NEWS ABOUT THE STATE

Paragraphs of the Week's Happenings Clipped from the Tribune's Exchanges.

It turns out that Lansing has quite a fair apple crop.

The shipment of cows to Cuba is reported already quite large.

Lehigh Valley trains no longer stop at the West Shore Junction at Weeds port.

The Groton Creamery Co. have the machinery and equipment for their factory all in place.

The fence viewers of the town of Covert have allowed William Crouse $64.00 for sheep killed by dogs.

No newspaper reader in the United States can hereafter have any doubt as to how the new Secretary of War looks.

Some people will be mean enough to say that it was in strict accord with the fitness of things that the body of Bob Ingersoll should have been cremated.

The Spencer "village fathers" have presented the fire laddies of that place with a check for $100, just for encouragement. And that is the right kind of stuff to do it.

Edward Hancy of Hayt's Corners had a narrow escape recently. He was standing near a large buzz saw in operation at Silas Covert's when the saw burst, the flying fragments grazing the young man's head.

A New Book.

THE MYSPERY OF MULLER HILL, comprising a Charming Love Story of Pioneers Days, a History of the Mysterious Settler of the Georgetown Hills, and an Interesting Article Disclosing the Identity of the Wealthy Refugee, who was afterwards King of France. Illustrated with halftones of the Muller Mansion and Charles X. GLEANER Press, DeRuyter, N. Y.; price, postpaid, 35 cents.

This book treats of a mysterious event in local history which has always been recalled with great interest in Central New York. Early in the present century a French nobleman with a large retinue of servants penetrated the almost unbroken wilds of what was then a portion of Herkimer county and on the crest of the Georgetown hills established a palatial residence which was at once a home and a fortress. The walls of the large structure were formed of massive cherry timbers, hewn and placed on end side by side, making a bullet-proof citadel; this stood in the center of a clearing from which every tree, stump and bush within rifle shot had been removed. The refugee brought a vast sum of gold into the wilderness and scattered it with a lavish hand. He founded a settlement with shops, mills and stores, and for a few years employed scores of men in improving and beautifying his 2,700-acre farm. During all this time he kept close watch of events in Europe, and on the eve of Bonaparte's downfall suddenly left America for the Old World. Three years later, in 1816, he reappeared in Georgetown, to find that the trusted servants left in charge had stripped the place of all its valuables, and fled; the mills and shops were silent and desolate and ruin was everywhere. Returning to New York he disposed of the place at a great sacrifice and returned to Europe.

An electric railway is the one thing needed now to make Poplar Ridge an ideal home village. We think it needs no argument to show that a trolley line from Auburn to Ithaca along the main thoroughfare would be, not only a convenience to the people, but an enterprise that would bring to the projectors the very best returns. and fondle it. And it was not once but] many times that this audacious thing occurred right under his own eyes.

More shocking than all, the mother observed the shameful proceeding and gave no evidence of being offended by its manifest impropriety.

Captain Trenholm would not listen to the proposition that their guest should take the horse of Miss Eldridge. Indeed there was no necessity for it, since he had a fine animal of his own, which was placed at the lieutenant's disposal, and since so much faith was reposed in the captain's letter of introduction, as it may be termed, it was agreed that Lieutenant Oakman should take his departure on the morrow at daylight.

Late that evening, when he bade his friends good night and ascended to his room, he had hardly locked his door behind him when he caught sight of a folded piece of paper lying on the stand, with his name penciled on the outside. He opened and read:

You must leave this house tonight. If you wait until tomorrow's sun, your life will pay the penalty. Place no reliance on the captain's promise. The plot is complete, and immediate flight alone will save you. You know what to do.

CHAPTER IX. BY MOONLIGHT.

Those lines told a story too ominous to be disregarded. The hand in which they were written was labored and disgnised, but Lieutenant Oakman knew though it had not perfectly healed. For the writer as unerringly as did the one all purposes it was as strong and as who penciled the words.

He held the candle that he had brought to his apartment in front of by the window. the slip of paper until every syllable was read. Then he turned the missive sound of voices below stairs. Indeed it over and glanced at the other side. was understood when he bade his over and glanced at the other side. There was nothing more. The fateful friends good night that it was the inmessage was stamped upon his brain forever.

Setting down the candle, he twisted up the paper, held one end to the flame and did not stir until the charred atoms dropped to the floor. Every vestige was whether he should descend and leave by gone, and no harm could ever come to a lower door or drop from the window. The writer of the friendly warning. The officer sat down in his chair, which was placed close to the window, whose sash was raised. It was through that window that the hand was thrust in answer to his signal from the margin of the wood. What had become of that ! individual who thus began a stealthy communication only to terminate it abruptly at sight of the negro lad standing near the Union officer? How came he in that room and whither had found. A low, hollow murmur seemed he taken himself during the stay of the prisoner?

