While there are a number of things in the paper that would interest the older readers by recalling former associations, there is a notice to delinquent subscribers at the head of the editorial column that would paralyze the reader of the present day. What it did to those at whom it was aimed does not appear. It is interesting at any rate and reads as follows:

WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

Four weeks ago we enclosed $200 worth of newspaper accounts to delinquent subscribers with a polite request to pay up, and have received in answer to our reasonable demand $12 all told, $4 of which was bad money. > CHAPTER II. CONTINUED.

Jessy was helping her with her boots and habit as he spoke, and as soon as the last button was in place Katherine drew her crimson Rob-Roy cap tight over her brows and went singing into the rain. They stood a few minutes at the open door and watched her headlong race through the swirling wreaths of vapor, her vivid-crimson cap the only point visible in the gray banks; yet for those few moments they heard veloped. "Will no one tell me what she sings?" "quoted the minister, as he turned pleasantly to his fireside; and Jessy took up the verse and finished it.

her voice as some higher note pierced the wet shroud in which she was en-

"Perhaps the plaintive numbers flow, From old unhappy far-off things, And battles long ago."

Jessy was partially right, but it was not Katherine's nature to sing sad songs. Besides, the wind and the rain made her happy, and her heart re-fused to believe that Richard Mowbray had gone away forever.

"People do not come into life for nothing," she argued, "and it was into my life he was sent. The old ring and the old friendship were just the only introduction Fate could manage. And it is far more likely he came for my weal than for my wos. At any rate, I will believe this."

To such thoughts, mingled with the exhilarating storm, she reached Levens-hope in high spirits. Her habit was waterproof, and she flung it off with a laugh, and then removing her cap, she shook her hair free again, Her cheeks were rosy, and the raindrops lay like dew upon them. Her eyes sparkled, her mouth was curved with smiles, and she brought the very spirit of youth and vital joy into the room with her. Jamie Wintoun was sitting by the window pretending to read. He was really watching for Katherine.

"Why, Jamie!" she said. "Will any ind of a storm keep you away from Levens-hope?"

"None, while you are here, Katherine. I have been so uneasy; but I knew you would be annoyed if I came

"Indeed I should! This lonely ride to the manse is the last shred of liberty left me. I do not know what I should do without it. Every other hour of the day is, in come way or other, under his control and surveillance."

"Uncle's words are always worse than his intents, I think."

"He says he is going to send me back to school."

"What have you been doing Katherine?"

"I was, it seems, too civil to a gnest, and not attentive enough to you.' Wintoun colored painfully, but he replied, with a great deal of spirit: "Uncle Brathous is too interfering in my personal affairs. I have not complained of your treatment, Katherine. Even if I had cause for complaint, I should not ask him to interfere."

"And Jessy was quite as attentive to Mr. Mowbray as I was."

"Yes," he answered, but the tone was dubious. He felt that Jessy had a freedom in this matter that Katherine ought not to claim; but then it was useless to say so. Then there was a few moments of embarrassed silence. Katherine wanted Wintoun to continue the conversation about Mowbray, and Wintoun knew this, but the subject was a painful one; he could not instantly compel his own acquiesence, and while he hesitate Katherine asked, with forced indifference:

"Jamie, what do you think of Mr. Mowbray?"

"You ought not to ask me that question, Katherine."

"Why?" "Because you know I love you, How can you expect me to love a man who may be my rival?" "Nonsense!" she said; but Wintoun noticed that a vivid blush covered her face and throat, and that she went to the window and began to sing in order to hide her feeling. In a few moments she returned to the fireside and said:

"He has gone to Edinburgh." "But he will return."

"How can you tell that? Did he say so to you, Jamie?"

"My heart tells me so. He admired you very much, Katherine. I do not blame him for that. Who could help

"Yet my guardian blames me for it, Jamie. You will not let him send me back to school?"

"Give me the right to protect you, dearest! Then no one shall say s word to cross you."

"Always that is the way!" she cried, with tears in her eyes and voice. am to become your wife in order to escape my stepfather's dictation. It would be simply a change of masters. Now no one can be generous because no one is unselfish.

"Do not be so unjust, Katherine. I will not ask you to be my wife one hour before you are so willingly. Dearest, I love you so truly that I can live without you and yet live for Wintoun came toward her as he spoke, and Katherine, looking into his face, saw it illuminated by his generosity of unselfish love. At that moment the tall, ungraceful youth was almost handsome; and she gave him her hand and said simply;

"Thank you, Jamie!" Then a footman brought in a teatray, and Mrs. Brathous came down stairs. She was flushed and worried, and said:

"The laird has taken cold and fears

Wintoun made some sympathetic remark, but Katherine was lost in thought, and the meal was not a pleasant one. It was scarcely finished when the laird sent for his wife, and Katherine, casting about for something to pass the evening which would not permit Wintoun too much opportunity for conversation, bethought her of a new book of border music; and she proposed that they should learn some of the songs together, Wintoun was delighted. He knew that he could sing, and to mingle his voice with Katherine's voice was a rare pleasure. So they looked through the book, and Wintoun struck boldly out with:

"March! March! Etterick and Teviotdale!" He played the stirring notes with spirit and decision. Their voices blended charmingly. And the room seemed suddenly full of mounting troopers and the stir and bustle of galloping horses. There was no weak note under Wintoun's fingers. The men of Eskdale and of Twistdale went flying past to bugle tones, and they were just calling musically one to the other:

"All the blue bonnets are over the Border!" when Mrs. Brathous entered the room, with a worried face and a lifted hand. "Katherine! Jamie!" she cried. "You must stop playing to-night! The laird is very nervous. He says it excites him, and he has some fever already. He thinks both of you are very unkind, and he insists on the piano being closed at once." Of course, he was obeyed, and Katherine then suggested a game of chess. But a chill had fallen upon her sunny mood. She was distrait and discouraged, and she moved her pieces without consideration. Wintoun had no wish to checkmate her. He played as badly as she did. At last Katherine stood hastily up. She laid her bands over the board, looked steadily at her antagonist, and said in a voice whose tone was authoritative and decisive: "Jamie, we are both playing a false game. Let us withdraw before either of us has to say, 'I have lost!' She then swept the pieces into their boxes, closed the lid and put them away. The action had a kind of prophetic fatefulness, a prescience un-foreseen and unplanned, endued with somewhat of omnipotence. Its effect upon Wintoun was almost that of a sign from heaven. ' He did not doubt it, or analyze its meaning, or ask "Why?" it affected him so. He only felt that in a moment all had changed for him. A sudden despair invaded his heart. He knew that he had lost Katherine. He might resson himself back to hope, but at the end all her flattering tales would vanish, he was sure. A pitiless truth had been flashed upon his consciousness that hour, and he could not dispute it.

