Auburn.

John W. Love, who five years ago was the president of the First Na-tional bank at Watkins, was Friday discharged from Auburn prison, after serving three years and a half sen-tence for wrecking the bank.

Hon. S. E. Payne was appointed chairman of the Ways and Means committee by Speaker Henderson at Washington, Monday. It is a fitting tribute to his ability and conspicuous services.

Wayne Gallup is again before the public, this time with a document calling for the deed he recently gave place has been occupied by Mr. Dodd to his brother Silas to be set aside. It seems he had ignored the niece, Mrs. Mary Wallace of Venice, and Friday night was 77 years old and having since returned to reside with was one of the oldest residents of this her, has changed his mind and wants place. She is survived by only two her to share in his property. The of her children, C. R. Thus it will be seen that Wayne provided for the disposition of $12,000 in cash of his estate, the residue and remainder. consisting of bonds, lands, tenements and hereditaments, to be divided equally among the persons above named. Justice Dwight issued the order. The following transcript of judgment was filed in the county clerk' office: Arthur B. Van Etten against George Carpenter, for $77.35. The judgment was granted by J. Fitch Walker, justice of the peace of Moravia. Decision was handed down by Squire Elder in the case of Frank M. Leary against George H. Weyant, a justice of the peace of Weedsport. The suit was to recover $25 paid by Mr. Leary to the justice of the peace as guaranty that he would appeal from a judgment of the Weedsport court, convicting Jay Stewart of a violation of the fish and game law. The case was appealed in due time and when the Auburn attorney applied for his money he was informed ing Dec. 26, at 10 o'clock, we will in- it had been turned over to the state augurate the largest cloak and suit authorities. Mr. Leary brought suit against the Weedsport justice, and the Auburn justice decided in favor of the plaintiff for a judgment of day morning. George Acker, the village truckman, left his horses standing within a short distance of the track shortly before the arrival of the train from the north. As the train was palling into the station the horses walked leisurely on the track in front of the engine. The train was going very slowly, preparatory to stopping, and instead of killing the horses as every one expected, they were pushed from the track. The pole of the wagon was broken, but that was the only damage done excepting a few bruises to the equines.

Ingersoll a Defaulter.

Charles Ingersoll, treasurer of murderer, was sentenced to ten years Tompkins county, has been missing since Dec. 12, and nothing is known as to his whereabouts.

The Board of Supervisors at an executive session passed a resolution requesting Governor Roosevelt to re-move Mr. Ingersoll from office. Chairman Van Ostrand, of the Board, said that Ingersoll's accounts had been investigated with the result that a shortage had been discovered, but he was unable to state exactly the amount. Estimates of some of the members of the Board place it at $8,000 to $9,000.

The news of this state of affairs caused a profound sensation in and about Ithaca. Mr. Ingersoll was a most popular citizen and had always heretofore been highly respected as an official. He had served three terms as treasurer of Tompkins county and in November last was elected for the fourth time by a substantial majority.

Now that his apparent defalcation has become known it also develops that his real estate and personal prop-County Herald, recently burned. He his bondsmen will scarcely be able to recover anything. Specious Tales of Fish Dinny Gewgan Surprised by a Thin Gray Pamphlet.

THERE'S Dinny Gewgan? asked Prof. Coggins, coming into Casey's with a thin gray pampalet under his arm. "I've got something to show him."

"He's out in the court hitting up the ball," said Joe, the steward of the Handball club. "Come in here, Din ny. You're being asked for."

"Am 1, now?" said Dinny, trotting in. "Is it yersilf, John? I'm limber in' up to cilibrate me sixty-fift' bert'day, come nixt Chuesda'. Lave me 'take tin aces an' I'll give yez a game.'

"I'm to play the new man from the old country this afternoon," said the professor, "and I'm saving my hands. It wasn't for a game that I called for you. I want to show you this book a friend of mine sent to me."

"A boo-ook, is ut? Sure, thin, I've lift me spic-taycles at home," said cle." Dinny, cunningly. "What might ut be about, thot book?"

"It's a fish book, Dinny, issued by the United States fish commission, and sent to me by my political friends in Washington."