But, seated by his window, the lieutenant felt that he might go on speculating and theorizing until involved in an inextricable maze. As an intelligent being he must resolutely face the facts and guide his course accordingly.

Self preservation demanded that he should leave that house at night and by stealth, and he determined to do so.

He had precious little in the way of luggage to incumber him. He carried only a few small toilet articles in one of his pockets, and that included all he brought to the mansion of General Eldridge.

It was with a curious emotion that he examined the sleeve of his military coat. The slash made by the knife of Jim Ackers, the better to examine the wound, had been sewed together with such deftness that the seam was hardly visible.

And the needle and thread that did it were manipulated by the dainty fingers of Miss Eldridge. Lieutenant Oakman suddenly gripped the sleeve fiercely to tear it asunder. Then his face flushed with shame at the unworthy thought. Had he possessed an extra garment he would have donned it and treasured the mended coat to the end of his life.

He gathered his few personal belongings and placed them in his pocket. Then the revolver was examined, including his small supply of cartridges. He felt no pain in his wounded arm, serviceable as ever. Then he softly blew out the candle and again sat down Listening carefully, he could hear no tention of all to retire. The stairs in the other division of the house had been used, which accounted for his not hear ing any footsteps.

The question he asked himself was If Captain Trenholm suspected any-

A minute later the form came into plain sight.

CHAPTER X. A MERITED OPINION.

Lieutenant Oakman drew his revolver and held his position beneath the window, close to the side of the house. If his enemies attacked, as he expected them to do, they would not find him unprepared.

Standing thus, he kept his gaze fixed upon the point where the flitting form of a man had shown a moment before. It was impossible to guess around which end of the dwelling the second individnal would appear, but the officer was sure he would hear the stealthy footstep in time to be ready for him.

Two or three minutes had passed, when a faint flicker under the trees indicated that his foe was moving; but, instead of approaching the lieutenant, he began edging toward the farther side of the grove.

Had he been the only foe to consider Oakman would have run forward and, revolver in hand, called him to account, but there was no saying how many others were near, and the officer would have been a poor soldier thus to uncover himself.

As the man receded he came into plainer view because of the moonlight, which was less obstructed, until finally he walked out from the streaked shadows and began ascending a slight rise lying just beyond. This brought him into distinct sight, and, with an involuntary exclamation of surprise, the lieutenant recognized him.

There was no mistaking that flapping straw hat, the stooped shoulders and the shuffling gait. They could belong to no one but Pete, the old slave of Gen-

A door on the other side of the house was opened and closed. The sound was slight, but in the profound stillness he heard it too distinctly to be mistaken. "It is the captain, " thought Oakman. "He is on the watch and does not mean eral Eldridge.

"So it is he who has been playing the spy !" muttered the lieutenant to himself. "I know of the confidence which these people place in their colored servants, but hardly thought it extended to the point of setting one of them to watch the action of a guest."

The negro was plodding in the direction of his own cabin and walking faster than usual, as if his errand was urgent. "He is not going home, but to apprise others of my flight. Pete must have seen me drop from the window despite the darkness-sh!"

In the flurry of the moment the officer had forgotten the second person. but another dim flickering near the point where the African had been standing apprised him that despite his watchfulness this individual had passed around the end of the house, joined Pete under the trees and was now stealing back again to the front of the dwelling.

Oakman's position was the more favorable, for not only was the side of the building near the ground completely veiled in shadow, but he kept so close that at every stealthy step his elbow brushed the structure. His intention was to intercept Captain Trenholm-for he was certain it could be no one elseand to force a reckoning with him.

Half the intervening distance was passed when Oakman paused, fearful of going farther lest he should betray himself. He could make out the figure that was moving toward the front of the dwelling unaware that if he continued in a direct line he must inevitably reveal himself by crossing a brief space partly illumined by the moon's ays.

A minute later the form came into plain sight and was identified by Oakman, who if astonished when he recognized the slave was literally dumfounded by the discovery that the person before him instead of being Captain Trenholm was Miss Eldridge.

The revolver almost dropped from his grasp and he stared in open mouthed amazement until the young woman passed from sight, stepped lightly on the porch and entered the dwelling, closing the door after her.

Never for an instant had he dreamed that it could be she who had met the slave under the trees, held a whispered conference with him and then returned within doors, where it was not to be supposed her mother or Captain Trenholm had any knowledge of her extraordinary conduct.

But she had come and gone like a phantom of the night, and the quick witted officer readily solved the meaning of it all.

of that officer may have calmed her fears for a time, but they did not remove them. She believed it was the same with myself. She ordered Pete to bring her horse from his hiding place and to watch whether I attempted to leave secretly. If I did so, he was to place the animal at my disposal." Frank W. Ames.

This explanation of what he had seen was so reasonable that the lieutenant accepted it as the true one, even though some of its phases were not wholly reasonable.