Katherine was annoyed at herself. Why had she said those words? Why had she suddenly stopped their play? She felt in the silence that followed a strange regret that she had spoken, and that he had understood. For once her ever-ready thought failed her. She could not find a sentenceno, nor a word to say. She stirred the fire and moved the small table aside, and then almost unwillingly looked at Wintoun. And her eyes opened on him like a Book of Revela-

Sighing deeply, he arrested his dis-mayed soul, and tried to find some commonplace remark which would dispel that uncanny, sense of fateful foreknowledge. He went to a large window and drew aside the curtains, The whole land was wrapped in winding-sheets of mist, with a ghost of moonshine in them; and for the first time in his life he was aware of that occult world which every one carries about with him;

"Katherine," he said sadly, "I will go home now. I have got an ailing heart to-night."

"I am sorry, Jamie. But an ailing heart is better than a bad one, and Brathous has spoiled our evening," As she uttered the words Mrs. Brathous entered the room.

"Jamie, your uncle wants you," she said. "I hope you will not contradict him about anything to-night. He is so nervous and hard to manage."

Wintoun only bowed in reply. He was by no means in a conciliatory temper, and the sight of the unreasonable, imaginary invalid was an irritating one. His head, large and oblong, had the hoariness of yellow mixed with gray. His sheep eyes were watery and furtive. His tongue—always too big for his mouth-was the organ of a voice hollow, querulous, and yet authoritative. He was sitting up in bed, with a large tartan plaid over his shoulders.

"You see what a man gets who serves the public!" he cried. "Little honor and no sympathy! You and Katherine were singing away as if the laird of Levens-hope was in the very height of perfect health."

"Have you sent for me in order to quarrel, uncle?" "Quarrel! Quarrel! Who speaks of quarreling? Think shame of yourself, James Wintoun! I sent for you because I want you and Katherine Janfarie to tie yourselves together as soon as may be. I am tired out with so much love-making in my house. I have finished my own share of that silly business, and it is not pleasant to have song-singing and reel-dancing and such like havers night after night." "I cannot marry Katherine until she gives me permission."

'Permission, indeed! I wonder who is her guardian? I have given you permission. Go back and tell her I will allow her to choose any day between this and Michaelmas.'

"I will tell her nothing of the kind, sir. I doubt if Katherine and I will every marry. I do not think she loves me, and I do not wish to marry her unless she does."

"Are you gone clean daft, James Wintoun? You will marry Katherine. Of course, you will! I intend to see to that, Do you think I will have dead folk worried out of their graves and live folk worried into them for Katherine's nonsense?"

"Katherine's feelings are to be consulted."

"Katherine's feelings! Heard one ever the like? A bit of a school-girl, that has not come to her feelings any more than she has come to her reason! I will remind you that I hold a mortgage on Wintoun lands, and that you are looking to Katherine's money to pay

"I am doing nothing of the kind, sir. I would not marry Katherine for her money. I do not care for her money!" And Wintoun snapped his fingers passionately almost in his uncle's face.

"You are a born fool, then! The man of this day who does not care for money can go out of date and break his heart if he likes to. Out of my presence anyway, sir! You have made me a great deal worse, and likely as not I shall bide awake all night for your ridiculous nonsense!" Then he rang the bell furiously, and called out at the same moment: "Helen! Helen! Come you here! Helen, send for Doctor Musgrave! Peter Symington, ride for the doctor! I have had a chill! I'll be having a fever next! What kept you, Helen?" And so on, until Wintoun was glad to escape the rasping, unreasonable voice. The chill wind and the drifting vapors were more kindly and comfortable companions.

The next morning the laird was still sick and the house was wretched, but the mist was so thick Katherine did not dare to go over the hills. And this condition continued for four days. Then Sabbath came, and she found her way to church, and afterward to the manse; but there was no great comfort in either place. The minister was preoccupied, and Jessy never named Mowbray. Moreover, she treated Katherine's one question about him as if the subject bored her.

"He has forgetten our very existence, I dare say, Katherine; and we need not worry ourselves about his. He was seeking pleasure, and we made an hour or two for him. I am quite sure that he will just mingle us up with the fine views, the driving, the fishing, the sight-seeing and the other bonnie lassies that he will dance a reel with."

"Then I am real sorry, Jessy. I liked him more than that, and I will even tell you so."

"Dear, why should you? Men are never to trust to. Father said this one would be 'dangerous.'" "Oh, Jessy, if you would love me a little!" Then Jessy understood her friend's trouble, and she talked sensibly no longer. She turned her tongue and began to praise Mr. Mowbray. She said the like of him in looks had never been seen on Tweedside, and that a blind man might have known that he looked at Katherine. "Yes, dear," she said, "as he sat there and you stood at the open door, he got a wound he will never get over."

gave his heart away the moment he

It was not that Katherine confessed her love. It was that Jessy divined it, and that, with the unselfishness of a true friend, she hasted to give the only sympathy that is of value-the assurance of whatever we wish to believe. This conversation began before the morning service, and was continued in the noon interval. Katn-erine's heart was full of her small domestic troubles, and she could no longer restrain her confidence. She told Jessy how ill tempered and tyrannical the laird was to every one, but especially to herself. 'I am at his mercy," she said, "and he makes me feel it every hour. If I practice my music, the piano affects his nerves. If he finds me with a novel, he asserts that it is improper reading and takes it away. Poetry offends him still more deeply."

"Father says the laird is very nar-row and bigoted about literature. He thinks Robert Burns covers the ground,"

PROSPERITY IN ENGLAND. The Business Increase Keeps Pace With That Noticed Here.