"Some o' thim fish stories the pollytishuns do be tellin'? What fer wud they sind thim to you, I dunno? Why wudn't they sind ut to me thot has caught more fishes av more kinds than anny mon in Brooklyn?"

"That's the very reason I'n. bring ing it to you, Dinny. It's a scientific book, and there are some parts of it that I don't just understand, and I thought that you, knowing so much about fishes-"

"Sure, thin, you kem to the right pless thot time, John," interrupted the old man. "I know ivery bone in ivery fish's body in these waters an' have swallied most av thim. 'Tis a sorrow that I lift me spic-taycles behind, but do you rade ut out, an' rade slow, thou I can di-gist the substantiousness av the skientifical portions. Who writ the book?"

"A man named Herrick; Prof. Herrick."

"Av coorse," said Dinny, heartily "I know um well. He used t' wave a shtick in front of the orchestry at the Shtar the-ayter. Thot's how he's a proffiser. So, becuz he belongs to a Sout' Brooklyn fishin' club he thinks he can write a book about ut! The consate of the baste! He dunno th' diffrunce bechune a sandworm and s lead sinker. What does he say?"

"Perhaps it isn't the same man,"

"The shmelt; he-he-he," snickered Dinny. "Shkip the rist of thot about the fishes' ears. He'll be discribin' th' coorns on the toes av a clam nixt. G'wan wit' th' porgies."

"Menidia is a favorite type for such study," continued the reader. "not only on account of its central position and small size, but the tissues seem to react histologically better than those of some other fishes.'

"Thot might be true av the small size wans, I dunno," observed Dinny, judiciously. "I always trun them small ones beck before they had a chanst t' react hysteriogically or anny other way."

"Moreover the nervous system of the family Atherinidae has not before been examined even by gross dissection, and several points have been brought out in the topography which are either nev or teleosts or shed light on vexed morphological questions, such as the discovery of a prehistoric branch of th. facial nerve, a ramus opthalmicus profundus of the trigeminus, and a tru spinal accessory nerve emerging with the vagus to supply the trapezius mus-

"Count tin, Johnny," said Dinny. faintly, "I'm near out. What was thot about gross diciption?"

"Gross dissection," said Prof. Coggins. "I'll read it again also while you get your wind."

At the conclusion of the second' reading Dinny said he was on his feet and able to continue.

"I'm onto that felly Herrick," said he. 'I know what ails um. He's ate a dickshinary an' it made um seasick. What is thot picture in the book, a map? Leave me see ut."

Taking the pamphlet he studied carefully a diagram of the cranial nerves of the fish under discussion. Presently a look of satisfaction overspread his puckered features and smoothed out the wrinkles.

"Now I'm gettin' to th' soobstance av ut," he exclaimed. "Here's where I git a hand in, an' toss out a few aces. John. Thot's a map av Newtown Creek, an' if Herrick thinks there's anny fish there, bar pollywogs, he'll be catchin' porpusses out av th' city hall fountin' next. wit' Profisser Herrick av Sout' Brooklyn; he's ahll right wit' his little shillaly treatenin' t' break th' hids av his orchestry av they play-out av choon. but whin it comes t' drahin maps av Newtown Creek an-"

"Down brakes, Dinny; your pole's off the wire," interrupted Prof. Coggins. "That isn't Newtown Creek."

"Now may I turn into a toad an' niver git back to Ould Ireland," said Dinny, "av I don't know more av geography than Herrick does av fishes. Does he George Miller, Chas. D. Fuller, J. L. mane that map fer a picture av his fishin' taykle after a reel got troo wit' ut, 1 Horton. dunno."

"Yes; but how about Dinny?" asked Prof. Coggins.

"How about what?" "Why ise explanation. I brought the book around for you to explain it to me, you being so well up on fishes."

"John," said Dinny, solemnly. "Well?"

"Do you belave th' felly that wrote that book ever caught a fish?" "He talks as if he had."

