eyes.
 "How was that?" asked Oakman.
 "He could have given you a squad of Wilkins' cavalry."
 "Of course," added Ackers, "and there wouldn't have been left anything for us to do."
 "Nor for any one else, except the undertaker," added the lieutenant grimly. "Those fellows were very pressing in their intentions."
 "Well," said Tim, as he proceeded to light his pipe, "Jim and me are going to see you through this time. After uncle here has given us all a square meal and our animals have had time to rest and eat, we'll be off. I hear that Sherman, with that army of 14,000,000, not counting the 1,700,000 niggers that have come in on the chorus, is so far over toward the sea that there ain't any doubt he's aiming for Savannah."

Lieutenant Oakman heartily grasped each hand in turn.

 "Such I happen to know to be the fact," replied the lieutenant, who saw no risk in making known what he had learned weeks before, though he took care to give no intimation of the channel through which the knowledge was filtered to him.
 "They seem to be taking their time," observed Masters thoughtfully. "And, though it's mighty tough, I don't know that I blame 'em. I suppose it's the fortunes of war, and it looks to me as if the wind up isn't far off."
 "When I learned that that big army had cut loose from Atlanta," added Ackers, "I said that if they dived plumb through the heart of the Confederacy it would make a split that never could heal. What do you think, lieutenant?"
 "There's no earthly doubt of it," replied the officer, who repressed the secret delight in his heart, through his sympathy for these two brave men that had fought so long and well on the losing side. "Grant is hemming in Lee in Virginia, and he cannot hold out much longer. When he surrenders, the Southern Confederacy dies."
 "And what will make Uncle Bob give in?" asked Ackers, over whose bearded face there spread an expression of pitiful pathos.
 "When he yields, it will be to overwhelming numbers. The wildest partisan of the north will never dare claim that her success was attained through superior generalship or heroism. Had the contending forces been equal, with the same resources for each, the south never would have been conquered."
 Jim Ackers struck his knee a resounding slap and swore an oath.
 "As true as gospel! Not forgetting, though, that we have had the advantage of fighting on the defensive; but then we're all Americans and belong to the same family, which the same being the case, I reckon, Yank, we can shake."
 Lieutenant Oakman heartily grasped each hand in turn.

CHAPTER XVIII. NEWS.

Those two grizzled Confederates were knights to the core. When about to mount for their eastward ride over the broad swath of destruction left by Sherman's army, Ackers gently took the arm of Lieutenant Oakman and, pointing to the horse which the Confederate had ridden to the cabin, said:
 "Lieutenant, that mare is acting as if she knewed you. If it's all the same to you, I'll ride Miss Eldridge's Jack and you can stick to your own."
 The tears came to the eyes of the Union officer. He had already recognized his mare Fanny, who whinnied her delight at sight of him, but he resolutely kept his face averted, feeling that he could ask no further favors of his friends.
 "Thank you, Ackers. I shall never forget your kindness."
 The next moment the officer had reached the happy mare, who stretched out her silken nose, which was caressed and patted, as well as her graceful neck, the endearment ending by the owner giving her a kiss. Then all three vaulted into the saddles and away they went.

Under the escort of the two Confederates and protected by the letter of Captain Trenholm no further trouble occurred, though the party were held up and questioned more than once. Winter had come, but its rigors were softened in that southern clime. Sherman was well over in South Carolina, his columns spreading devastation and ruin far and wide, but he had not yet got to Savannah when Lieutenant Oakman reached the army and reported to headquarters.
 At a safe distance he bade goodbye to Ackers and Masters, the former of whom promised to return the black horse to his mistress, many miles away in Georgia. The subsequent campaign of General Sherman is a matter of history. All know how he telegraphed the capture of Savannah as a Christmas present to President Lincoln, after which began his resistless sweep northward, on his way to join Grant, who was hammering the breath of life out of the famishing Army of Northern Virginia under the leadership of the great Lee in front of Richmond, and in the following spring the end came. The sun of the Southern Confederacy set forever behind the hills of Appomattox, and the Union was restored, mightier than before, to continue as long as grass grows and water runs.