LONDON (By Cable) .- Great Britain's business boom keeps pace with that of the United States. Not in ten years has there been such general prosperity in business and stocks. Apart from the South African boom, which maintains its strength unexpectedly, gold shares are higher than at the height of the boom of 1895. This feeling of confidence may be expected to continue, if the Parliamentarians refrain from attempting to goad Lord Salisbury to belligerent action, as during the last session of Parliament, and provoke counter threats from other powers. Most of the stock values have attained a higher level than in years, and an unusually large proportion are buying for investments, instead of speculation.

As most of the manufacturers here have all the business they want, the increase in the United States' exports attracts less at-tention than it would in ordinary times.

AN ARMY BEEF INQUIRY.

The President Appoints a Board to Investiga'e the Meat Charges.

Washington, D. C. (Special) .- The President has appointed a Court of Inquiry to examine into the charges touching the meat furnished the American army during the war with Spain, and other matters involved in the charges made by General Miles against the administration of war General Wade, Colonel George W. Davis, Ninth Infantry, and Colonel Gillesple, Corps of Engineers, now stationed in New

This Court of Inquiry, it is said by persons versed in military jurisprudence, will be unique in that it will be directed in its investigations against a state of affairs and not against a person, for although General Miles is named as the author of certain allegations in the formal order, it is these allegations and not General Miles that is the subject of inquiry.

SUDDEN RICHES KILLED THEM.

A Woman Who Inherited $80,000 and Two Men Who Struck Oil.

Scio, Ohio (Special) .- John Coleman, the village grocer, who was fast becoming a rich man because of the oil boom, was discussing the situation with his friends a few days ago when suddenly he ceased talking and fell back in his chair dead. William Woods died an hour after he had received word that oil had been found under his property and that he soon would be wealthy.
WHEELING, W. Va. (Special).—Sudden acquisition of wealth is said to have been the sole cause of Mrs. J. P. Eddy's death at her home in Ritchie County a few days ago. Mrs. Eddy received a letter from a small town in central Pennsylvania informing her that in the division of her parents' estate she had received $80,000 in eash and securities. The shock was too great for her and she suffered a nervous attack, which resulted in her death a few lets $25,000 For Loss of Both Arms.

Charles Miller, a former brakeman on the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, secured a verdict of $25,000 in the Superior Court before Judge Blodgett at Boston a few days ago. Miller sued for $100,000 for personal injuries, which were caused by the breaking of a defective link by which the car upon which the plaintiff was riding was coupled to the iceomotive. The plaintiff, who was employed as a brakeman by the corporation, was thrown from the train and was run over by several of the cars. The accident occurred at South Framingham on February 19, 1897, and resulted in the loss of both of the plaintiff's arms. the New York, New Haven and Hartford

NEW YORK STATE NEWS.

A Race With a Deer.

Engineer Tom Darby, of the Port Jervis and Monticello Railroad, has, perhaps, had more lively races with wild deer than has any of his brethren. A few days ago occurred the most exciting race in all his experience. While the train was in the vicinity of Rose's Point a fine buck stepped upon the track from the wilderness which lines the road on either side and watched the train as it approached. It stamped its feet and wiggled its tall until the train was feet and wiggled its tail until the train was within fifty feet of it, and then skipped away down the track. Darby put on all steam and the deer increased its pace. For a good mile the race was continued. At one time, Parby avers, the train was so close to the deer that had he been on the cowcatcher he could easily have touched it. The deer increased its speed, and then attempted to jump the wire fence, but in doing so caught its forefeet in the wires and turned a complete somersault. It was stunned for a few seconds, and then stunned for a few seconds, and then jumped into a lake close by the track and ewam for the opposite shore.

The report sets forth that the State Engineer and sets forth that the State Engineer and Surveyor has done all the work for the Forest Preserve Board in its purchases of lands, and is able to perform all the duties of the Adirondack Survey. A Jail Romance.

Jennie Horton occupies a cell in the Wellsboro Jail charged with aiding two desperate characters to escape jail. Miss Horton was employed in the kitchen of the jail and carried the food to the prisoners. In this manner she met Harry Grover, who was wanted in Elmirs for horse stealing and was awaiting a requisition. He prevailed upon the girl to aid in his escape, promising to wait on the outskirts of the village and they would go to a minister and be married. She smuggled a saw into his cell, and he, with a prisoner of the name of Bixby, escaped, after knocking down Turnkey Addison and robbing him of his keys. MR. HARRY SOTHERN.

If you had asked Mr. Harry Sothern why he was spending his vacation at Port Natal, South Africa, he would have gravely told you that the Ken-tucky Summer climate did not suit his health because it was too hot, and you might have suspected that the Colonel was guying you, and you would probably have been right. Nevertheless the Colonel would have been telling you the exact truth. Kentucky had become too warm for him. The immediate cause of this warmth in his old home was a slight disagreement with another gentleman during a game of cards, in the course of which he had been forced to use his pistol in order that the other gentleman might not use his. The other gentleman happened to be an Ex-Congressman, a man of National reputation, of one of the first families or Kentucky. The Ex-Congressman's son, received a Sothern bullet through his pistol arm. Mr. Sothern felt that the people, with that imperfect reasoning for which he had no use, blamed him for the occurrence, and knowing people as well as he did, he knew that their blame would take the tangible form of a lynching. He did not stop to argue the matter, but left for parts unknown until the people should have time to reflect.

Mr. Sothern had had the good luck to come out in a steamer chartered by the British Government for the transportation of supplies to Africa. On the way We have Trusses to fit all cases $1. out he had cultivated the acquaintance and more. At first the gentleman, a lieutement in her Majesty's service, did not respond cordially to these advances. He had sized up Mr. Sothern at his first apearance as a missionary. He changed his mind a few days later. He was practicing with his pistol at the time with indifferent success. Harry Sothern, who had been watching him, suggested that his aim was too deliberate. The lieutenant turned quickly and handed the revolver to his critic, who showed him how it ought to be done. When they reached Natal the lieutenant introduced him to the people whom it was desirable for him to know. Just at this time the Mattabele war was "on," After weeks of waiting he got his permit to join a bullock train which was on the way to the front where the fighting was going The main division of the British

South African corps had just defeated bing rates for the coming winter. On a division of the Matabele army at all other papers not mentioned here, Kraal, and had set fire to the villages around the place. Captain Williams, with about thirty-five men, while pursuing the enemy, was led into an ambush and found himself cut off from all chances of escape in a small plain surrounded by foothills fairly swarming with the enemy. There was absolutely no chance for him. The pass by which they had entered was already occupied by the enemy. There was nothing to do but wait for help or annihilation. He dismounted his men in the middle of the plain among a clump of bushes and small trees. The natives circled around out of range, indulging in what seemed to be a war dance.