Why did not the African go straight up to the officer, when he saw him drop to the ground, and make the situation clear, instead of affecting all this mystery? Doubtless he was acting under the orders of his young mistress. But why did she give such strange directions, and why did she herself act so whimsically?

The answer that Lieutenant Oakman gave to these puzzling questions could not have been surpassed in wisdom: "She is a woman."

But he had put his hand to the plow, and it was too late to turn back. He had resolved to get out of the neighborhood without delay, and, valuable as a fleet horse would have been to him, nothing could have induced him to accept the favor at the hands of Miss Eldridge.

Passing forward among the trees, he made a wide circuit beyond and finally vaulted the low fence into the highway, over a portion of which he had ridden, when he left General Sherman's army to enter upon the most memorable experience of his life.

He was now in the vivid moonlight. Looking up at the sky, he saw that the ragged, fleecy clouds had drifted past and the orb was swimming through the clear space, with its rays free and unobstructed, as they promised to be for several hours to come. The stillness remained as impressive as before. Not a twinkle of light gleamed in any direction, but from some distant point came the faint crowing of a cock, who, after repeating the call several times, was answered by another from a spot still more remote.

Probably these fowls on awaking at night recalled the fact that they were still alive after the passage of Sherman's army near them and they could not help "crowing" over their good fortune.

The officer's pause at the side of the highway was brief. He struck off at a swinging pace, but had gone less than a hundred yards when he was checked tinctness. The men were approaching by a ghostly:

"Hello, dar!"

The voice was from the rear. Instinctively drawing his pistol the lieutenant wheeled about to meet the new danger.

Pete, the old negro slave, was leadand saddled, through a gap in the fence. Oakman calmly waited until he came up, when he asked brusquely :

Broad, open fields stretched on the right and left. At intervals the old. roomy mansions of the planters appeared, all standing well back from the roadway and surrounded by shade trees, with the negro quarters near at hand. Now and then the starlike point of light twinkling among the shadows showed that some one was astir despite the lateness of the hour, but as yet the fugitive had not seen a living person after leaving Pete, the slave.

But standing at the parting of the ways, peering about and listening, he heard a startling sound. It was the rhythmic beating of horses' hoofs on the earth. It came from the rear and steadily grew more distinct, proving that a party of horsemen were in pursuit of him.

"They are the men who had plotted to visit the home of General Eldridge and to give me the 'witch's parole. Captain Trenholm might have tried to prevent it, but it would have availed added the lieutenant. "How I could laugh at these fellows if I was in the saddle of that horse which Pete offered me. And yet if he were here I would still refuse."

in an unreasonable mood and gave another proof of the justice of the opinion expressed by the slave.

Lientenant Oakman felt he had done the meanest act of his life in sending that message to Miss Eldridge. She had made an honest effort to befriend him after the tender ministration of herself and mother, and he had repelled it with often believe in the old saying insulting words instead of accepting the proffer with his profoundest gratitude.

Why?

Captain Trenholm," as he expressed it. Heavens, if she only would offend him is doubtless true to a certain beyond the possibility of pardon, how the heart of the fugitive would leap with joy!

But perhaps he did not comprehend the mysteries of his own heart. When a worthy man has said or done an unworthy thing, his desperation urges in their good baking and cookhim to go to further lengths, which fact will account for Lieutenant Oakman's absurd but characteristic hope that he might have a second opportunity to turn aside more pointedly than before the gentle hand helpingly extended to him.

highway. If they followed the same course with him, he must soon be overtaken. While there were no woods on either side of the road, he was confident of escaping detection by climbing the ing a handsome mottled pony, bridled provided he adopted the stratagem before being observed by his pursuers. Prudence demanded that he should do this at once, but he was too impatient to throw away any time. He increased his pace, continually listening and often pausing to glance to the rear. When the sounds indicated that the horsemen were close to the fork of the road, Oakman vaulted over the fence and stood in the attitude of intense attention. The ground was dry for the season, and in the stillness the hoofs rang out with unusual clearness. There were several moments when he was certain the party had turned to the right and would soon pass the spot. Before secreting himself he meant to wait until he could see the foremost horsemen. But they did not appear, and the receding sounds proved that they had ridden past the fork and were galloping up the main highway with unabated speed. "How long will they keep at it?" he asked himself, climbing back into the road. "I don't see how they can expect to capture me when they must know I am sure to discover their approach. Perhaps they mean to get in front, raise a hue and cry, and by rousing the country head me off. " Lieutenant Oakman's danger was real, and he knew it. He had nothing to fear from the regular Confederate forces, for he was in uniform and carried with him the proof that he was a regularly exchanged prisoner, entitled to a safe conduct through the enemy's lines. But there were hovering on the outskirts of the Union and Confederate armies troops of irregular cavalry, technically known as guerrillas, who dis-regarded the laws of civilized warfare. The reprosch of the existence of such men belongs in a greater or less degree to both sides during the war. The belief of Lieutenant Oakman was that a party of these free riders had learned of his presence at the home of General Eldridge and had arranged to visit the place and summarily "remove" him. He fled just in time to escape, or perhaps to postpone a fight with them. He continued his journey like a man to whom the country was unfamiliar. He was on the alert, and had not gone far, when he descried that for which he was looking. From a dwelling on the left shone a light, its few rays piercing the trees and reaching the highway, from which it was separated by a long lane, inclosed by tall trees, whose tops appeared almost to meet. The lieutenant hurried his pace and, turning through the open gate, entered the avenue that recalled many he had. seen in his native state and for the moment caused a touch of homesickness. He half expected to hear the baying of Ganaral Ela dog, but the

"Well, Pete, what do you want with me?"

