This sum, it is understood, is for a new building.

Honorable Thomas B. Reed, in writing of the modern trust, does not seem to regard it either as an "octopus" or a bugaboo. "My notion," says he, "is that while Providence and the higher laws which really govern the universe are, in men's talk, much inferior to the Revised Statutes before they are enacted, they are always found to be quite superior to them after they are enacted. In fact, Nature abhors a monopoly as much as it does a vacuum." Mr. Reed's paper on Monopolies which is to appear in The Saturday Evening Post of Feb. 10-is a suggestive discussion of the methods of vast corporations. It discusses in a striking and original manner one of the most pressing questions of the day.

PUT TO TEST.

We notice as each sale progresses, we have lots of followers. While the compliments paid us in the nature of imitating, taking for granted that most everything good has its imitator, still we have refrained from alluding to it in the past for various reasons. Chiefly we know the public will find out in time, that an imitator is nothing more than an imitation, and it is easy enough for the public to draw com-

But our text at the head of this article, we wish to make clear. We notice it is not only confined to the small places, but our surrounding cities have taken our modes and ways. While they are not patented or copyrighted, we still proceed in being the first in war, and last in battle, we therefore put an open challenge to all competitors, big or little, and leave the public to judge who will stand the

Who will give you the most stock to select from; who has made better preparations for out-of-town patronage; who will give you better prices and what's more, who can or will do more for the consumer than the ever tried and not found wanting.

WHAT'S IN A NAME.

"A Rose by Any Other Name Smells as Sweet."

The mere naming a few goods or articles is not all there is of its meaning; quoting a few prices is not all there is of a sale; the name of a department store does not mean all there is to your confidence, but just see the list of goods, every article has its different qualities and prices. That even our 32 Page Catalogue has but a trifling of each, so we ask you to come to one of our day's sale. See for yourself the good reason why everybody comes again and again.

HISTORY OF OUR SALE.

In the Spring of 1882, we inaugurated what we termed a ten days' clearing sale, in the most humble way by issuing a circular 8 inches wide, 20 inches long, containing therein a lot of little articles which we dealt in at reduced prices, stating the true and honest reasons, we needed the funds to pay obligations and besides we wanted to dispose of the stock during the dull months of the year, and buy new for the spring. As the old saying and a true one, that necessity is the mother of invention, which has led us into the sale trades.

While we believe in improving and progressing, still we would be ungrateful to burn the bridge that carried us over so safely, we therefore stick to the old and well tried name. While we are enlarging and progressing yearly, and our sales have become a standard symbol of the saving purchasing time, it differs so materially from our first that it is now a woman's carnival, a man's duty, and child's delight in Tompkins County and surroundings.

It is so conducted that at each sale, we sell more, we serve more, we benefit more people than before, ten stores under one roof, 25 apartments, each one nearly a store for itself. It is at your disposal and it's not a few things thrown before you cheaper than usual as a bait, but the en-tire stock of hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of the best merchandise is placed before you at reduced prices for the time of the sale.

Mr. Oddie's Courtship.

By Sheels E. Braine.

R. MARKHAM ODDIE was a model lodger, an old bachelor, and a heart-whole man. That is to say, he was all three until the day—considerably past his fortieth birthday—that a special fate took him in hand, and brought him face to face with the vounger of two ladies who had recently come to live in one of the houses opposite.

They were evidently mother and daughter; both were comely and the last-named of the two had one of the sweetest faces it had ever been Mr. Oddie's luck to behold. She happened to drop a small parcel whilst walking along their mutual road, and he hurried after her with it. The smile with which she received it went straight through Mr. Oddie's somewhat antiquated waist-

All the evening he thought of that smile. When he went to bed, he endeavored, with the aid of three candles, to get an impartial view of that region on the top of his head where the hair ought to have been, but now, alas, was not. That bald spot had not troubled him much up to that time; now he regarded it with mistrust.