"When I get out of this," began Harry Sothern, "I'm going into the undertaking business. There seems to be a good field for it here."

An old sergeant near by replied: "Oh, no, you're not. When you get out of this you're going to heaven, if you're been a good boy. If these devils leave enough of you, you'll be a fit subject for undertaking yourself."

Harry did not reply. He had taken off his coat and was rolling it up to put under the head of a young ensign who had been wounded as they entered the pass, and whom Sothern, amid a thrown across his saddle and had then 3:10 p. m. . . A few minutes later the young soldier was dead. Harry gently laid the boy's head back upon the ground, and then picked up his Winchester with an oath. The natives were advancing all around them with continuous shouting and beating of shields. The British soldiers were picking off the Mat-abele warriors with a certainty and precision that nothing could withstand. The natives broke and fled. With a ringing cheer the men sprang to their feet and fired and cheered together. Harry Sothern staggered back with a bullet in his thigh.

Captain Williams belped his men move the wounded to a more sheltered spot, behind trees. Harry objected to the arrangement for himself, saying: "Don't bother about moving me back. Just turn me over so I can shoot. I've got an engagement to kill half a dozen niggers yet."

The captain laughed. Then turning to his men, and for the first time in his life speaking to them as equals, he said: "Gentlemen, let's sing 'God Save the Queen."

Harry leaned back on his elbow and watched them with an amused smile, He had seen a good many men die in one way and another. But he had never seen men take it just like this

Across the valley to the savages who were waiting like vultures for their prey there floated the sound of the National song from the throats of men who knew they would never sing it again. A Matabele chief, who was captured a few weeks later, says that the 6,000 savages stood awe bound for a moment before the handful of men who were teaching them so easily how not to be afraid of death. He says that as they came across the valley for the attack he could see a man in epau-lettes (the captain evidently) taking the loaded rifle from a wounded.

CROSMAN & SWART, Opticians. 97 Genesse St., AUBURN, WAYS OF CANTON PIRATES.

In China Their Business Is Neither Hard Nor Dangerous.

Probably never since Canton was open to foreign trade, says Mr. Consul Brenan in his report on the trade of the city, has piracy been so rife as during last year. The boldness of the pirate is, however, surpussed by the apathy of the provincial Government, Perhaps the word piracy is scarcely applicable to the acts of these adventurous robbers. They have no armed craft of their own with which to give chase and run down thir victims. The usual plan is for a band of half a dozen men to go on board a passenger launch disguised as honest men. When a suitable spot is reached they throw off all disguise, overawe the crew and passengers by flourishing revolvers, and then half the party stand by ready to shoot while the rest proceed to search the passengers and their luggage; and when they have taken all they want they transfer themselves to another boat or land near a friendly village, where a division of the spoil takes place. They are not devoid of 8, 10 and 12 Genesee St. a certain chivalrous feeling. Cases have been known where, after having robbed some rich passengers and made a good haul, they have restored to the poorer passengers what had already been taken from them. On other occasions they have overpowered the master and crew of a launch and "borrowed" the use of the vessel for a few hours, during which they have overhauled a junk known to have valuables on board. Having pillaged the junk they have steamed away to their own village, and before landing they have offered to pay the master for the time his launch has been detained. The owners of passenger boats are now given to engaging some old pirate as a detective. He points out suspiciouslooking characters whom it is better not to take on board, and keeps in check any of his own friends who may have been premeditating a coup. "St. James' Budget."

Gold Coins in the World.

It will probably be a shock to many to learn that all the gold coins current throughout the world could be comfortably stowed away in any one of thousands of English drawingrooms.

A careful estimate of the gold currency of the world places its amount at £755,000,000. Althought this enormous sum will probably exceed our entire national revenue for the next seven years, it could, if converted into English sovereigns, be placed in a room 33 feet long, 30 wide and 20 feet high.

Fish as Turtle Catchers.

A curious mode of catching turtle is practiced in the West Indies. It consists in attaching a ring and a line to the tail of a species of sucker fish, which is then thrown overboard, and immediately makes for the first turtle he can spy to which he attaches himself very firmly by means of a sucking apparatus arranged on the top of his head. The fisherman then hauls both turtle and sucking fish in.

THE general public is in full sympathy with Miles in this controversy. He has done more than his duty and has done that bravely and well. His characterization of the unfit meats furnished the troops as "Embalmed Beef' has become a term of apt use. His statement regarding it is clear, and explicit. At his order thirty reports have been made by regimental commanders concerning the beef which had been issued to their men and they all tell the same story. Added thereto is a mass of evidence, consisting of communications, affidavits and statements from officers, soldiers and civilians regarding the character of the supplies, the unfitness of the beef embalmed and canned, for humane consumption, and its rejection because unfit for food. The embalmed beef was treated with poisonous chemicals, and the canned roast beef was the beef pulp after the extract had been boiled out of it and the refuse put in cans and labeled "Canned Roast Beef." Always before in our wars the army has been furnished with fresh beef delivered and on foot. Under Grant, Sherman and Sheridan, cattle were delivered at the front and slaughtered day by day at the points where fresh beef was needed for food. Embabmed beef and canned beef evinced a desire to travel further than never before were furnished to the arny. It was a fateful experiment which has discredited the War de-

tion the bars soould be put up. It is a national reproach that out from a quick and successful war such a pitiable scandal should have come.