"Reckon yo' knows, boss. Miss Adele done send me wid her hoss Jack a-sayin dat yo' am to take him wid yo' an ride like blazes, an yo' needn't be 'tickler to send him back, bein as yo' may not hab de chance"-

The animal was a beautiful pony, and would have borne his rider with the speed of the wind. He was beyond value to the fugitive, who folded his arms, looked sternly at the African and said in measured tones:

"Give my thanks and compliments to Miss Eldridge and tell her that, inasmuch as Captain Trenholm expressed his displeasure last evening at the idea of my using her horse, I could not allow her to run the risk of offending him."

Pete stood a moment in silence, with one hand holding the bit of the superb beast. Then he scratched that part of his crown which showed through the opening in his hat.

"I knows, boss, dat yo' hab said sumfin, but de debbil himself can't make out de meanin ob it."

Lieutenant Oakman was too much in earnest to smile. He simplified his language and made it clear that he declined to make use of Miss Eldridge's horse, for reasons explicitly set forth.

Pete nodded his head and grunted. Made angry by his own meanness, the officer turned about and strode off without another word. He had gone but a little way, when Pete called to him.

"Well, what is it ?" demanded Oakman, turning impatiently around.

"I forgot to tole yo' sumfin."

"Be quick about it !" "When dat Union army marched frough Jawgy, it luff behind de all fired-est fool dat eber come out ob Yankeeland! Good night, boss!" CHAPTER XI.

A HALT AT THE ROADSIDE.

When Lieutenant Oakman had walked a hundred yards farther, he slackened his pace and looked back. The colored man, leading the horse, was just fading from view in the moonlight.

"He's right. I am a fool, but I wouldn't accept any favor from her, if my life depended on it.'

For a man traversing a highway for the first time, the Union officer revealed a knowledge which, to say the least, was singular. A half mile from the plantation of General Eldridge he came to a forking of the ways.

"I am to turn to the right," he reflected, scanning his surroundings, "and less than a mile farther I will find the house where I am to halt and await orders-that is, if everything goes right."

Mr. Alger must feel that he has been Root-ed out of office.

THE NUMBER of American citizens killed or wounded on American railroads during the year which ended June 30, last year, as given by the Inter-state Commerce commission reports is largely in excess of the number killed and wounded in the war in Cuba and the Philippines. Here are the figures: Killed on the railroads, 6,859; wounded on the railroads, 40,822; total of railroad casualties, in one year, 47,741. Only 221 of the killed were passengers. The risk of sudden death accepted by the individual American citizen who buys a railroad ticket and takes his seat in the car is very slight, though quite appreciably greater in this country than in Europe. The number of railroad employes killed in the year in question was 1,958. This leaves 4,680 victims to be accounted for. A considerable percentage of them were tramps-lazy or footsore fellows who stole transportation once too often. The deadly grade-crossing and the track-walking habit account for most of the rest. Of the wounded 2,945 were passengers and 31,761 were railroad employes. The commission's information is that 6,988 of the casualties are to be credited to that particularly dangerous part of railroad work, the coupling and uncoupling of cars. Of the railroad employes on duty that year, one in 447 was killed, one in 58 was wounded. Of the trainmen on duty that year, one in 150 was killed, one in 11 was wounded.

Patriotic Union Springs Extends Warm Hospitality.

Fully three hundred members and friends of the old 3d artillery and 19th infantry, New York volunteer veteran association congregated Thursday in Union Springs for their twentyeighth annual reunion. The village was ablaze with brilliant coloring; the business blocks and private residences were handsomely decorated, and an arch beautifully wreathed in bunting and bearing G. A. R. insignia, spanned the main street near the center of the village. To add to the pleasure of the occasion the villagers vied in extending cordial welcome and hospitality to the visiting veterans. The members were particularly grateful to Clinton T. Backus, jr, who threw open his home and spacious grounds for the campfire of the afternoon. George S. Fordyce, present and next assemblyman, was also untiring in his efforts to give the veterans a good time. One of the features of the day was a parade led by the Union Springs band. Forty-five pretty girls. each representing a state of the union came next in column and then followed the surviving members of the brave battery and regiment that fought for the preservation of the union. Auburn was chosen as the place for holding the next reunion, the last Thursday in July, 1900. The officers for next year are: President, Squire O. Stockwell; vice-president, Carlton B. Matthews; treasurer, William A. Ramage; secretary, Orin McCarty; chaplain, Rev. Henry W. Sanford.

