successful in business, conservative in social intercourse, he embodied the qualities which win triends and inspire confidence. His services as postmaster, under two presidents, were satisfactory to all, failing health however making it necessary to resign under his second appointment last January. Mr. Avery was a veteran, having served in the 9th heavy artillery, and receiving honorable discharge at the close of the war.

The funeral services were held from the Genoa Baptist church on Sunday at 2 o'clock, Rev. H. N. Wright of Scipio speaking from John xiv:1,2 and Rev. Thomas Bell of Moravia large delegation, with yearly reports reading from Psalms and the epistles of Paul. His comrades of the G. A. R., whose ranks are fast diminishing, attended in a body, as did his brethren of the Masonic order, of which he was past master. Representatives of Moravia, (of which he was a member) Cayuga, Scipio, Lansing and Genoa lodges were in attendance, and the burial services were from the Masonic ritual. The large concourse of people who assembled to look for the last time upon those kindly features, attest the esteem and respect for the deceased and the sympathy for those who are thus bereaved.

Moravia's Ball Tossers.

Captain-Manager Carr has signed nearly all the men who will play on the famous Moravia ball team for the season of 1900. Those already engaged are: Elger, catcher; Folger and Arnold, pitchers; H. Carr, first base; McElroy, second base; H. Gunnell, third base; L. Carr, shortstop; Tommy Welch, outfield. To these will be added a fast collegiate twirler and a hard hitting outfielder, making a much stronger team than last year. They are now arranging their schedule for 1900 and would like to hear from amateur, independent and semiprofessional teams of the state. Their season will be from June 20 to September 20. Dates can be arranged by addressing L. Carr, manager, Moravia, N. Y.

DEAF CHILDREN LEARN MUSIC

Interesting Experiments That Have Met with a Successful Re-

An interesting work with deaf children is being done under the direction of the supervisor of music in the Detroit public schools. A class from which the best results are obtained consists of about six pugils. The children gather around a piano, resting their hands and in some cases their 'arms upon the instrument. Soon after a piece is started the children will begin to count in correct time with the music, catching the accentuation of beats through the vibration of the wood. Occasionally a child would seem to progress beyond the mere response to time and count aloud with some approximation to the tune, says the Buffalo Express

When this fact was observed by the teacher the pupils were told to repeat the words "baby, baby," over and over and at the same time a Juliaby was played on the piano. In a short time it. was noticed that nearly all the children with whom the experiment was tried indicated the air with more or less distinctness. Still another experiment was tried by singing the scale into tha ear of a boy and playing it on the plano. After a few trials the pupil was able to sound the notes as well as could many children with unimpaired hearing. These tests seem to indicate that singing with some degree of accuracy may be taught to most deaf children. If such proves the fact a new picasure and a new educative influence will come into their lives.

Description of Feminine Freder Who Was Cyclonic in Her Destruction of Food.

All men and women eat. If they don't they won't last long, and no one need worry as to whether they count for much or not. But good eaters are usually very depend-on-able. By good eaters I do not mean large eaters or greedy eaters, though I may include some of both; but I mean the men and women who enjoy what they eat and show no disposition, either from dyspepsia or other form of indigestion, to quarrel with their food, says John Gilmer Speed, in the Criterion.

Gluttons, however, are not very lovely. I sat at a table once with a woman at a summer resort, who, every day for dinner, ate 12 ears of corn from the cob. That is more than the regulation midday feed for a horse. And in the operation she greased her hands, and her cheeks; and every now and again her nose was decorated with the well buttered grains. She was a sight, and at the end of the table she bred a famine that it took two waiters to relieve. And she was in repose not by any means a bad-looking woman; but in action-in action at the table she was a kind of human cyclone, leaving desolation in her path. She had had three husbands, and is a widaw again. What became of the poor men I never knew. Maybe she ate them.

The "Good Old Times."