THE news that one of the Phillippine tribes under Aguinaldo, the Ygorates or Ygorrotes, fought with bows and arrows in the battle of Manila and left heaps of their dead upon enraged was his father that the latter the field, must have had a pathetic vowed that if it occurred again he interest for American readers. These men are perfect types of the barbarous and fanatical Malay. They are as low down in the scale of civilization as the barbarian hordes that overran the Roman empire. Here we find creatures living under the dominion of a European power at the from the nearest line. When she does close of the ninteenth century beside travel, she accomplishes it by means whom the American Indians of a century ago were marvels of intelligence. Yet within their darkened minds some spark of patriotism must have glowed intensely. The presumption is that to their feeble understanding the American troops had all the aspects of ruthless invadors, intent upon replacing upon their necks the yoke of tyranny. Perhaps they died as truly for liberty, as they understood it, as the men who fell at Bunker Hill or who perished from privation at Valley Forge. It is hard to think of the mouth end of some cigars to be American bullets and shells mowing down on their own native heath these untutored sons of the Orient. But there was no alternative. The blood that they shed will undoubtedly be the seed of a new and better dispensation in the distant Phillippines. Even in our own republic the onward path of pioneer civilization was whitened with the bones of a savage race.

THE farmers of the country have had an uphill struggle for years, but they are now, and have been for the past year, enjoying their full share in the national prosperity. ... The exports from the United States last year were $1,200,000,000, and over twothirds of this sum $850,000,000 represented the propucts of the farm. The strides made are shown in the comparisons with former years, the agricultural products being $730,000,-000 in 1897, $665,000,000 in 1896 and $546,000,000 in 1895." How gratifyto know this, but a practical proof to our county farmers would prove more satisfactory.

PECULIAR. PREJUDICES.

Nearly Everyone Manifests Some Favorite Eccentricity.

Everybody, more or less, possesses a favorite prejudice, which in the eyes of everybody else, appears nonsensical and unnecessary. In the gay time of the Georges, for instance, the young rakes strove their hardest to develop some peculiarity or curious prejudice, by which their names would become famous, and possibly through this be handed on to posterity.

Just now there is an eccentric old gentleman living near Luton, in Bedfordshire, who persists in donning the attire of an earlier time. Any day he may be seen taking his walks, wearing knee breeches and an indescribable green waistcoat, whilst his silk hat is peculiarly antique. Notwithstanding. the remonstrances of his friends, he refuses absolutely to dress up-to-date, protesting that he is a great admirer of the good old days and of all its customs. The present day orthodox dress. is far too sober and severe to suit his.

Equally singular is the prejudice against modern things shared by another old gentleman who is the squire of a small village in Derbyshire. He also shuns from his tables any French. or continental dishes, allowing the cook to prepare only plain food, in which a saddle of beef always plays a. conspicuous part. As might be expected, he is a firm believer in the greatness of his country, and has never yet. Scotland, where he possesses another Science's Triumph Over Crime.

The Perlin newspapers have lately been telling with great glee of a briumph of science over crime. In one of the great offices of the German capital a number of petty thefts had been committed, the pockets of coats hanging in the antercoms being visited and cigars and small change extracted. The police were for a time nonplussed and invoked the aid of science. A professor being consulted, he advised the insertion of a delicate aniline powder in placed at the mercy of the thief. The next morning there was a summoning of the clerks an a general inspection of their mouth. One unhappy youth was discovered with aniline tongue and lips.

An exchange gets off the following: I want to be a farmer and till the virgin. soil, and labor in the sunshine to sweat and stew and boil; I want to earn large acres, whereupon the rye to sow, and watch the cornstalk waving, and hear the mortgage grow; I want to be a farmer, and grow a Hubbard squash, the pumpkin and potatoes, and other stuff, by gosh; I want to be a farmer, I do, upon my soul, but I haven't got the money to buy a gopher hole.

On the Trail of a l'ension.

A somewhat pathetic letter comes. from an old colored citizen. It is as icllows:

"De rain has done beat down my cotton, an' most er my co'n is done ruint. My son wuz a sojer in de war wid de Spaniels. He lost two legs in it. Do you reckon de guv-ment will give him $2 a leg fer 'em?"

Level Sen Bottom.

The bottom of the Pacific between Hawaii and California is said to be so level that a railroad could be laid for 500 miles without grading anywhere. This fact was discovered by the United States surveying vessel engaged in making soundings with a view of laying cable.

Deception Punished.

Berlin courts have ruled that exhibiting the signs "English spoken here" or "Ici on parle francais" in shops where the languages are not spoken by the shopmen is a contravention against the law dealing with unfair competition in 8 bars Master Soap, trade, and is punishable by fine and imprisonment.

Birds' Claws.

The reason given that birds do not fall off their perch is because they cannot open the foot when the leg is bent.

Thus a hen while walking will close its toes as it raises the foot and open them as it touches the ground.

A Long Tunnel.

If all the tunnels in the world were placed end to end they would reach a distance of 514 miles. They number about 1,142.

WAS SHEER LUCK.

When the great pink diamond of Guznee reached Europe it created widespread interest and took immedi-Ate rank with the historical stones of in the police court, the natural astonthe world. It was compared with the fluest gems in the royal and imperial regulia, savants wrote learned disquisitions upon its beauties, and the maga zines and newspapers spoke of its value in a way that made one's mouth

Among others whose envy was aroused by the descriptions of the stone was a Mr. Lamorock, a gentleman who had passed under many aliases in his career and who had only recently been released from Portland.

As he read of the great diamond his eyes sparkled at the thought of its worth. There it was-$500,000and you could put it in your waistcoat

The ex-convict, as he pondered over the subject, knew the task was not an Without more ado he wrote a short note to Congleton & Co. the celebrated diamond merchant of Hatton Garden, asking them if they would care to buy some old fancy jewels, and received a reply expressing their willingness to inspect them. After studiously examining the caligraphy of their letter with a magnifying lens he set himself to practicing a number of curves and flourishes on a sheet of paper. An hour's work seemed to satisfy him, and he then indited the following epistle:

"Hetton Garden, Jan. 4, 1896. "Messrs Bonsfield Brothers.