"John, you take my worrud fer it. A felly that wud write such languidge as thot Herrick was niver a fisherman. You cud give him a barrel av bait an' a shtore-full av lines an' hooks an' trapshins an' lave him in th' middle av th' aquarium fer a week an' whin he kem out there wouldn't be as much as the shmell av fish onto his hands. We will now unmix our confused mintal processhes wit' a little ale. Joe, did you iver find anny hyomandibulars er mediscineras in th' ale here?"

"I never did, Denny," said the steward.

"You swally enough av it. Joe," said Denny, "an' you cud write a book nigh as bad as thot yourself. Drink hearty!" -N. Y. Sun.

suggested Prof. Coggins, but Dinny waived away that suggestion and bade him read ahead.

"The title of the book." said Prof. Coggins, "is 'The Peripheral Nervous System of the Bony Fishes.' "

"Saints difind us, John!" said Dinny, with his eyes wide. "What language is that, I dunno?'

"That's the kind of English they speak down in Washington."

"No, no, John," said the old man, solemnly. "Av that's English I'm a dago, an' I'll sell paynuts on the coorner.'

"Oh, you'll recognize it when you get a little further along," said Prof. Coggins, reasurringly. "I'll skip the first part and get into the heart of it."

"Skip ahll av thim worruds wit joints in thim," Denny requested. "They hurt me ears."

"Well, how's this?" proceeded the other. "He says here: 'In view of these facts, the present demand, it seems to me, is for a minute and exhaustive study of the exact relations of the several nerve components through the entire course of the several cranial nerves in a few typical fishes. The common silverside, Menidia, so abundant about Woods Holl and other points along the Atlantic coast, was chosen as the first type to be examined. These little fishes stand about midway between the physostomous and the physoclystous types of fishes' (here Dinny was observed to wince) 'and may be regarded as relative, generalized form.''

"That's what comes av Sout' Brooklyn fishin' clubs," mused Dinny, in selfcommunion. "It makes a felly like Herrick regyard that sort av thing as bein' relatively simple. May I be skint for a neel av I don't belave the mon had ought t'be arristed."

"What's the matter, Dinny? Don't you understand it ?" asked Prof. Coggins.

"Av coorse 1 understand ut," said Dinny, angrily. "He's talkin' about porgies an' he's kafoozled on his facts."

"Probably it will straighten out later on," said the professor. "I've lost my place with all those hard words. Oh, here we are: Though the organs of special sense (eye and ear) are very highly developed-"" "Hould on!" shouted Dinny. "Rade that again. Oye an' what?"

"Eye and ear," repeated the reader.

"John, av ever I caught a fish wit' ears on um I'd teck the Father Matthew pledge that day. Sure, Herrick has got barnycles on his brain. Av he'd said that the nose was very highly diviloped, now, I'd know what kind av a fish he was talkin' about."

"What kind is that, Dinny?" asked Joe, the steward, unsuspectingly.

"It isn't a map, Dinny, it's a diagrammatic view of the sensary components of the cranial nerves of the Menidia, as seen from the right side," said his friend, reading from the book.

"Lave it go at that, John," returned Dinny, bitterly. "Don't go around th' other side or I quit yez.

"Well, here's something about the acousticolateral system," said the professor, trying the next page.

"Acushla machree; faugh-a-ballagh!" cried Dinny. "He's takin' t' th' Irish langwidge in his confusion."

"He gets out of it again, then. How's this? "The facial nerve contains viscero-motor, communis, and lateralis fibres. The communis fibers form the whole of the preauditory fasciculus communis, are provided with a special ganglion-"

"Shtop there! I hoy a bite! Ganglion; ganglion. Thot's wan of them hooks that grows in families. I know um. No dacent mon wud use um on a tommy cod. Nivertheliss, I'm gettin' onto his service. Toss me out another."

"The ventral lateralis root has a separate ganglion" (Dinny nodded), "and supplies organs of the operculor and mendibular canals, via the truncus hyomendibularis."

"Wherro!" cried Dinny. "Thot was a soaker! Is thot a rale worrud or did yez bite yer tongue?"

"It's real," asserted Prof. Coggins, looking at it earnestly. "Truncus hyomendibularis."