Throughout those days, when Lieutenant Oakman, who had been made a captain, recalled his experience in Georgia, he was frequently impressed with a feeling that it was his duty to send an expression of gratitude to Miss Eldridge for her immense kindness to him. Finally he wrote the letter, though in the disturbed state of the country, he doubted whether it would ever reach her. It was written in February, in North Carolina, just after the battle of Bentonville and ran thus:

DEAR MISS ELDRIDGE—Thanks to your kindness in loaning me your splendid horse Jack, I was soon placed beyond all danger from pursuit. Then Ackers and Masters appeared at the right moment and, like the brave men they are, accompanied me all the way to my own lines. Ackers placed me under additional obligations by returning my own animal to me and by taking your horse back to you. I trust that no accident befell him or Jack, for I could not forgive myself if you failed to have your pony restored to you. If you will be good enough to drop me a line stating that he is with you again, it will be a vast relief to me.
 The times are so out of joint that this note may be a long time in reaching you and possibly may fail to find you at all. I give my address below, so that if the spirit moves you to write me a few lines I think they will eventually come to my hands. It will be a great pleasure to receive such an expression from you.
 In closing I beg you to express my fervent thanks to Captain Trenholm for his generous friendship, and I venture to hope that at no distant day I may have the pleasure of clasping his hand. Please say to him for me that one reason why we are pushing the war for the Union so hard is that the south is so full of glorious fellows like him that we are too selfish to let 'em go. They've got to stay with us.

But there are a few things to which pen and words are unequal. One is to express my gratitude to you for your acts to which my life is owing. Probably I shall soon pass from your remembrance, but you can never be forgotten by me.

One hour after this missive had passed beyond his control, Captain Oakman began a series of frantic efforts to obtain possession of it again.

"It is the most preposterous stuff that ever was written," was his humiliating thought. "Those last lines are a virtual declaration of love! They are impertinent and unpardonable! They will make her despise me! She will give them no heed! I shall never dare look in her face again! What possessed me? Confound it!"

Nevertheless, some months later, a dainty missive wound its way in and out of the wreck and remnants of the Southern Confederacy, and finally was opened by the trembling hands of the young veteran in his faraway northern home:

Lieutenant Ledyard Oakman (she didn't know of his promotion):

DEAR SIR—I thank you very much for your thoughtfulness in returning Jack, who, through the kindness of Mr. Ackers, reached me in due time, much benefited, I think, by the outing which he received.

I was glad to learn of your safe arrival among your friends without further mishap and trust that now that the unhappy war is over you will find full enjoyment and happiness with your dear ones in the north.

My brother, Captain Trenholm, asks me to send you his congratulations and good wishes. He joins me in saying that if ever in the future inclination should lead you to visit the south, now sitting in her sackcloth and ashes, you will be welcomed at the home of General Eldridge, where we can promise that your visit will be more quiet and less exciting than the former one. Very sincerely,
 ADELE ELDRIDGE.

Captain Oakman actually gasped for breath. Then with a rapidly throbbing heart he reread the precious letter.

"Captain Trenholm, her brother!" he repeated. "How can that be? Impossible! And yet that is what she writes. What can it mean?"

In his bewilderment and mystification he turned the letter over. Lo, on the other page was the inevitable female postscript:

P. S.—It has occurred to me that you may be puzzled by my reference to Captain Trenholm as my brother. When General Eldridge married my mother, she was the widow of a banker named Trenholm of New Orleans. Her only child was a boy, Wager. She therefore is the mother of him and me, though General Eldridge is my father, but not the father of Captain Trenholm. In law I suppose we are half brother and half sister, but you will agree that I am warranted in insisting that such a noble, brave man is my full brother and shall be such so long as he and I live.
 A. E.

When Captain Oakman finally grasped the height, length, breadth and depth of this momentous truth, his feelings were "peculiar," and I am sure the reader will grasp the height, length, breadth and depth of that statement.

CHAPTER XIX. CONCLUSION.

The wooing and winning of Miss Adele Eldridge by Captain Ledyard Oakman would form a delightful story of itself, but it is not our purpose to dwell upon it. In due time he found the necessary pretext for journeying southward, and when he presented himself at the home of General Arthur Eldridge he was warmly welcomed by the old veteran, his stepson, Captain Trenholm, the latter's mother and lastly by the young lady herself.