"Dear Sirs: As a client of ours desires to inspect your pink diamond known as 'The Light of Guznee,' with a view to purchase, we should feel obliged if you would send it to us. Our Mr. Lamorock will call upon you a few hours after you receive this letter, and will bear a note vouching for his identity. We shall be happy to undertake all risk and responsibility for the stone from the time it is intrusted to the custody of our representative, and we beg to remain ; ours faithfully. "Congleton & Co."

When this production of his pen and brain had been carefully scrutinized, he composed another short letter, which stated that the bearer was Mr. Lamorock, the representative of Congleton & Co., He then went out and bought half a dozen eigars, four of which he steamed open and unrolled. Smearing the interior portion over with a dark, treacly liquid, he rolled them up again with expert fingers and put them into his case.

The first letter he had written he sent by registered post, going down to Bristol by the same train that took the mail. But on his arrival there he waited for three hours so as to allow of it being delivered before calling. He then went to their office and presented credentials, the genuin which were not for a moment suspect-

The Bristol firm thought it safe that the stone should be under the custody of their own representative, and determined that one of their partners young Harry Persfield, should accompany Lamorock up to London, tak ing it with him.

They had just seated themselves comfortably and the train was already in motion, when an elderly gentleman with a jovial red face and black bushy whiskers opened the door and bundled himself in.

After the lapse of a quarter of an hour he had talked their reserve away. and proved himself so amusing a companion that easy all became quite friendly, and Lamorock, who had grown suddenly amiable, pressed the others into accepting a cigar apiece. The jolly-faced intruder was not to be outdone in hospitality. He opened his hand-bag and with a merry wink produced a flask of curacoa, which the intense cold made particularly acceptable to them all.

Damorock, indeed, found the liquor so delicious that he took two glasses. Before they got half through their cigars he noticed with suspicion that the conversation began to slacken, and that his companions showed a disposition to go to sleep.

Bonsfield was the first to succumb to somnolence, and Lamorock even began to feel sleepy himself.

The intruder also began to look as if he would soon follow Bonsfield's example. He vainly tried to look wide awake, but his lids would droop heavily, his head would sink down upon Lis chin and he would then pull him-self together by a supreme effort and try to sit up straight.

When the train arrived at Swindon Junction the guard discovered them all asleep, and after trying in vain to rouse them up, the conviction dawned upon him that it was a case of foul play. The three patients were taken out and removed to the hospital, arrangements being made by the police that on their recovery all three should be detained in custody pending inves-

Harry Bonsfield easily established his identity, and was set at liberty. but the information that the police obtained about his companions, the revolvers they found in both their overcoats, two telltale cigars and two equally damning cigar stumps, the remnants of curacoa in the flask and very suspicious false beard, all these neidents led to their arrest, trial and subsequent conviction.

Scotland yard keeps the flask as a curiosity, for it has two compartments from which the contents can be drawn at the will of the owner by a slight pressure on a secret spring. Both compartments contained curacoa; but what was left of one sample was found to be drugged while the other

When the whole facts were revealed ishment of Lamorock and the jolly gentleman was past description. It beat even that of Harry Bensfield. All the three actors in this scene are now firmly convinced that one of the incalculable elements controlling man's destiny is sheer luck.

SPONGE FISHING.

THE WAY THEY ARE SIGHTED AND BROUGHT TO THE SURFACE.

Some Curious Facts About the Marine Product Which Are Not Generally Known-They Are Found in All the Seas of the World.

The sponges of commerce and the dried specimens of other species are not the actual animals, but merely their skeletons, or framework. That which constitutes their vital parts is removed in preparing them for mar-

Sponges do not have the power of motion possessed by most animals; they are nearly always attached to submerged objects. Since it is impossible for them to go in search of food, they can grow only in places where there is plenty of food such as they require.

They are more active in fresh than in still water, and die in a short time if exposed to the air. The surface of a living sponge is covered with minute pores, through which water is imbibed, carrying with it both the air and the organic particles necessary for the support of life.

Sponges are distributed through all seas, and are classified, chiefly, according to the structure of the skeleton. The Mediterranean and Red Seas are the sponging-grounds of the Old World; the grounds of the New World are the Bahamas, Southern and West-

The best sponge of commerce is found in the Mediterranean, and is known as Turkey, or Smyrna, sponge. It is obtained by divers, who go clad in armor when diving.

Sponges are usually obtained by fishing for them. When a sponge vessel arrives at the fishing grounds in the Bahamas, it is anchored, and then crew immediately get ready for work. The sponge fisher's outfit consists of a small boat called a "dingey," a long hook and a water-glass. The sponge hook is a three-pronged iron fork attached to the end of a very long pole; the water-glass is simply a wooden water bucket with a bottom of common window glass.

To use it, the glass bettom is thrust into the water, the fisherman puts the bail around his neck and then buries his head deep in the bucket to exclude the light. There are always two men to each dingey; one to act as "sculler" and the other as "hooker." While the sculler propels the dingey along very slowly, the hooker, in a kneeling position, keeps his head in the water. When a good sponge is sighted, the hooker rives a signal and the dingey stops.

Together the sculler and hooker thrust the sponge-hook down through the water and run it under the sponge; the roots are thus pulled loose from the rocks, and soon the game is in the dingey. Thus the work goes on until a boatload is obtained, and then they are taken ashore and placed in crawls to be cured. The crawls are built by sticking pieces of brush or stakes into where it is very shallow.

The Other Man's Move.

player, was walking in the street one day, when an idea struck him with regard to a certain chess opening, and he began carefully to think it out with a view to playing it in his next game with the equally well known player, Mr. Steinitz. Lost in thought, he stood at the corner of a street for a long time, until a policeman, suspecting him, went up and told him to move on.

"Beg pardon," replied the little doctor, absently, without looking up, "It's your move!"

A Superstitions Man.

An American millionaire who has a palace at Venice is more superstitious than his countrymen usually are. On Thanksgiving Day he invited a party of friends, including a Roman prince, one of the Queen of Italy's maids of honor, and various sprigs of the Italian aristocracy. The Roman prince, however, failed him at the last moment, and the host refused to sit down to dinner on finding that the company consisted of thirteen persons. He made various fruitless attempts to secure another guest, and at last, in despair, he announced that he intended to follow the customs of the Arabs, who always wait upon their guests, and eat their own dinners by themselves afterward. The meal proved a great success.