"In my time," said Dinny, impressively, "I hov been to many polittycal gatherin's an' heard speeches in English, Dutch and Ginny, but av 1 iver encountered th' aquil av thot worrud thin I'm a wriggler an' live in a soor. Av there's an ind to thot thing let's hov ut an' see what th' feller is after."

"Here's the finish," said Prof. Coggins:

"'I am under very special obligation to the United States fish commission, which has freely furnished all things needful for this work, and particularly to the director of its laboratory for many unusual courtesies.""

"Is thot all?" asked Dinny, after a pause.

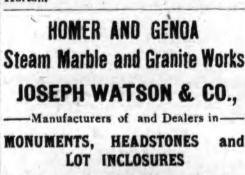

"All except the date."

"Didn't he return thanks to the pooblishers ov the dickshinary or th' encyclepeder britisher?"

"Nothing about it here." "Or to th' doctors that let um go befoor he was cured an' while he was still ravin'?"

"I can't find it." "Th' felly has no dacency," declared

Dinny, with profound disgust. "He's a panooden, an' that's five times as bad as bein' a lobster."

The Grimacing Act is Ruineus to Good

Looks-Grow Old Beautifully. Our faces get just as tired as our hands or our backs or our feet, and then, if we know enough, we long for the soothing touch of fingers trained to knead and pat and stroke our muscles. The sensation is delightful. Ten velvety balls traveling around our chin, under our eyes, across our foreheads, and each ball carrying along a cool little dab of something creamy and soft and fragrant.

Many's the spell of cross-grainness I have had chased off in this way, says Dorothy Maddox in the Philadelphia Inquirer. Social indulgences must be paid for.

We are obliged to grimace. Some people call it "smiling." We expect our smirks to bring lines.

We look to the artful rubber to keep facial muscles so strengthened that they will resist the strain to which they are subjected.

We are also wise enough to learn a few massage tricks as well. And how careful we are to get to-gether delicate lotions that will help our 10 fingers to do the work demanded of them.

Imagine how the face of a woman pledged to six euchres a week and a whist or two thrown in must need massage. There is nothing on earth more cruelly unkind to good looks than these persistent efforts of ours to be agreeable. We cannot go into society with sealed lips and expressions that are funereal. We begin the great gri-macing act from the moment we give our hostess our first handshake to the time for the final adieu.

We can actually feel, if we have grown sensitive upon the subject of wrinkles, the lines coming about our eyes, and around our mouth every time we contract the muscles.

We may be ignorant of consequences If so we let threadlike weaves appear, and that cunning scamp-Time-de-lighted to be allowed his will, sees to it that they become day by day deeper and deeper.

And there arrives a time when even a Venus mirror refuses to shelter de-fects. Our eyes are still bright, our col-or fine, our complexion free from blemishes, but, alas! a few crows' feet profit to itself and to the public. or a network of wrinkles spoils everything.

It is all folderol to tell a woman of 30 that she may look as young as a girl of 18. Hunting Wild Hogs.

"Hunting wild marsh hoge is an exciting but somewhat dangerous pas-time in southern Texas," said Mr. C. L. Fielden of that State, at the Raleigh. "In the swampy lands along the Gulf these wild hogs have their habitat, and to hunt them it is best to have several companions and numerous dogs that understand the ways of the ferocious porkers. The dog will find the game for you, bay it and hold it in check until you can take a shot or two. Then everything depends on your aim. If you succeed in piercing a vital part. with your Winchester bullet, all is over except dragging the carcass to some convenient point where it can be handled.

"But dangerous is your position if your aim is a trifle defective and your shot only wounds the animal. Some good and true shooting must be done instanter then by you and your com-rades, or less an infuriated boar will be rending you with his tusks. I have seen more than one of these old boars shot through the body twen:y or more times, and in that condition fight man and dog until several balls had been fired into his head.

"In the marshes there is z.o possible way of escaping an attacking wild hog except by killing him. The hunter can make no headway through the tall, rank grass and boggy soil, and there are no trees that offer him refuge. For these reasons he is compelled to kill his game when once it is flushed, or become himself a victim. In the fall of the year these marsh hogs are fat, and their flesh is of a very pleasing flavor.