One piece of good fortune was in the hands of the ex-Union officer. He possessed abundant means. His southern friends, like the vast majority in that section, were impoverished by the war. Oakman could not offer them pecuniary help, but he did persuade Captain Trenholm to join him in a business venture in which the knowledge and experience of the ex-Confederate formed a fair offset to the capital invested by Oakman. Then, too, a valuable iron deposit was located on the plantation of General Eldridge, which, being developed, the soldier, before he was aware, found himself in comfortable circumstances. And then the wedding followed in due course.

But several years passed before the happy husband dared to tell the happy wife the secret of that first visit of his to the old plantation in Georgia.

It is a fact which may not be generally known that among the most valuable spies in the south were numbers of northern women who went thither and engaged in teaching when it became clear that war would soon break out between the sections.

This statement was made to me by General Sherman himself, and in my sketch of that great Union leader I have given a typical incident as it fell from his lips. One of the most daring and valuable female spies was Marian Harriman, from New England. As has been stated elsewhere, she secured an engagement as governess and companion in the family of General Eldridge, with the real purpose of gathering information for the Union armies. General Sherman knew her exact location, and when he started on his march from Atlanta to the sea and approached her neighborhood he detached Lieutenant Oakman and one of his scouts to communicate with Miss Harriman and bring back whatever she might have to send to him.

Previous to the visit of the officer, Sam Borland, the scout, apprised her of the situation, so that she was expecting the visit of the lieutenant. The two knew each other when they met, and it will be conceded that they played their parts well. The woman was so bitter in her sentiments that she was rebuked by Mrs. Eldridge and her daughter. She refused to remain under the same roof with the Union officer, which was a convenient arrangement, since it gave her the opportunity she needed to carry out her far-reaching schemes. She made her home with Mrs. Benware and her sister, they being the only two persons in that section whom she trusted with her secret. Thus located only a few miles distant, she was able to meet Oakman now and then secretly and maintain a perfect understanding with him.

Her well known sympathies enabled her to gain the confidence of several of the Confederate leaders, from whom she obtained valuable information. She proved her nerve by riding a considerable distance to their headquarters, and through arts intuitive with her sex she wove together in the form of drawings and memoranda on the sheet of paper that which Lieutenant Oakman declared General Sherman would pay a fortune to obtain.

The chief difficulty with the female spy was to get the paper to the Union commander. It was imprudent for her to undertake its delivery, and the visit of Oakman to that section, therefore, was to secure it from her.

It will be understood that when he was captured in the home of Mrs. Benware the call was a close one, not only for himself, but for Miss Harriman. Had the all important document been discovered, it inevitably would have been traced to her, despite every effort of the young man, and it often happens in time of war that the sex of a spy does not render her an "immune."

The legerdemain used on that occasion would have done credit to the late Harriman. Lieutenant Oakman passed the document to Miss Harriman, and she, in the most natural manner conceivable, stood just behind and at his side, denouncing him in scathing terms. And the feat was accomplished under the eyes of the squad of irregular guerrillas, eagerly seeking an excuse for taking his life.

Mrs. Benware, failing to see the lightninglike transfer, groaned in spirit over the seemingly fatal misfortune.

WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY is becoming very much of a success, and it looks as though it would find its first serious employment in the arena of war. The British fleet has just set out on its annual maneuvers for the year, and some of the vessels are equipped with the wireless apparatus. If it can be demonstrated, as is supposed, that a fast cruiser, scouting many miles in the direction of the enemy can by this means instantly convey news to the main body of the fleet, an immense advantage will have been achieved. It has already been practically demonstrated that magazines of powder can be blown up at long distances by this means.

A pretty young girl entered one of the cable cars in the business section of the city one day last week wearing on her left arm a band of black. There was no color about the rest of her costume, and with the exception of a black veil—one of the rather heavy veils which women not in mourning often wear—there was nothing about her that any woman might not have worn. Her tall suit was of dark gray, her little rough sailor hat had a black band, and her gloves were of gray castor. The black sleeve band left no doubt as to her being in mourning, but her suit for a business dress was much more comfortable and suitable than anything in all black would have been.—New York Tribune.