There will be services as usual on next Sabbath at the Presbyterian church. Mr. Gillam will preach in the morning on "Newness of Life." Subject of the evening sermon, "Gratitude."

Base Ball Notes.

Last Saturday the Auburn High School boys visited Genoa and put up a first class game of ball. The Auburn boys were gentlemen in every respect, and it was the general opinion of the attendants that this was the best game of the season. Only the superior hitting won the day for Genoa. Our old friend McElroy, who covers second base for Moravia, had charge of the game and gave good satisfaction. The score:

Genoa 6. Auburn 3.

The Genoa boys went to Ithaca Tuesday and went against the cycle club team, losing the game 11 to 10 in 9 innings. The errors were numerous and the hits scattered, otherwise the score would have looked different. McDermott relieved Hosmer in the 5th inning and pitched a good game. Tomorrow the Trumansburg pect an easy time for Genoa. In case the visitors bring the famous Lee brothers for the battery it will be a hard rub, however. The return game between Genoa and Ithaca will occur at this place on Friday, August 11.

The Genoa second nine is anxious Goes merrily on. Thousands of satisfied customers is our authority for saying such bargain giving was never known in Auburn. This great sale will continue up to and include Monday, August 7. We mention some important items omitted in our advertisement announcing this sale.

Three New Regiments Will be Ready to Start for Manila on That Date.

WILL SAIL SEPTEMBER 10

SATISFACTORY OUTLOOK

The 27th, 30th and 31st Will be the First Regiments to Organize For Actual Service.

President Has Sent No Message to Otis Only Those Commending His Work in the Philippines-Colonel Pettit, of Ft. Thomas, Ky., Has Already 1,150 Enlistments.

Washington, July 31.-Colonel Pettit, commanding the Thirty-first regiment at Fort Thomas, Kentucky, has telegraphed to the War Department that his enlistments number 1,150, which is within 200 of the full quota of the regiment. He has withdrawn the recruiting3 offices and the regiment is being organized for actual service. He says that in about a month he will be ready for the front.

It is said at the War Department that the Thirty-first regiment, the Twenty-seventh and the Thirtleth no doubt will be ready to sail for Manila on the Grant, Sherman and Sheridan about September 10.

The number of enlistments for the Philippine regiments on Saturday was 456, making a total of 7,092. The following officers have been assigned to the volunteer regiments:

Thirty-third infantry Fort Sam Houston, Texas-Captain Frederick Hadra, assistant surgeon, and First Lieutenant John C. Greenwalt, assistant surgeon. Thirty-sixth infantry, Philippine Is-lands-Major F. H. Titus, surgeon Captain Ceorge W. Matthews, assist-ant surgeon, and First Lieutenant Isaac W. Brewer, assistant surgeon.

Thirty-seventh infantry, Philippine Islands-Major F. A. Winter, surgeon, and Captain Thomas B. Anderson, assistant surgeon.

General Greely, Chief Signal Officer, has received a dispatch from Major R. E. Thompson, commanding the Signal Corps in the Philippines, saying that Major Maxfield has laid a cable across Laguna de Hay, from Taguig to Ca-lamba, the last town to be captured from the Filipinos. This insures uninterrupted telegraphic communication between Manila and the advanced posts of what has been the Filipino country.

THE ERIE FLYER WRECKED Two Persons Killed and Many Cars Smashed to Spilaters.

Port Jervis, N. Y., Aug. 1.-Two trains were wrecked on the Erie Railroad as the result of a landslide one mile east of Lackawaxen. At first it was reported that several passengers on one of the trains were kil. 1, but this proved to be unfounded.

An Erie freight train, east bound, which turned over on the westbound track, however, caused the death of the fireman and engineer of a wrecked engine belonging to the westbound Chicago express No. 7, the vestibule passenger train for Buffalo. At least twenty-five persons, the majority of whom were passengers on the express train, also were injured. Three persons still are missing and may be added to the list of dead.

The wreck was preceded by a cloudburst and storm which lasted for two hours. A section of the bank fell on the eastbound tracks directly in front of the freight train. Several trees went down with the rocks and the earth, and the freight cars and engine were turned over directly across the west-bound tracks. Sixty freight cars con-stituted the train, though only twentytwo left the rails, and the wreckage was piled up on the westbound tracks just as No. 7 Chicago express appeared, running at the rate of fifty miles an hour.

The engine of the express train crashed into the wreck, and the baggage car, combination and buffet car and two Pullman sleepers were piled up on the tracks immediately in front of the wrecked freight cars. The first sleeper was split into two parts as a result of the accident, and the passengers were thrown thirty feet down a bank. Fire started at once, and four cars of No. 7 and nine of the freight cars were burned.