No LONGER a to than the Civil war and reconstruction periods, the Yankee and his peculiarities were the worst hated things in all the South but in the quarter century that has intervened, a change has taken place in this respect in that region of the country. A new development has occarred, which is known as the Southern Yankee, that is the industrial South is developing characteristics of the New England type. A year or so ago the Spaniards called Fitzhugh Lee a Yankee and it pleased the people of the whole South. Ever since, whenever the Southrons have been called Yankees, they have laughingly acquiesced. The term, originally one of reproach, is actually growing into favor. In quite a region of the South ern States the Yankee is springing out of the very soil and threatens to outstrip its own blood elsewhere. This soil, out of which the Southern Yankee is springing with robust energy, extends from Lynchburgh, Va., and Bristol, Tenn., on the west, to Eufala and Birmingham on the south. The area is about 500 miles in length and from 200 to 300 miles in breadth. Iron, soal and cotton mill enterprises are embraced within it, and in the cotton mill is the latest phase of development of genuine New England Yankee characteristics in the Southern land. day. All the old taints of sectionalism in this country are bound to be wiped out in this era of expanded ideas, as well as extended territory.

The year about which the enumerators will ask the farmers ends with this month, and it is feared that if the farmers wait until next June before figuring up they will have forgotten about many features of their business, and the census will not be as accurate as it should be. It is a good idea to keep accounts anyway, and those who begin this year to do it are likely to continue the practice. Everything should be done to make nearly accurate as possible.

"The Soldiers with Little Skirts." "The ones that made us the most trouble," said an old Boer, "were those that wore the little skirts, half men and half women." He meant the Gordon highlanders, and the pride of the kilted regiment and the pride of the Boers who opposed it was satisfied There were few officers left on either side to tell the tale. The sharpshooters were able to distinguish the British officers because they carried no rifles and because they were always standing up. That fact and the preponderating part that British artillery has played in the engagements thus far are the two most important features of the campaign yet brought to light. It is better policy, perhaps, to have to kneel than to have to lie down and wait for the litter bearers. And it is not in accord with the nature of the Anglo-Saxon race. Such an appalling loss of officers as the Gordon highlanders suffered in any great engagement would be more serious than the loss of twice as many as the number of enlisted men who fell The men can take the bit in their mouths and charge without the assistance of officers, but they cannot ma-

Women Not Allowed at Funerals. One of the curious social laws of Peru which, by the way, was also in force in England till within recent years, forbids women to attend funerals, and they do not appear at weddings unless they are very intimate friends. When a funeral procession passes through the streets the coffin is carried upon the shoulders of the pall bearers, who are followed by an empty hearse drawn by two, four or six horses, according to the means of the mourners and their desire for display. All the male members of the fam...y and friends of the deceased follow on foot, with a line of empty carriages behind them. As long as they are in the presence of the dead it is considered a proper and necessary evidence of respect to walk. After the body has been committed to the grave those who attend the funeral are brought home in the carriages .- Household Words.

BUSH & DEAN,

practically one, are the birthplace of iron and steel ship building on the Atlantic coast, and it might be expected that first-class historical material concerning the industry would be found in abundance in the public library of Philadelphia. When the card catalogue was examined, says the Boston Tran script, it was discovered that the only books under the heading of ships or relating to ship building were Miss Harraden's "Ships That Pass in the Night," and a little volume on "Seaboard Life," written for boys, by W. H. Rideing An appeal was made to the librarian in charge of the reference room, which resulted in the ascertainment of a few initial and elementary facts from the standard history of Philadelphia. Of first-hand material there was absolutely none. Beyond what was contained in the history of Philadelphia the library afforded no information concerning one of the oldest and most interesting and now one of the largest industries of the city.

LONG DISTANCE DANCING.

Women Walts and Galop 15 Miles in the Course of an Evening.

A Chicago physician with a statistical turn of mind has been estimating the proper distance covered by a woman in duncing through the ordinary ballroom programme.

An average waltz, the doctor estimates, takes one over three-quarters of a mile. A square dance makes you cover half a mile; the same distance is covered in a polka, while a rapid galop will oblige you to traverse just about a mile.