Royalty collectors are said to be working southern Seneca at present.

—The Genoa picnic was well attended in the afternoon. Messrs. Drummond and Burritt of Auburn made short addresses to a large audience. The Genoa ball boys won both games, defeating Aurora 16 to 5 and Ithaca 7 to 6 in eleven innings. The band concert was enjoyed by several hundred people and the dance later was largely attended. On Saturday the Genoa boys went to Groton and went up against Folger who pitched for Groton. The score was 11 to 1 in Groton's favor. The Genoa "second" nine also met defeat that day at the hands of Ledyard, 11 to 9. Among those who played with Ledyard were three from Auburn High School team.

—The Auburn stage encountered a terrific storm of wind, rain and lightning on the return trip Monday afternoon. F. B. Conger, who was also returning from Auburn, sought shelter in a wagon house some four miles south of the city. He drove in, and, another man who had also entered remarked that he guessed it was all wind. Immediately there was a crash and a blinding flash and down went man and horse. Both were uninjured and immediately left the barn. As soon as Mr. Conger caught the horse, he looked and saw that a large barn within a few feet of the wagon house, was on fire. Five horses which were in the barn were saved, but a large crop of grain and hay and some tools were quickly turned into ashes. It was a narrow escape for both man and beast.

—An exchange says: More towns die for the lack of confidence on the part of the business men, and lack of public spirit, than from the rivalry of neighboring towns or adverse surroundings. When a man in search of a business location goes to a town and finds everything brimful of hope and enthusiasm, he soon becomes imbued with the spirit, and as a result drives down a stake and goes to work with the same interest. When, however, he goes to a town and everyone expresses doubt and apprehension, moping about and indulging in complaints about imaginary evils which are likely to befall a town, he naturally feels it is no place for him, and at once shakes the dust thereof from his feet, while he hastens to some other town. When you are working for your town, you are doing all the more for yourself.

Killed by Lightning.

During the severe thunderstorm which prevailed in this section Saturday afternoon, Clayton Sherman, who lives two miles east of Groton, was struck by lightning and almost instantly killed.

Mr. Sherman and a neighbor and the latter's son took refuge in Mr. Sherman's barn to wait until the shower had passed. Mr. Sherman was sitting on a stool near a post. The lightning struck the barn, seemed to follow the post down to where he was sitting, struck Mr. Sherman, knocking off his hat and tearing his clothes. Death was almost instantaneous.

The barn was set on fire, but the fire was extinguished before much damage was done to the building. Two children standing a little distance in front of Mr. Sherman were not injured, neither were the men who were in the barn with him. The accident is a particularly sad one. Mr. Sherman was a young man and leaves a wife and family of small children. The funeral was held Monday afternoon, August 14, at one o'clock.

A Long Business Career.

Mr. N. S. Hawkins, the retiring member of the late firm of Hawkins & Todd of Ithaca, has been in business continuously since March 1st, 1861. Surely as long and successful a business career as falls to the lot of most men has been the experience of Mr. Hawkins. The new firm of Todd Bros., will strive to merit the large trade which the firm of Hawkins & Todd enjoyed, and we bespeak for them success and prosperity.

PROF. HUDSON H. PERRY,
Moravia, N. Y.

My Dear Sir: I have concluded that it would be best, all things considered, not to engage you for another year. I regret very much that I am unable to re-engage you, but that is the best I can say.

Very Respectfully,
GEO. SLOCUM.

TESTIMONIAL
GENOA, N. Y., Aug. 5, 1899.

It gives me great pleasure to speak in commendation of Hudson H. Perry, who has for the past two years taught as principal of our school. He is a young man of fine scholarly attainments and tastes, and has had a successful teaching experience. He is pleasant, tactful and of good judgement, and in character entirely above reproach. He has excellent habits and will set a good example to the young men of any community. His success in fitting scholars for Regents' examinations has been even better than that of teachers in much larger schools. I consider him well qualified to fill any position for which his judgement would permit him to apply. He is a very worthy fellow and a gentleman.

New Philippines Campaign is Virtually Commenced By Secretary Root.

TWO MORE TRANSPORTS.

Three New Regiments Ordered to San Francisco Soon as Transportation Can Be Secured.