Several thieves from Port Jervis, it is supposed reached the scene of the wreck on the relief train, ransacked the clothing of the passengers in the period of excitement. F. View, a millinery decorator of No. 3 West Third street. New York, lost clothing containing $300 in bills and a gold watch. F. S. Kilpatrick of Denver lost $100. gold watch, a diamond pin and a diamond stud.

It is not thought that any of the injuries are of a serious enough nature to prove fatal.

Cloudburst at Port Jervis.

Port Jervis, N. Y., July 31 .- A cloudburst and wind storm of unusual severity struck this valley. It flooded the surrounding country and did a great amount of damage. The wind blew down the signal tower at Wescolang, on the Delaware division of the Erie road, setting it on fire and the operator barely escaped with his life. The west-bound track for a discunce of forty-five feet was washed out as were also the dams of scores of streams and highways were undermined. Many bridges were carried away.

Cars of the Big Consolidated Company Are Said to Be Poorly Patronized.

STRIKERS ARE JUBILANT.

Merchants, in Fear of Losing Trade, Yield to the Request Made by the Union Men of the City.

Business Mon of All Classes, Refuse to Sell Goods to Those Who Patronize the Big Consolidated Lines-Far-Reaching Effect of Strikers' Latest Move.

Cleveland, Aug. 1 .- Now that order has been practically restored within the city the street railroad strike has resolved itself into a general boycott of the Big Consolidated Company and everybody who rides upon its cars. Apparently the strikers have the sympathy and active co-operation of all the labor organizations in the city, and not only are merchants being punished for riding on the tabooed cars, but they are warned against selling goods to persons who do ride, on threat of losing the trade of union men. Instances are given in which druggists have retused to sell medicine to persons who were accused of patronizing the Big Consolidated, and physicians have been boycotted for riding on the cars while going to see their patients.

The boycott is most severe on the small dealers who do business on streets that are populated largely by union men and their sympathizers. A number of these merchants have published advertisements offering rewards ranging from $25 to $500, for evidence that they or any of their clerks or relafives have ridden on the cars since the strike began, and a number of cominunications have been sent to the papers by physicians, grocers, butchers and others, protesting their innocence of the charge of having patronized the rallroad company.

As yet the big retail merchants have not felt the effects of the boycott severely, though it is said some of them have been requested to forbid their clerks to ride on the cars.

"housands of working people are going to and from their homes in 'buses of every description, from huckster wagons to tally-hos, and in certain sections of the city the cars run with few passengers.

The boycott of the troops aroused the ire of Adjutant General Axline. who declares that there is a State law o punish persons who interfere with the militia. There is one section of the statutes which provides a maximum penalty of $1,000 fine and six months' imprisonment for every person who tries to persuade or discourage a member of the National Guard from responding to a call for riot duty. General Axline says the boycott and the threat of certain employers to put on the blacklist those employes who turned out with the militia are covered by this law, and he threatens to institute prosecutions against dealers if the boyeoft is continued. Out on Quincy street boycotting tacics are being worked with the result that families whose members have been riding on cars are unable to buy thing at the stores along the line. The storekeepers have entered into the plan of campaign with a willingness that in many cases reaches the point of enthusiasm. A committee of men, who said that they had the best interests of the Big Consolidated strikers at heart, called on one of the biggest retail houses in Cleveland, and asked the management STILLGREATER PRICE on one of the biggest retail houses in to decline to sell goods to persons who ride on Rig Consolidated cars while the strike is on. This same committee visited other downtown merchants, it is said, with a like request. The Williams & Rodgers Co., one of the biggest department stores in the city, was notified that one of its employes had been riding on a Big Consolidated car. The Company replied by issuing an order to its employes instructing them not to ride on the cars of the company. May & Co.ls employes also refrain from riding on the Consolidated street cars. Harry Decker & Co., dry goods mer-chants of the west side, had an experi-ence that illustrates well the signation. Members of this firm persisted in rid-ing in the street cars, it was said, and the result was that most of their trade left the house, and Mr. Decker sent $100 to the strikers' Executive Board asking them to call the boycott off.

Filipinos Driven Back.

Manila, Aug. 1.-The Filipinos made an unsuccessful attempt to recapture the town of Calamba, on the shore of Laguna de Bay, which the forces of Gen, Hall took last Wednesday afternoon. The natives numbered 2,400 men. The attack was made simultaneously from the north and south, the Filipinos apprently thinking that they would confuse the Americans by attacking from two points at once.

It was not even necessary to employ the whole American force to drive the Filipinos off. Two companies of the Twenty-first Infantry, a squadron of ravalry and one gun sufficed to rep/ se the attack from the north, while 400 men of the Washington regiment, comprising part of Gen. Hall's command, and a detachment of cavalry drove off the enemy who had advanced from the south.