Say there are 12 waltzes, which is a fair average. This alone makes nine miles. Three galops added to this makes the distance 12 miles, while from three to five other dances at a half mile each brings up the total to from 13 to 15 miles. This, too, is without reckoning the promenade and the extras.

"As a means of exercise," says the physician, "it will thus be seen that dancing stands at the head of the list. In golf, for instance, the major part of the exercise consists in walking around the links, following up the ball, and yet, even in golf, not as much ground is covered as in an evening's

The atmosphere of the ballroom is saturated with carbonic acid gas and dust, laden with germs. While the muscles of the legs and calves are being increased in size the general health is being impaired by the quality of the air. The society belle is not content with an occasional ball, but attends one nearly every night. All the benefits Drug Store, Auburn. of the exercise disappear and the belle

ONE WOMAN'S WAY.

A Livelihood Gained from the Feminine Sense of Jumping at a Good Thing.

"I met a woman not long ago on the road," remarked a New York drummer, "who gave me a point or two on how a bright woman can make her way in the world. She was a widow, with two children to support, and was housekeeper of an Indianapolis botel until her health failed. She had to give it up at last, though she tried to hold on, for that was all she knew how to do, and she retired with only $100 or so to go on. Not knowing exactly whither to turn, she went to New York city and just wandered around for awhile, looking at things. One day she saw the women crowding the life out of one another at a bargain sale of skirts, and a thought struck her. She let it develop for a day or two, and then spent all the money she had for silk skirts that were destined for the bargain counter. They were rumpled and looked jaded and tired, but she took them as they were at small figures and carried them to her rooms. There she ironed and pressed them out till they looked like new, and then went out into the suburban towns to sell them. She found ready purchasers at good prices, and came back for more. These she made as good as new and had no trouble in disposing of her stock.

She added shirt waists next and then began getting shop-worn silks, rem-nants and that kind of stock, and gradually increased her territory, hiring somebody to do the renovating while she was attending to the buying and selling. She has been at it three or four years, and in that time has built up a trade that is paying her this year between $500 and $600 a month. She has her children at good schools; has a nice little home in one of the suburban towns, which she owns, and is about the thriftiest and most businesslike woman I ever saw. No training either to begin with, just the woman's sense of jumping at a good thing and getting it."

GOOD MANNERS OF THE SEAL Its Politeness Is Not Lost, and Kindness Is Bestowed Upon It in Return.

The harbor seals of the Aquariun. know well enough what they like to eat, and when they can get that they won't eat anything else. As between codfish and herring, they prefer herring, and herring is fed to them when it is obtainable, and as far as is consistent with their welfare. They dc better, however, with some variation in their food, says the New York Sun

The seal is graceful, and apparently of good manners. If two pieces of fish, food for the seals, one of herring and one of cod, is tossed into the water together, the seal rejects the cod, or pays no attention to it whatever, and eats the herring. If, as is often the case, the seal were up on the platform, beside the man with the food. taking the food from his hand, it would in all probability take a piece of codfish handed to it in that manner, personally as it were, thus being polite to the man offering it, but it would not be likely to swallow it. It would incline its shapely head downward and drop the piece of codfish out of its mouth onto the stone platform and then lift its head again, to the man, with a look that means what apparently it would say if it could speak:

THE TRIBUNE FOR 1900.

The year 1900 will be marked by events of the greatest importance and interest, affecting the history of our country. A president will be elected in November and a governor of the state of New York, together with congressional representatives and state senators.

The policy of the United States in the Philippine Islands and the establishment of governments in Cuba and Porto Rico will also be events of unusual interest. No man can afford to ignore these and other national and state matters, nor can he permit his wife and children to remain ignorant about them. THE GENOA TRIBUNE will keep you informed on these topics, together with home news, market reports and general literature.

THE GENOA TRIBUNE.

The State and County News department of THE TRIBUNE is the delight of our readers and the envy of our contemporaries, and among the special features to be adopted for 1900 are Talmadge Sermons, Agricultural Articles, Young Folks Stories, Original Correspondence and Serials.