In reviewing "The Early Married Life of Maria Josepha, Lady Stickney," the London Spectator comments on the light in which drunkenness was regarded at the beginning of the century. There was a chirstening of twins and rejoicing among the neighbors, temants and laborers, "All the guests,"

Among the laborers, however, "that extent of intoxication was not reached which causes men to be swine," Lady Sheffield, who received this account of the festivities, replies: "I would have given a great deal to be present; there is nothing I love so much as such sorr of festivities where one has the satisfaction of knowing that one makes one's friends happy as well as drunk." In London, she declares, "when you give a ball you affront many people, please a few, make many drunk and, ourself miserable."

A THANKSGIVING.

Ged, I thank Thee for the strength with which I make my fight: I had been conquered, aye and crushed, but for Thy might. I am not wholly overcome, I bow and bless Thy name; I stood and waited for the strength, and lo! it came.

God, I thank Thee that while tests of truth found me untrue, I have been faithful to my duty in a few.

That, though my faflures sicken me, I realize my blame And have enough sincerity to suffer shame.

God, I thank Thee for my failures; terrible their truth; But they taught me se'f-control, although they took my youth.

I thank Thee that I still can struggle, still believe and try, And that my faith in human nature did not die. God, I thank Thee that the conflict could not make me cold:

That my pulses leap as quickly as of old, That my sympathies still lead me, and though worldly wise, That I still can look about me with kind

God, I thank Thee, through my tears I still can see the stars; There is of music in my soul a few sweet

With gratitude which has survived the sordid grind and strife. Oh, God, I thank Thee for the love which glorities my life!

The Test of Love

F ALL the noble rivers that go bounding to the sea, none is more splendid than the Columbia. Its pineclad banks give a majestic setting for its silver stream. But why should it be called silver? At times it is the deepest green-deeper and more luminous than the heart of a jewel. There are hours when its cascades have a thousand colors, like mother-of-pearl. There are dawns, after the mist has lifted, when the broad surface of the river above the cascades is actually saffron or burnished gold.

Barbara Merriden knew it in every mood, and loved it whether it was somber with storm, or sullen in the harsh autumn days, or scintillating under the July sunshine. She was as much at home upon the river as on the land; and the firm earth, with all its comfort and beauty, could never give her the joy that she felt when the current took her boat in its strong embrace. She went to the river in her sorrowful moments as well as in her happy ones. She fled to it as a friend. When George Caxton told her that he loved blessing that had come into her life. But, some way, she did not feel the ecstasy that she had expected to. The pleasure in her heart did not rise to meet the splendor of water and sky and shore. She had often looked forward to this hour as the crowning joy

IN THE MYSTIC HOUR BY THE RIVER. of her life. But with grief she discovered that the song of nature had a higher note than the love lyric of her

Perhaps it was because the hour had been too long expected. George Caxton and Barbara Merriden had gone to school together. They knew every event of each other's lives. They had always been attached to each other. George had never thought of any other girl with emotion, and Barbara had long felt that she was destined to be his wife. She had said yes to his earnest question with gratitude and happiness, yet now, in the mystic hour by the river, with the sun shedding its last exquisite glow upon an unreal world, she felt a weariness of spirit at the moderation of her joy.

She was turning from the beautiful river, humiliated at the inadequacy of her own emotions, when she saw walking among the pines, with eyes fixed upon the distant glory of the sky, a young man whom she had never seen before. He did not see her till she was close by him, and then he looked with a start at the face of the girl, spiritual and exquisite with its deep emotional experience. He stopped and looked at her, rapt, as if she had been some recently embodied soul, created for this wondrous hour, and she stopped, too, enchanted by the eloquence of his face. When he spoke it was to say something remarkable:

"It is always mysterious and fearfully beautiful in these woods?"

"It is always beautiful here," she said, speaking as if in a dream. "And strangely.

like a phantom world-as it does tonight."

Never before in her life had she spoken in the way that she desired. It was her habit to frame her speech in commonplace words.