Mr. Oddie had led an amiable, punctual, uneventful existence, going to and returning from the city every week day with regularity and dispatch—the kind of person who is never asked for his season ticket. He was comfortably off, and had no one dependent upon him; the few relatives he possessed lived in the shires.

Mr. Oddie had remained a bachelor all these years possibly because nobody had set to work to marry him. It was not that he objected to women; on the contrary, he admired the fair sex, as a whole, quite unreservedly. But he had never given his heart to any one particular woman, and his landlady looked upon him as a fixture.

The returning of that apparently innocent looking parcel marked an epoch. Life was never the same again to the little old bachelor. He had not watched Miss Hexham's gentle face and welldeveloped but graceful figure for ten days before he became convinced that it was not good for a corn dealer to live alone.

"A man wanted softening influences about him"—here he hurled a piece of fried ham to the cat—"he needed a gentle hand to guide and restrain him." Mr. Oddie at this point discovered that he had forgotten to wind his watch up the night before.

The truth was, he was in love, and with a young woman with whom he had never exchanged a syllable. He learned her name from his landlady, an austere person, whose mind was set upon a curious form of religion, and who did not take much thought about frivolous worldly matters.

Questioned discreetly by her lodger, this worthy but depressing person could tell him little regarding the two ladies who were now the object of such tender interest to him. They were a Mrs. and Miss Hexham, so she had heard, and Mrs. Hexham was either deaf or dumb, or it might be both, for her daughter talked on her fingers to her, and she answered back in the same

Mr. Oddie's courtship was a very decorous affair. In Spain, despite his years, he would doubtless have adopted the role of an "iron-eater," as the youth who goes courting under his lady-love's balcony is styled.

But in sober, unromantic England, the suitor does not entiron, or serenade the queen of his heart on the guitar. He has to be properly introduced, and the little corn dealer, knowing this respectable custom, would have given anything for an introduction which would have allowed him to call and establish friendly relations.

The months passed, and still be could indeed, I thin not get that thin but necessary end of py together."

ter seemed to have very few friends, and never went out, probably on account of Mrs. Hexham's affliction. It was hard upon the daughter. Mr. Oddie thought, but he admired her all the more for her self-sacrifice.

Miss Hexham became aware of his devotion, of that Mr. Oddie was convinced. When they met—and he took care that they did meet pretty often—he ventured to raise his hat, and smiles were exchanged. But there the affair halted, to the poor little man's frequent despair. He could get no "forrader."

Once, when he attempted to speek. Miss Hexham turned the color of a red rose, and promptly hurried away.

"I have never been properly introduced, that is why," was Mr. Oddie's anguished reflection. "She must have been exquisitely brought up; the very pink of propriety."

"Something will have to be done," cried the poor man, desperately, on the day that he went to the city without a tie and an unfeeling acquaintance jeered at him and inquired if his liver were out of order. His liver! Perish the thought! It was his heart.

He decided at length that, like Hezekiah, he would ask for a sign from heaven. He would send the object of his adoration a bouquet, an anonymous bouquet of the choicest; she would surely guess from whom it came. It she placed it in the window he would write to Mrs. Hexlam, explain himself and his intentions, and request permission to call.

Mr. Oddie took a holiday the day the bouquet was sent off from Covent garden; to sit still in his office was a thing impossible. He went for a long walk, but where his neat little legs took him he was never able to say.

The next day the agony increased; there was no sign. Mr. Oddie fell plump into the depths of despair, and was convinced that he had offended his ladylove. He had not been properly introduced; the phrase became a perfect nightmare to him.

But the second day there was the bouquet in the window in all its glory, and, moreover, Miss Hexham was bending over it, inhaling its perfume. She was a beautiful woman; not too young for a man—ahem—in his prime. The wonder was that such a treasure had not been snapped up before.