Try This With Your Diamond. An expert in gems has lately called attention to a property in the diamond which has not hitheto been fully appreciated. A diamond is mentioned that became phosphorescent simply by the heat of the hand, absorbing light on being held near a candle and emitted light on being briskly rubbed. This property is an important one, as It will help the non-expert to distinguish between the true diamond and other hard stones.

A Bank of Brides.

Simla, the summer capital of the Indian Empire, is a pretty pine-treed place well up in the foothills of the Himalayas. A feature of Simla life is the annual fair held by the native hills people, an attractive item of which is a "Bank of Brides" in an amphitheatre, where sit numbers of young women who thus calmly announce that they are candidates for hymeneal honors. Some of these aspirants to matrimony so patiently awaiting a choosing are quite pretty, and have intelligent faces; but those of Mongol caste must needs linger long for a partner, if personal beauty enters into the equation. - Woman's Home Companion.

Caribou Blinded by Duelling.

The Indian guide Jim Paul was once hunting on the Gaspereaux plains, New Brunswick, when he saw a large bull caribou coming straight toward him through a clump of stunted spruce. The animal frequently collided with the trees and seemed to take no notice of the Indian. "Sartin," said Jim. "I tink dat caribou was drunk. Bambye when he git pretty close I shoot him. Sartin he was mighty ole caribou, for he was blind and had no teeth and no horns." In the mating season it is not uncommon for caribou males to be blinded by thrusts received in their furious duels for the mastery of the herd.

Caloocan, which is about tweive miles north of Manila, is so situated that it is within easy range of the guns of warships. There is no high ground, the town being separated from the Bay of Manila by a wide stretch of marsh.

The plan for the attack on the place provided that the warships should open the ball. At half past 2 o'clock on Friday afternoon, therefore, the monitor Monadnock and the gunboat Concord, which had been ordered up the bay by Admiral Dewey, opened fire on the town. Their shells went true and much damage was done, in addition to making the rebels very uncomfortable.

At the same time that the warships be-gan shelling, the Sixth Artillery and the Utah Battery opened fire on the rebel intrenchments on the landward sides of the town. The artillery and the warships pounded away until 4 o'clock, when orders were given for General Harrison G. Otts's brigade, except the Pennsylvania Regiment which was held as a reserve, to move on the enemy's works. The men had been impatiently waiting for the order, and as the word was passed down the line they responded with cheers. The Filipinos were awaiting the advance of the troops, and as the Americans began to move forward the rebels started a rattling fire, which made considerable noise but did no great damage. In this they were disappointed, however, as the Americans extinguished the fires.

The losses of the Americans were slight, but the enemy suffered heavily both in killed and wounded. Most of the casualties to the Filipinos were caused by shrapnel, the organing and affectiveness of which caused terror

What Our Knowledge is Good For.

The attainment of skill is the alpha as it is the omega of science. It was the attempt to gain perfection in his every-day work that led primeval man to take the first steps in that great movement of which the fruition appears in the final development of our modern universities. For a man of highest culture, also, the end and object of study is, as Aristotle teaches us, not the attainment of knowledge, byt the perfecting of conduct, and this is true not only when we conceive of conduct as our action in relation to other men, but also if we look upon it as action in relation to the objects and conditions which surround us. - From "The Field of Art" in Scribner's.

The Marine Corps' Motto.

The motto of the marine corps is "Semper Fidelis"-always faithful. From the establishment of the corps during the revolution up to the present time the marines have nobly lived up to this motto, and have upon countless occasions shed luster upon the glory of American arms. To-day all the world knows of the brilliancy of their exploits at Guantanamo. The heroism they displayed there in the face of overwhelming odds is characteristic of the marines.-New York Sun.

James Crocket, a sturdy old Scotchman living in Detroit, Mich, at 88 Montcalm St., was cured of Locomotor Ataxia by these pills. For many years he has been a chief engineer of one of those big passenger pelace steamers plying upon the great lakes. This is a position of great responsibility and the anxiety causes a great nervous strain. Mr. Crocket says: "For afteen years I watched the big engines and boilers without a single accident, and only noticed that I was getting nervous. Suddenly without warning I was taken sick, and was prostrated. I had the best of physicians but grew gradually worse. At a council of doctors, they said I had hervous prostration, and had destroyed my whole nervous system and would never recover. For three years I was unable to move from my bed. The doctor said I had locomotor staxis, and would never be able to walk again.

A Singular Contest in Which Only One

Party Was the Loser. Here is a capital story of two well known Yorkshire men which has never appeared in print before. Two wealthy natives of the country of broad acres, one of whom was the head of a large, existing West Riding firm, and the other the hard headed founder of Beckett's Leeds Bank, met at a dinner in the principal hotel of a country town. Whilst over the table, a dispute arose as to which was the wealthier of the twain. At length the banker suggested that the question should be put to a practical test, and the pair drew up their chairs to a corner of the room where a bright fire was burning. It was agreed that each in turn should lay on the coals a five pound bank note, and he should be considered the vanquished who should first cry, "Hold, enough!" This singular contest proceeded in solemn silence for a long time, till at length it dawned on the less brilliant mind of the manufacturer that he was having the worst of the encounter. The notes were those of his opponent's bank, then universally used in that part of the country, and every time the manufacturer placed one on the burning embers the astute Yorkshire banker was five pounds the richer, whilst each move of the banker himself involved him in no personal

A Poor But Honest Archbishop.

The Archbishop of Canterbury is singular among the roll of English primates for his hatred of pomp and decoration. Once, when the guest of a country clergyman, he was much annoyed by the display of silver candlesticks in his room. After his Lordship's departure these silver candlesticks were nowhere to be seen. The distressed clergyman at once wrote to the Bishop, as he then was, telling him of his loss, and adding: "Can you tell us what has happened?" The reply came by wire: "Poor, but honest; look in the chest of drawers."