The loss of the Filipinos is not known. The American loss was one killed and seven wounded.

Despite the condition of the country caused by the recent rains the enemy is active.

Uncle Sam Will Resist.

Washington, Aug. 1.-Any effort to a foreign power to interfere in Santo Domingo will be resisted by the United States. Any force to be used will be exerted by this country alone. The Monroe doctrine will be applied to Santo Domingo rigorously. It is not unlikely that other nations will send war ships to Santo Domingo to look after their interests there. German interests in the island, while not of great magnitude, are sufficient, it is said, to justify her in making a show of force. Great Britain, France, Denmark and Holland each have possessions in those waters. Great Britain and France especially, the two great naval powers of Europe, maintain large coaling and naval stations in the West Indies, and have colonies on the South American coast.

A QUAKER HEROINE.

An old house stands on the Westchester shore, its face to the south, the north wind at its back. It has watched the dawns and sunsets for two hundred years, has seen war times and days of peace.

Down the garden walks roses, hollyhocks and old-fashioned flowers bloom the season through; in lush growths of grass spring occasional blooms of daffodil and bluebell, marking some oldtime garden spot, long overgrown. Vines climb over windows and porch to the sloping roof, and in their depths generations of birds have nested and sung through many a forgotten summer. Footpaths worn in the grass led to barns, to the ancient mill, through orchards and over hillsides, showing in spring and fall the earliest and latest green, as if the print of human feet gave stronger life to the trodden way. In the Revolutionary period of the country's history the old house was the scene of many exciting raids from both the contending forces, one of which threatened to bring serious trouble upon the inmates.

One autumn day during the Revolutionary struggle the daughter of the house. Anne Mott, sat in the quiet "living room" spinning her daily Anne was a demure little "stent." maid; her brown hair, twisted in a tight knot, was held by her mother's silver comb. She was just thirteen years old, and acted as her father's housekeeper, the entire care of the family, her aged grandmother, her father and two brothers falling on her young shoulders.

The living-room was warm and still that day. The little spinner glanced out of the small window panes, down the garden path and off to the whitecapped waters of the Long Island Sound. Neglected thread will knot, and Anne brought truant eyes to the slackening wheel.

"It is so dull this eventide, with father and brothers away; 1 wish something grand and brilliant would happen to me, as it did to Lucy Lovelace. She went to the Governor's ball and danced with an aide-de-camp. Oh, I wish it was considered suitable for a Friend to go to a ball!"

Nothing "grand or brilliant" hap-pened in the quiet sunlit room; the faithful clock ticked on, embers dropped softly on the hearth, the spinning wheel slackened and the spinner's head lay against the high-back chair; Arme was fast asleep. How long she slept she never knew, her sudden awakening dispelling all memories of previous events. A terrible explosion shook the house to its foundation, there were cries of terror and sounds of hurrying feet. Startled into wakefulness. Anne ran to the door, where she met Jinny, the colored cook, crying: "Miss Nanny! Miss Nanny! the refugees are coming!"

and plunder and revenge on the de-fenceless household for harboring the whaleboatmen. Their approach was unberaided and the dam crossed and mill surrounded before Jess-Billy's son who was grinding corn-was aware of the fact. He was taken prisoner at once and shut up in the flour cooler. Captain Merritt looked about the mill for coffee that had been stored there. Jess told him it had been taken away. "Where to?"

"To White Plains for the Continental army.'

"Was it paid for and who had the money?" Jess could not tell. Angry and baffled, Merritt thundereds out:

"You are lying, you black scoundrel, but we'll squeeze the truth or the life out of you!"

They attempted to hang the lad, but, getting no further information, cut him down. He fell to the floor, blood gushing from his mouth. When he recovered Merritt asked him if Miss Nanny knew. He could not tell, but if any one knew she did. They kicked Jess out of the mill and he ran to the barn to tell Billy that they were going to make Miss Nanny tell about the coffee or hang her.

Billy waited to hear no more, but started for the house to protect his young mistress, but Merrit's men were there before him. Anne, pale but quiet and firm, met them at the door. the men said gruffly:

less girl became his own. When peace was finally concluded Anne was fifteen. Her life at that time with her father is pleasant to remember. She went everywhere on horseback with him, having an excellent little horse for her own use-one of the famous Narragansett pacers. Once they rode to the yearly meeting in Philadelphia, and often to New York meetings. She wore on such occasions a broad-brimmed beaver hat tied down under her chin; over her dress she wore a long skirt, and under her cape, pinned to her dress, her white apron, which she put on after the riding skirt was removed, for women in those days were not fully dressed without a fine white linen apron.

At the age of sixteen Anne became a bride, and many grandchildren and great-grandchildren have listened with pride and throbbing hearts to the story of grandmother's, heroism. ..