Markham Oddie wrote to Mrs. Hexham. It took him hours and hours to compose the letter, and it was the most deliciously old-fashioned epistle ever penned in a practical century. Two whole days elapsed before a little note came in reply:

"Mrs. Hexham presents her compliments to Mr. Markham Oddie, and would be pleased to see him, if he could make it convenient to call this evening between eight and nine o'clock."

The note was a formal one; but when the agitated little old bachelor was shown into the sitting-room at Holmwood, Mrs. Hexham, who was alone, received him with a very kindly smile. Her eyes looked as if she had been crying.

"Please take a seat," she said. "It has been very close all day, has it not?"
"Terribly," answered the visitor. "Do you feel the heat much?"

"Yes, I am afraid I do," was the reply, and Mr. Oddie suddenly recollected that his future mother-in-law was said to be deaf and dumb. This lady was certainly neither.

"My daughter," said Mrs. Hexham, after a pause, "desired me to tell you how very, very grateful she is to you for your letter and the flowers. She has gone away for a short time to stay with friends. She—she thought it

Mr. Oddie sat there, unable to utter a word. "She had gone away, because she thought it best." That meant that there was no hope for him.

Mrs. Hexham's eyes filled with tears as she looked at him. "Oh," she cried "I am so sorry—so very sorry! You are such a good, kind-hearted man, I am sure. Of course, you did not know, or you would not have thought of it."

"Thought of what?" asked Mr. Oddie, heavily.

"Of marrying my poor Agatha. You did not know that she is deaf and dumb?"

Mr. Oddie stared at the speaker in blank amazement. It was fully a minute before he grasped the significance of what she was saying. It was the daughter, not the mother, who was "afflicted," as Mrs. Roper would have phrased it. He was silent, and Mrs. Hexham continued:

"My poor girl is over-sensitive, and your kindness went to her heart, I can assure you."

Mr. Oddle pulled himself together, and rose to his feet. At this moment there was something almost noble about his rather tubby little figure.

"Madam," he said, firmly, "your daughter is an angel, and I love her. Will you have the goodness to give me her address—that is, if you will sanction my asking her to do me the honor to be my wife?"

"It seems rather unconventional," she said: "but it is not exactly an ordinary case, is it? And I am sure you are a good man. Mr. Sedley, the vicar, was talking about you only the other day, and saying how charitable you were. Agatha has the sweetest disposition, and she is so quick you hardly realize that she is not like other people, indeed, I think you would be very happy together."

by together," answered Mr. Oddie, emhasizing the "three." He took the vidow's hand and kissed it with oldashioned gallantry.

It is unnecessary to mention at what nearthly hour Mr. Oddie required his reakfast the next morning, or to state hat he hardly ate a mouthful of it.

In the afternoon of the same day irs. Hexham might have been seen ending a telegram, with a beaming see. It was not a long one, for it connined only five words: "Love from gatha and Markham."—Sketch.

SHE DIDN'T LIKE HIS LOOKS.

That Was Why the New Servant Turned Harrington Out of Ris Own Bouse.

Harrington had spent three weeks in New York on business. When he returned he drove directly to his house and rang the door bell. A new servant girl answered the ring.

"Is Mrs. Harrington in?" he asked. "No, sir," answered the girl.

"Well, I guess I'll wait for her," said the master of the house and he put his foot over the threshold and into the hallway.

"Excuse me, sir," said the girl, "but no one's at home. I can't allow strangers to wait in the house."

Harrington took in the humor of the situation. "AM right," he answered, with a smile. "Just tell Mrs. Harrington that a relative called," and he went away.

A half hour after his departure his wife returned. "Has anyone called?" she asked of the girl.

"Yes, ma'am; a gentleman." "Did he leave his card?"

"No, ma'am; he said he was a relative, but he looked more like an agent for cleaning powder than a relative. He wanted to walk inside, but I didn't like his looks, so I didn't let him in."