"I should like to walk out on that golden water." he went on. "It seems as if it might bear one up, does it not?" Barara had a fancy, and indulged herself in it.

"It will bear up anyone whose heart is light," she smiled. "Eut, mind you, it must have no care at all. It must be as light as ether."

"Would it bear you up?" he asked. She shook her head mournfully, and he said in a voice that moved her: "And I should sink like a stone." It seemed impossible for them to part while that witch light gleamed upon their enchanted wood, and when the shadows grew gray they became a part of them -like shadows they faded from each other's sight.

That night when Parlara went about her duties and afterward when she lay in her bed she found herself happy with the elate and trimphant happiness of which she had dreamed. George Caxton, her promised lover, seemed a part of the work-a-day world. Her thought turned away from him in spite of her efforts to be loyal.

She felt sure she would meet the stranger again in the woods, and she did, many times. He was a writer by vocation. He even confessed to being a poet. He was not well, he said. The city had worn on him. So he came home for a long rest there among the pines. His name was Cecil Under Barbara found it impossible to resist the charm of his personality. He seemed to make the whole world over for her. In vain she struggled to remember the truth and patience and strength of her betrothed. He was too well known to her to be seen through a glamour. With austere serenity he insisted upon an early marriage day. He refused, apparently, to feel any jealousy at the constant companionship of his sweetheart and Cecil Underwood. And Barbara was angry at him for this, too.

"He has no sensibility," she said to

One wild day when the wind cried through the tree tops and the waters lashed along as if in stress of pain, Cecil Underwood came to her in an imperative mood.

"You must come walking with me." he said. "The day expresses me. have to speak of the torment of my heart and I will keep still no longer even at your bidding.'

Barbara went out with him. They walked under the pines whose roar filled the world with their lamentings. They were silent, conscious of the storm within their souls, says the Chicago Tribune.

"Let us take a boat," said Barbara, when they reached the river.

"No, no," he protested, but she seemed not to hear him and untied her skiff and leaped into it.

"Come," she said. He hesitated, but followed. As the little boat felt the lift of the waves the pain in her heart seemed to lighten, and she let the current carry her along unconscious of the passage of time. Suddenly Cecil cried out:

"The rapids, Barbara! The rapids! See where you have taken us!" glanced behind her. It was true that the tossing white mane of the water horses was not more than half a mile away and the boat was quivering in the pull of their great power. Barbara smiled a little-it would not matter to her so much, she reflected, if her great problem was to be solved that way. But still, it was cowardly to die. She set her fine young strength to a resistance, rowing up stream and inclining the boat toward the southern shore. So absorbed was she in the task that she did not notice the man with her until she heard him crying with wild importunities to his Maker:

"Row, Barbara, row! Row girl!" Then, looking at him, she saw his face was corpse-white and quivering with fear, and the next moment he sank, an inert heap, at the bottom of the

"Get up," she commanded, "and take the tiller! Get up instantly!" He obeyed dimly, shaking and sick with

Barbara bent to her heavy task and made, by means of brave efforts, a little headway. But the wild horses plunged on and dragged her at their heels. She was almost on the verge of yielding to their relentless strength when a boat shot out from the bank. It came toward the quaking skiff with magnificent momentum. Barbara recognized the occupant at once. It was George Caxton. A hideous humiliation filled her soul. She was almost tempted to yield to that tugging of the wild horses. She looked at the half-fainting, praying creature beside her and then at the approaching man. And a moment of Gethsemane came to her. Then, white and courageous, she renewed her efforts. A moment later a line was thrown to her. She made it secure. Then she in her boat and George Caxton in his began a struggle which they soon conquered. George helped the trembling Cecil to shore, but Barbara leaped lightly to land and stood there smiling against the powers of the river, in fulness that I owe my life to you, George," she said. "It is a privilege." She held out her hand to the other "Good-by," she whispered. "Pity me! Pity me!" he cried.