We invite you to become a subscriber and partaker of its interesting features for 1900. We will send it to you from now until Janurary 1, 1901 for one dollar. THE TRIBUNE is $1 per year when paid strictly in advance, otherwise $1.25. The llttle address label on your paper will show the date your subscription is paid, etc.

I have sung of the soldier's glory As I never shall sing again; I have gazed on the shambles gory, I have amelled of the slaughter-per

There is blood in the ink-well clotted, There are stains on the laurel-leaf, And the pages of Fame are blotted With the tears of a needless grief.

The bird is slaughtered for fashion, And the beast is killed for sport; And never the word compassion Is whispered at Moloch's court.

For the parent seal in the water Is slain, and her child must die, That some sister or wife or daughter Her beauty may beautify.

great, noisy, laughing, mocking world. Now the beauty and romance of an Italian summer clothed the earth, the peace and holiness of Eden prevailed. and a life fresh and untarnished from the Creator's hands lay within his reach, to be molded, fashioned as he would. So he lingered, never daring, yet always hoping to find the courage to make her quite his own.

A letter brought him to his senses. What it contained Ellie never knew, but it took him away.

He came early one autumn morning, when she was roaming among the flowers, and mourning with real regret over her delicate favorites-came to tell her that he must say good-by.

"You will not quite forget me?" he asked.

Forget him! Oh, tender little heart! why had he come to let this shadow in upon its brightness? Forget him! No, never! Sleeping or waking, he would be with her unto the very end of her life!

And that was all he said to her. A kiss upon her cheek, a touch upon her hand, and he was gone.

п. "You are not yourself at all, Ellie," said Grandma Ventnor, day after day, as the light faded from the brown eyes and the color from her cheeks.

"I am always your own little girl," was the reply, but never a smile from the sad, sad lips; and her life was a desolation, blank but for one tome, whereupon she had engraved the name of "Rex." There was nothing else in all the world.

At last, out of the great voiceless silence, there came a message. It was a copy of his new book, and on one pencil-marked page she found herself portrayed. It read, sang, laughed of "Ellie! Ellie! Ellie!" and she lived again for many a long, long week, buoyed by that cruel phantom, hope. But nothing came.

When her heart and brain could bear no more she went one day to Grandma Ventnor and Grandma Thornton and laid her heart before them.

"Now you know all!" she added, 'and if you love me you will take me to London. I will soon be ready to come home, dear grandma; so take me, please. Just now my heart is breaking, and only London can heal

In all their lives they had refused her nothing, and now, when she looked at them with those strange eyes, they did not dare. So to the great metropolis they went, these three women, as guileless of heart and simple of mind as little children.

Then in that great wilderness they

"Better than you will ever love anything else?" he queried, in his persuasive voice and with his large, soft eyes fixed pleadingly on hers. She was not ruffled yet, even with all these powers which in his life had so seldom failed him, but with a steady gaze looked up into his face, with the calm, passionless eyes of a little child. "I hope so, for if I loved anyone else better, I think my grandmas would turn away and grieve themselves to death.' "But you might like somebody a little," pleaded this worldly tempter, un-

HER SHATTERED IDOL

DEX MEREDITH was looking into the young, upturned face with an expression half of pity, half of amusement. In all his life-his reckless, happy, dare-devil life-he had seen nothing like this creature beside him; nothing half so fresh, so innocent and beautiful.

She was a rose, with the morning dew yet bathing its waxen petals; a cluster of ripe fruit, with the soft color yet lying, a dusty tint, upon it; a tender, beautiful, living thing, almost a divinity in innocence and purity.

Her dress was a brown stuff, with never a ruffle to relieve it. She wore a white, turned-over collar and a gold cross to fasten it; her hair, with all its thousand crinkling, shining waves, was combed back from her face and tied with a blue ribbon, after the fashion of the Scotch snood, and left to wander at will over the gracefully sloped shoulders, and look where you would there was no sign of art or fashion, only her beauty, freshness and youth to designate her from the two grandmothers who were her guardians.

"So you were never in love?" queried worldly-minded Rex Meredith, looking down at her with those cruelly beautiful eyes of his and scanning every line of her sunny face.