"Quite right," remarked Mrs. Har-rington. "It is just as well to be careful. Besides, I have no male relative who is likely to call at this time of day."

Mrs. Harrington barely bad her wraps off before her husband, who had whiled away his time at the bar-

"Yes, sir; she just got in."

BOOK AGENT IN HARD LUCK.

His Instructions for the Benefit Drowning Men Did Not Work Well.

"I'm through," said the book agent, wearily. "I've notified the house that they may no longer expect me to risk my life handling their goods. For the last 30 days I have been touring the state with a universal compendium of knowledge, containing arst aids for the wounded, treatment for snake bites, how to bring a drowned man to, and a thousand and one other things that every man should know, bound in calf and sold at : price within the reach of all. I traveled on my wheel, and that enabled me not only to work the small towns, but the surrounding country as well. One day I chanced to call upon an old farmer. I tried to get him interested in the great work that I was handling, but without success until I showed him the chapter on drowning; then I saw that I had him. There was a small lake near where the boys went swimming and the old man lived in fear that some one would get drowned. "Well, when I showed him how fully the book treated the subject I made a sale. It was a hot day, so I accepted an invitation from the old man's sons to go in swimming with them. I was hardly in the water when I was selzed with a cramp. I shipped a good deal of water, but I managed to reach the shore without much trouble, although I was greatly exhausted. While I was gasping for breath the old man came running up with the book that I had sold him. Finding the chapter on drowning he read the directions to his sons and told them to go ahead. Before I knew what was going to happen I was soized by two of his husky sons and hung up by the heels and pounded on the back until all the breath was knocked out of me. Then I was rolled over a barrel and pounded again; then a bellows was jammed down my throat and I was pumped so full of wind that I thought I would burst. BY GERTRUDE SEITH.

NE of the recent books for children that is worthy of unusual attention is "The Wonderful Stories of Jane and John," by Gertrude Smith, published by Herbert S. Stone & Co., New York and Chicago. The quaintly written little tales with which the book is filled carry with them a wonderful lesson for the little folks. The following is one of the stories which the book

In a wonderful house on a wonderful hill, overlooking the wonderful sea, live dear little Jane and dear little John.

And here they come tripping and skipping down the path between the flower beds.

Down the path they came tripping and skipping, little Jan, little John, down to the wonderful sea with its wonderful tales and wonderful sands and wonderful waves, and here they came for a time at play.

Oh, isn't John a handsome boy? And did you ever, ever see a more wonderfully beautiful girl than Jane? So lightly they trip, so airily skip, they almost seem to be flying.

They skip and trip over the wonderful sands, and laugh at the wonderful waves as the wonderful tide sends them up on the beach so near them. Oh, how they laugh and cry with the joy of their pleasure.

"Let us go for a row in our new little boat," said John. "Let us go for a row on the wonderful sea, little Jane."

"All right, little John; let us go for a row," said Jane. And they took hold of hands and ran down the hill, with a hop, skip and jump, to the little green boathouse. And out of the boathouse John pulled the boat-O, a dear little red boat, with white stripes hugging its edges.

And Jane, little Jane, jumped into the boat, and away they went, merrily rowing out over the wonderful sea. And dear Jane was six years old and dear little John was seven, and out on the sea alone in their own little boat they went rowing!

And over their heads great white birds were floating about in the wonderful air. And the great white birds saw little Jane and they saw little John frating about in their boat, and they did winder that John was so brave and Jane was so brave. They were brave, too.

All at once little John feathered the water with both his cars and stopped the

"Oh, Jane!" he eried. "Oh, dear little Jane, down deep through the wonderful water on the shining sand I see a wonderful And little Jame stood up in the boat and looked down through the water, and there on the shining sand she saw the shell. It was a beautiful shell, little reader. The inside was pink, as pink as your cheeks, when you have been running and racing; and the outside was white, with soft colors and tints all down through the creases.

And Jane said: "Oh, I see it! I see the wonderful shell, deer little John, and I want it!"