Several Regular Army Men Named As Majors—War Department Map Out Plan to Put a Speedy End to Hostilities—Recruiting in South is Satisfactory.

Washington, Aug. 22.—Orders have been given which virtually inaugurate what is believed to be the final campaign in the Philippines. From now on the preparations will be pushed along the lines indicated by the latest order, which shows that the winter campaign against Aguinaldo has been mapped out at headquarters, and all that remains is the carrying out of instructions.

The colonels of three of the first new regiments of volunteers—the Twenty-seventh, Thirty-first and Thirty-fourth—have received the following:

"Orders of to-day will direct that your regiment be placed on route for San Francisco as soon as transportation can be provided by the Quartermaster General. On arrival at San Francisco your regiment will go into camp at the Presidio and its instruction in target practice continued until transports are ready to take your command to Manila. Acknowledge receipt, with any remarks you may have to make for the information of the War Department."

The Twenty-seventh regiment is at Camp Meade, the Thirty-first at Fort Thomas, Ky., the Thirty-fourth at Fort Logan, Col.

The Quartermaster's Department has directed that the Glenogle and Tacoma of the Northern Pacific Steamship line be chartered for carrying the troops. The Glenogle will carry 800 and the Tacoma 450 men.

Orders were issued placing all majors, captains and lieutenants appointed for the new regiments on recruiting duty. They will assist the nearest recruiting officer for about one week, and will then conduct their recruits to the rendezvous.

Speaking of the orders issued to the three regiments to proceed to San Francisco, General Corbin said that not only would the other regiments follow soon, but the ten recently ordered would be sent to Manila as soon as they could be organized.

Despite reports to the contrary, the department is satisfied with the results of the recruiting in the South for the first ten regiments. Both the regiment at Fort McPherson, Ga., and at Fort Sam Houston, Tex., were filled with Southerners. It is true, there were more rejections at the Southern recruiting stations than in the North. This was due to the fact that the physical standard fixed for the army is too high for many of the Southern boys. Their principal defect was in chest measurement and weight.

Although the department has not provided for the organization of any of the new regiments in a Southern State, many Southern enlistments are expected. One of the regiments will be formed at Jefferson Barracks. This post is convenient to several Southern States, and, no doubt, many Southern boys will enlist there.

The department in fixing the rendezvous for the new regiments was desirous of having them on a direct route to the points from which the troops are to be embarked for the Philippines. It is the intention to move the regiments to the front as fast as formed.

The situation is satisfactory in the Philippines to those acquainted with the manoeuvres about to be executed. The American line now extends from Imus, fifteen miles south of Manila, to Antipalo and Morozog, on Laguna Bay; from Pasig north to Malolos; from Bocalor to Angeles, sixty miles north of Manila. Included in territory thus indicated are the provinces of Cavite, Marong, Manila, Bulacan and Pangasinan. This is practically all the Tagal territory in the Philippines.

With the inhabited territory completely under American protection, local governments can be established and the natives encouraged to conduct their own internal affairs under the protection of troops. Thus it will be shown that there is no purpose of holding the Filipinos under subjection more than the maintenance of orders requires, and the benign purposes of the Government will have free scope in execution. Gradually, it is believed, the Filipinos must tire of the wilderness and come in to surrender. A decisive engagement is believed to be impossible, but, wherever the enemy is caught, he will be attacked. Whatever territory is captured, there will be a garrison established for occupation until peace is declared.

Filipinos Kill Lieut. Drew.

Manila, Aug. 22.—One lieutenant of the Twelfth infantry was killed and another was wounded seriously while reconnoitering north of Angeles.

The Americans encountered a large force of natives and drove them from their positions. Lieutenant Cole of the Sixth infantry, with eighty men, encountered 100 Filipinos entrenched in the mountains of the island of Negros and routed them after an hour and a half of severe fighting.

The Americans had three men slightly wounded. Nineteen dead natives were counted in the trenches. Six rifles and a quantity of reserve ammunition were captured.

The natives recently cut the cable in Laguna de Bay leading to Calamba, on the south shore of the lake, but the break has been repaired.