This is not the only silver adventure in which Archbishop Temple has been concerned. On another occasion he was put up by a clergyman during the absence of that clergyman's wife. On leaving, the host politely expressed the hope that when next his Lordship hopored the house Mrs. Temple would accompany bim. "No, thanks," the Archbishop laconically replied: "Mrs. Temple doesn't like roughing it," The clergyman's feelings were deeply hurt, for the visit had meant some expense and much anxiety to him. He unburdened his soul to his wife on her return. "Why, my dear," she exclaimed, "you didn't surely put the Bishop in the bedroom, did you?" He did. "Oh. then, that's it. I put all the plate in

AUSTRALIAN LUNG-FISH.

It Cannot Live on Land, But Breathes Through Lungs.

There has recently arrived at the Zoological Gardens in London some living specimens of the Australian lung-fish, a species first discovered in 1869 by Forster and described by Krefft.

The lung-fish has teeth similar to certain fossil teeth of the triassic strata in Europe.

The body is long and much flattened from side to side, and covered with large cycloid scales; the limbs are shaped like the blade of a paddle or a trowel, and broadly fringed. The flesh -red, like that of a salmon-is excellent eating, and large specimens are said to attain a length of six feet and a weight of about twenty pounds, the apparent disparity between size and weight being probably accounted for by the tapering off of the body behind the posterior limbs. Their home is in the Burnett and Mary Rivers; and as they were in danger of becoming extinct the Royal Society of Queensland recently resolved to establish them in new hab-

The lung-fish in its natural state eats large quantities of vegetable matter, but this does not appear to be necessary to it.

The lung-fish cannot live on the land, like a true animal, but its lungs are of a higher type than the gills of ordinary fish, and its heart has three divisions instead of two.

A Hanging Scrap Book.

"What is all that newspaper stuff hanging over your desk?" a loiterer asked a man who writes for a living.

"That?" the man answered, pointing to long strips of newspaper clippings which were pendant from a gas chandelier, directly over the desk at which he sat, "that is my scrap book. You've heard of the hanging gardens of Babylon, haven't you? Well, this is my hanging scrap book. People generally go on the plan that a scrap book must be neatly pasted full of clippings, and then piled away on a top shelf of a closet, or in the bottom of a trunk where you can never get at it without much time and trouble. Now, my idea of a scrap book is one that you can have where you want it and when you want it; so I have pasted these long strips of blue paper together, over the cross bar of my old fashioned gas chandelier. On these strips—as I clip short newspaper bits relative to my workbits of prose or poetry, jest or philosophy, statistics or other information, I stick a little dab of library paste, and up the clipping goes. It is convenient, and easily renewable; there is no patent on it, and the 'hanging scrap book' will be found valuable to all writers who like the things where they can clap their eyes on them."

THE GILA MONSTER.

DISCOVERY OF POISON RESERVOIR THAT HAS PUZZLED SCIENCE.

It Is New Known Positively That the Creature Is Dangerous and That Its Bite May Kill-Curious Habits and Mysterious Ways of the Reptile.

A mystery long inexplicable to science has at last been solved.

It relates to the Gila monster, so long suspected, though not proven, to be poisonous. The name bestowed upon it, helodrama suspectum, is an expression of this doubt. Now, for the first time, it is known positively that the creature is dangerous and that its bite may kill.

"We have discovered the poison gland, which hitherto has been declared not to exist," said Dr. Leonhard Stejneger, the famous reptilian expert of the Smithsonian Institution. "It is located in the lower jawjust where we would have least expected to find it, inasmuch as the poison glands of venomous snakes are in the upper jaw.

"Furthermore, I think that we are now able to account for the contradictions of opinions among naturalists respecting the danger to be apprehended from an attack by this creature.

"As to whether or not suffering or death may follow its bite, it appears to depend upon the manner in which the injury is inflicted.

"When a snake bites a man the venom, located in the glands at the base of the fangs in the upper jaw, is instantly conveyed into the wound through grooves in the teeth provided for the purpose. The teeth of the Gila monster have grooves, which have been imagined to be designed to a similar end, but we have reason now to believe that this form of structure has reference merely to strength. At all events, the venom of the Gila monster cannot be conveyed to the wound made by its bite with much quickness.

"When the animal strikes the poison flows out of the gland through a series of little holes between the teeth and the lower lip. It is in no sense squirted into the wound, and it will not enter the latter unless the creature succeeds in getting a good grip with its teeth and in holding on for quite a little

"You must remember also that liguids do not flow upward as readily as downward. This accounts for the fact that some persons who have been bitten have not suffered in consequence, while others have experienced very painful results. There seems to be authentic evidence to the effect that deaths have followed assaults by the reptile. But what I have said will suffice in a large measure to explainthe contradictions of testimony on the

"Some years ago Dr. Weir Mitchell. of Philadelphia, who is an authority on reptile poisons, made an elaborate series of experiments concerning the Gila monster, but was unable to fully establish whether it was poisonous or not.

"This reptile lives under the ground, or under vegetable debris, and is torpid except before daybreak and in the evenings, when it goes abroad and preys upon slow-moving insects. It also eats the eggs and perhaps the nestlings of ground-nesting birds.

"Nobody knows whether or not the Gila monster lays eggs. Eggs have been found in the bodies of female specimens, but they may be hatched in the body of the mother reptile. They are about three-quarters of an inch long and covered with smooth, white skin. The Indians of Mexico, by the way, claim to have a cure for the poison of the Gila monster, which is efficacious if administered promptly."

The Smithsonian Institution has now in its possession the skeleton of a monstrous water snake, which was dug up recently in Alabama. It was fully twenty-five feet long when alive, with a body circumference of about two feet. Probably 1,000,000 years have elapsed since it died.

Killed the Black Sheep. Forty sheep belonging to William Arndt gathered under a maple tree in Van Wert county, O., and among them were 18 black ones. A blinding flash of lightning seemed to penetrate the earth in the midst of the flock and killed all the black sheep, leaving the white ones unhurt. Each dead sheep had a round hole in the back of its neck, as if from a pistol ball, and around it the wool was burned away,

Two Bores.

Two of the deputies in the legislative chamber of the Duchy of Luxembourg are such bores that they try to speak at interminable length on all questions. They have become such nuisances that when either of them begins to speak the other members rush hurrledly out of the chamber, leaving him alone with the presiding officer.