"I do," she responded. "Good-by." He went slowly under the pines, walking feebly like a man who is old and ill. George looked after him with commiserating eyes, but Barbara was relentless. "Give me your arm," she said, with tender graciousness, "we will walk home together. George."

A PREHISTORIC RACE

Relics of Mound Builders Found in Pennsylvania.

Evidences of a People Who Were Possessed of More Intelligence Than the North American Indians.

Conclusive evidence that western Pennsylvania was inhabited by some prehistoric race more intelligent than the North American Indian was discovered at Logan's Ferry, Allegheny county, not long ago. A mound long supposed to be an Indian grave, but now believed to be the work of the mound builders, was opened and in it were found the distintegrated bones of two human beings. Many flint instruments and several strings of copper beads of crude manutacture also were found, the beads still intact upon the substance on which they originally were strung.

The mound is on the summit of a hill back from the Allegheny river. It stands out prominently in a sloping meadow, surrounded on two sides by forests. The form of the mound is like the frustrum of a cone, the diameter at the base measuring about 30 feet. The diameter of the superior plane is slightly less.

The mound was about five feet in height. Its symmetrical appearance has been destroyed more or less by plowing around it and by the trampling of domestic animals seeking shade unuer four large locust trees which adorn its crest. There also are the stumps of many trees, showing that the mound probably never has been disturbed since it was built centuries ago.

Among some of the residents of this locality there has been a story handed down from generation to generation from the early settlers that the mound contained buried treasure. This has been traced back for more than a century, but no person thought worth while investigating. Many doubted that the mound was anything more than a mark of nature, and set down tales about it as idle fancy. Last fall, however, scientific authority vouched for its genuineness as a monument of the curator of the Carnegie museum in the work of the prehistoric race whose | they make. mounds are found in several parts of Surrounding it were large stones, making a cist, and Venice. on the bottom was what appeared to be a layer of ashes and burnt stone.

Efforts were made to remove the skeleton intact, but the bones broke and crumbled to dust almost as soon as they were exposed to air. Roots of innumerable trees were also interwoven with the rocks, which greatly retarded the progress of the explorers.

More than 40 beads were found, and more than half of them remained intact on the material on which they had been strung originally. They are of hammered copper, about one-sixteenth of an inch in thickness, and are simply coiled over, having no trace of welding or fastening of any kind. They vary from one-eighth to more than an inch in length. The material on which they are threaded has the appearance of some peculiar fiber.

In the second trench a skull almost complete and the ribs and bones of the trunk of a second human body were found. They were perfect when first removed, but, like the others, soon crumbled to dust. No beads or ornaments were found in this trench, nor were the stones as large as those found in the other excavations.

How old the bones or the copper beads found may be cannot be determined by men versed in ethnology who have examined them. The mound builders e before the Indians and so have estimated

BOER ARMY ECCENTRICITIES.

In Warfare Every Member of the Army Is in Many Respects His Own General.

Imagine an army of expert riflemen and riders, animated by the sentiments of a hymn and fighting, not in battle line according to military methods, but from ambush, after the manner of the American Indians. Such has been, and in a large measure still is, the Boer army. Before it the British have gone down in shocking defent, because they failed to reckon with this invisible host. British troops in times past have marched across the South African plateau and have been unable to locate the Boer army, says Leslie's Monthly, Sometimes a burgher on horseback would be seen silhouetted in the distance, galloping rapidly or pausing a moment to scan the plain. Then he would disappear as if the earth had swallowed him. Regarding these vanishing figures as frightened ranchmen hurrying to escape the invaders, the English soldiers thought little about them, and boldly marched forward. confident in their ability to crush the disconcerted inhabitants.

Suddenly, from behind innumerable kopjes, or hillocks, a deadly, unerring fusillade would begin to decimate the invaders-the fatal accuracy of the Boer fire resulting in the destruction or compelling the capitulation of the eneown general, fighting without explicit orders, and finding his own fortress behind some available rock or mound. and thenceforth maneuvering as his own military cunning may dietate.