Anne's father was of the strictest sect of Friends, and would have no part or lot in war or fighting, but it was well understood that his un spo' en sympathy was with the Continentals. His colored man, Billy, Jinny's 'msband, was band in glove with the whaleboat men who made an inlet near the house a place of refuge. Two of these boats were commanded by Capt. Pete Davis, who had previously been in command of a coaster owned by James Mott. Anne's father.

This friendliness to the Continentals and the fact that raids on the Tories were of frequent occurence created suspicion and dislike among the refugees and the riffraff of the British army, and threats were made that if the "damned whaleboat men were permitted to hang around there it would be worse for them all."

But nothing came of the threats. and James Mott did not consider his household to be in danger. The whaleboat men had recently been successful in capturing a boat from the British. under the guns of a guard ship lying off in the sound, and the refugees had decided to eject them from the "damned Quaker rendezvous." At Pelham the band of refugees led by Capt. Fade Merrit, started for the shore, where they caught and imprisoned Uncle Billy and captured the boats of the whaleboatmen. In which a large supply of ammunition was stored. A bold push forward or quick retreat on the part of the whaleboat-nien must be decided at once. They choose the former, and began firing on the refugees from behind fences and bushes

Startled by the quick onset. Merrit and his men charged on the foe, Capt.

Davis called to Merrit: "Stop right there, Fade Merrit, or I'll save from the hangman!"-a warning that proved ominous.

"I won't stop at your bidding, Pete Davis, you robbing rebel."

"Then you will stop for my gun; an-other step will be your last." Merrit halted, but did not retreat, shouting:

"Come on, you sneaking thieves, from where you are hiding." And Captain Pete answered:

"Fade Merrit, if you don't right about face and go off my gun will go off." Merrit, finding the position of his antagonist impregnable, backed off his men and retreated into the woods.

Anne, pale with excitement, but firm quieted the shricking Jinny, who feared for the life of her husband. As soon as the refugees had gone the crews of the whaleboats hastened to leave so dangerous a locality. As they rowed away Anne felt anxious and uneasy, left alone with her aged grandmother and the slaves of the household. But her training had been at the feet of the strictest Gamaliels of her sect: "Resist the evil. Trust in the Lord. Not one sparrow is forgotten by God." Then why did she feel anxious when the whaleboatmen rowed away? She took herself severely to task for her anxiety and doubt, but she could not but fear the return of the refugees. Nor was her uneasiness groundless.

Receiving information from scouts and spies that the whaleboat men had gone, Merrit and his party returned.

"I do not know."

"Come girl, you must know; you can tell something. What has become of the money?"

'I do not know and cannot tell," she said. Then he thundered at her:

"Now, girl we will find a way to get the truth out of you!" Calm and unmoved she answered:

"I have already told thee the truth; more cannot be got out of me.

"We will see what the rope will do?" He directed one of the men to put the noose over her. One stepped rot ward and raised the nonse over has h She looked him squarely in the face and said: "Thee must not touch me." The rope

WHY WE ALTER AND REBUILD THIS STORE! A STIALL BUSINESS The The Horton.

Selling goods at all you can get for them, grumbling all the while at high rent, business and living expenses. A LARGE BUSINESS

Selling goods cheap at a small reasonable profit because the large business enables buying in larger quantities, New Meth'd and consequently buying cheaper.

The larger business costs so little more than the small, that the entire ex-The larger business costs so little more than the small, that the entire ex-pense is reduced many percentages, the living expenses are important items to everyone and cost no more when a large business is being done than small, consequently merchants can sell a large lot of goods at a smaller advance more profitably than a small lot at a large profit. We tried the old method 14 years, the new one year, and before the first year is over we are obliged either to go back to the old method or to find a larger store. Our neighbor either to go back to the old method or to find a larger store. Our neighbor "E. J. Burritt" wanted to get out; we grasped the chance and rented his store in addition to the old quarters and thus obtained enough room to do the business of the "new method." We ascribe the past year's large business because people advertised us who wear our goods which at the time of pur-chase they may think only worth what they paid for them, but as time rolls on and the clothes don't change, but keep looking good, don't rip, don't muss, they gradually begin to believe they bought a bargain. They try it again, they recommend their family and friends, and by always furnishing good clothing at our small prices, each of them in turn recommends othersagain, they recommend their family and friends, and by always furnishing good clothing at our small prices, each of them in turn recommends others— that's what makes a large business. That's what compelled us to get a large store. We are now at it, and will be all fixed up in our new quarters by Aug-ust 20. And when we get this big store finished we want you to drop in to see us, look around in the new place, wish us success if you like, but always be assured that you are welcome here, whether you come to look; to see what a certain thing when you need it will cost you, or whether you come to about or visit. shop or visit.

MAKE YOURSELF AT HOME-YOU ARE WELCOME. We want your good will, and if honorable business methods will do it, we'll have your trade and shall hold it.

Thanking the Public for their liberal patronage of the past Fif-teen years. Respectfully, BENJAMIN RICH.