"In love? Yes, all my life, with my two grandmas. Grandma Ventnor, she is my father's mother, and has planned to keep the farm in order ever since I can remember-and all for me, mind you. Grandma Thornton, my mother's mother, has made the butter, and kept the house, and taught me to work and be content. If ever any girl was blessed, who had no parents to love and care for her, it is myself; and I love my two grandmas better than anything else in the world."

willing to go away and leave this human flower to waste its rare fragfance in the narrow garden of these old women's hearts. "You might like me a little-just a very little-for, like yourself, I am alone; aye, more alone than yourself, for I have no grandmas to love me."

She laughed, and then grew full of pity. "I do like you-very, very much; but I think you cannot need grandmas as I do."

He bent over her, and while the clear, soft, trusting eyes were lifted to his face, he drew nearer and nearer, until he left a kiss upon the white forehead.

A great flood of crimson shot over her face-a blush that colored the round cheeks, the dimpled chin, the soft, round throat, and hid itself beneath the high brown dress; but she could not hide the gladness in her eyes. A kiss like this meant tenderness and love to her, and who would not be loved by a man like Rex Meredith, the handsomest fellow she, in all her simple life, had ever seen?

"You ought not-" she began, but he checked her.

"Don't say that, Ellfe. I mean no harm to you. No, rather, I mean-"

He did not end the sentence, for some one called Ellie just then from the farmhouse-a soft, sweet voice, whose bidding Ellie never disobeyed; and she turned and gave him a good-by from her eyes, and was gone.

"I had better go, and never come back here," said Rex, leaning for a moment over the gate, and looking wistfully at the farmhouse and its little paradise of trees, shrubs and blossoming vines. "She would make her way into my heart, and, once therewell, the world is too old a story to me. I could never find anything to remove her, and I should lose my place and degenerate. The wisest thing I can do is to go away and forget!"

So it would have been, but he did not go away. Through all the soft, hazy summer he lingered in the village, near the cottage of the simple grandmothers and their little charge, Ellie, dreaming idly away the hours among the sweet-scented shrubs and flowers and drinking in the beauty and fragrance of that one human flowerthe brightest, most beautiful of them

He was writing a peem when an inspiration seized him, and in his heart he knew he should succeed.

Succeed! Aye, why not? A year ago he had held the world captive with the magic of his slender pen-a year ago he had woven wreaths of poetry, when his life was laden with tobacco, wine, gay music, false, fair women, and Milit the hurried heat and recklessness of the and m wandered-here, there, everywhere, up down, in, out, to find that one man, that the sad brown eyes might look at him just once again.

And one day, when they were wellnigh heartsick and discouraged, they found him. They had found their way into a picture gallery one gala day, and there they suddenly came upon him. In all his grace and elegance he stood the center of a gay party. A woman stood beside him-a woman even more beautiful than the pictured faces upon the walls. She had white skin and big, lustrous eyes, shining hair and gleaming teeth. Her silken dresses lay in heavy folds along the arpet; there were long, rich feathers in her hat, diamonds glittering in her ears, and the hand that rested on his shoulder was sparkling with gems.

One of the attendants came near just then, and Ellie whispered:

"Who is she?" "Pauline Delafrere." "Not his wife, then?"

The man laughed. "No."

"But she will be?"

"Not in this world," laughed he. 'Men do not marry Paulines."

She saw him then as he was, her broken, shattered idol, with all the stain of worldliness, making black and terrible the life she had deified in her heart, and she put her hands blindly out.

"Home! Take me home, grandma!" And then the white lips quivered, the slender limbs gave way and the tender, loving heart gave up its struggling, its weariness and pain. Rex Meredith, with Pauline Delafrere, hurrying with the crowd to the poor old women who were filling the gallery with their lamentations, saw little Ellie lying dead, like some white lily torn from its stalk in its first opening-dead, broken-hearted, but pure as the angels in Heaven! - Chicago Herald.

No Place for Them.

"Why so pensive, Geraldine?" "I was just thinking about what the reacher said Sunday morning. If there is to be no marrying nor giving in marriage in Heaven, what will the young men who are always acting as shers have to talk about or keep them busy ?"-Chicago Times-Herald.