General Otis is to Stay.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 21.—Secretary Root makes official denial that Gen. Miles is to relieve Gen. Otis of his command in the Philippines.

SULLIVAN MAY BE ALIVE.

Rochester People Not Willing to Believe the Lawyer is Dead.

Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 22.—Several dispatches have been received in this city making inquiries regarding Josiah Sullivan, the Rochester lawyer who is supposed to have committed suicide by jumping into Long Island Sound from the steamer Puritan on July 25 last.

The authorities are not inclined to believe that the dismembered remains that were fished out of the water near Greenport, L. I., are those of Sullivan. They think it strange that no information has been given them from this city, and no inquiries made regarding the remains. About the only things on which an identification could be based, were the shoes. These were size 8, width D.

J. S. Hunn, who is attorney for Mrs. Sullivan, has been asked why it is that Mrs. Sullivan has not made some effort to find out about her husband's death. He said:

"I do not believe that Mr. Sullivan ever wore a No. 8 shoe. He was tall and very fond of walking and had a large, well-formed foot. He wore a 2½ shoe. Mrs. Sullivan is at present with her mother, near New Haven, Conn., taking care of her, as she is in very poor health."

Since the report of Sullivan's death a dozen or more actions have been brought in the Rochester courts showing that his property was very much involved. Mrs. Sullivan's lawyer says that Sullivan was insolvent, and declares that to be the reason why she has not tried to look up his estate. This attitude is what leads many Rochester people to believe that Sullivan is alive and well.

One Boy Shoots Another.

Bridgeton, N. J., Aug. 21.—Robert Hand, aged fourteen, a son of Capt. Ellis Hand, a wealthy oyster planter of Port Norris, lies at his home dangerously wounded, with a bullet in his side. William Burke, aged seventeen, of Dorchester, has been committed to the county jail without bail to await the result of young Hand's injuries. Burke has been in the habit of riding his wheel over to Port Norris and the boys there have grieved and tormented him. On his last trip he took a revolver along and when the boys assailed him he pulled it out and used it. The ball struck young Hand in the right side, near the sixth rib, and it is feared the wound will prove mortal.

Runaways Located in England.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Aug. 21.—Chief of Police Kilne has received a cablegram from London which says that Mrs. Alice A. Jones and George Stevenson have been arrested. The pair eloped from Parsons, near here, about ten days ago, after forging several papers, by which they raised over $1,000. The woman is the wife of John A. Jones, a well-to-do miner of Parsons, and Stevenson was a boarder at the house, a good looking man of about thirty-five. Mrs. Jones is ten years older. Proofs of their guilt will be sent to England at once, and extradition papers will be asked for.

Merritt Sees the President.

Hotel Champlain, N. Y., Aug. 21.—Major General and Mrs. Wesley Merritt have arrived from Governor's Island. The General will go over the situation in the Philippines with the President. Governor Roosevelt arrived here yesterday afternoon in a special car attached to the newspaper train. He will remain at Hotel Champlain until this evening, when he will go to the Catholic Summer School grounds, at Cliff Haven, where a reception will be tendered him in the Auditorium.

Fusionists in a Turmoil.

Lexington, Neb., Aug. 21.—After an all-night session the Democratic and Populist Conventions called to name a candidate for the unexpired term of Congressman W. L. Greene, who died, adjourned in a wrangle in which fists were shaken and "Traitor" hurled back and forth. The Populist Convention nominated W. Neville of North Platte, and the Democrats M. C. Harrington of the same city. The latter withdrew. This is regarded as the beginning of the end of fusion in Nebraska.

Congressman Reed Will Resign.

Alfred, Me., Aug. 21.—Amos L. Allen of Alfred, private secretary to Thomas B. Reed, has given out the information that Mr. Reed's resignation will be in the hands of Gov. Powers before the session of the Governor and Council on Tuesday, and that it is to take effect Sept. 1. Mr. Reed expects to begin his law practice in New York early in September.

Special Train For Soldiers.

Omaha, Aug. 21.—Gov. Poynter has announced the failure to raise by popular subscription the $37,000 required to furnish a special train to bring from San Francisco the First Nebraska Regiment. He said $20,000 was lacking. D. E. Thompson of Lincoln advanced that amount and the special train has been hired.