And John said: "I will get that shell for you, dear little Jane. I will get it for you!" And what do you think that little John did? He pulled off his coat, and he threw off his hat, and out of the boat he jumped, and down through the water he dove, and picked up that shell from the bright burning sand. Up through the water he rose. Like a cork he rose through the water, and into the boat he climbed, and laid that shell on Jane's lap. "Oh, thank you, John! You good little John!" cried Jane. And she hugged the beautiful shell up tight in her arms.

"The wonderful warm, loving sun will soon dry my clothes," said John. And he shook his curly head, as a curly dog shakes his head when he comes out of the water. "Oh, yes, the dear sun will soon dry your clothes, little John," said Jane. "And now we have this wonderful shell to take to our lovely mamma."

"And John caught up the oars, and away they went over the water. So lightly they sped, they almost seemed to be flying! And Jane sang this little song, that I hope you may know, little readers:

"Glide along, my bonny boat, Glide along, my bonny boat, While to the tide we gently float, And chant to the deep sea's mellowanote, Glide along, my bonny, bonny boat."
But all at once the wind came sweeping across the blue water. Out of nowhere a very strong wind came blowing and tumbling the water!

"Hello, old wind," laughed John, "what are you trying to do, you rough fellow?" "Ha, ba!" laughed Jane. "The wind is tumbling the sea into hills, little John! Look at the long blue hills! See the white, foam-like clouds, little John!"

And John said!

"Yes, we will ride on the hills, little Jane, and we will ride through the clouds, little Jane."

And, oh, the sea rolled high, and, oh, the wind did blow, but little John and lit-tle Jane rode safely over those tossing waves and into a little harbor!

"Oh, wasn't it fun," cried Jane, as she jumped to the shore. "Wasn't it fun, little John, to ride with the wind over the won-"Yes, it was fun, brave fun!" said John, as he sprang to the shore. "I never was out on the sea in a gale before, little Jane, but I love the wonderful sea in a gale." And up the hill to the beautiful, wonderful house where they lived, ran Jane and ran John. And Jane held the wonderful shell in her arms, and her dear little face was shining with smiles she knew, and John knew, how pleased their mamma would be with that wonderful shell. And into the house they ran, and up the broad stairs they ran, and into their mother's room. "Oh, oh!" said mamma. "Here come my wonderful girl and boy. Here come my wonderful children!" And little Jane held up the beautiful shell so the sunlight rested upon it.

"See, see! my precious mamma," tried. "See, see this wonderful shell!" And the dear mother took the shell in Price her bands and sm a id not speak a word! "Why do you a little John. "De Poss

"Yes, my dear little John, I see the bright tints of the flowers, and the rainbow colors and all. Who made this wonderful shell, my dear little son ?" "Oh, Love made the wonderful shell, mamma!" cried little Jane, clapping her hands and dancing about the room. "And Love brought the shell from the shining sand in the water to you, you precious mamma!" cried John. And their mamma smiled and said: "Yes, Love is the answer, you wonderful chil-

One Student Dead.

The fire which destroyed the Delta Chi fraternity boarding house at Ithaca on Monday proves to have been a fatal conflagration. Several students were badly injured by jumping from the third story windows, among them being Dudley Wilcox and Eddie Toohill of Auburn. John F. Lonergan of Albany suffered terrible injuries and died on Tuesday evening Two buildings were destroyed and the loss is estimated at $15,000.

Political Feud in Kentucky.

The trouble between the Republican and Democratic politicians of Kentucky has culminated in an attempt to assassinate William Gobel the Democratic contestant for the Governorship, on Tuesday. He was walking to the capitol building when person who has not apprehended, shot him yet been from a window across the street, the ball striking him under the right arm. Though he is still living, it is thought to be a mortal wound. Just what advantage this gives the opposing party remains to be seen.

The Price of Newspapers.

The printers and publishers of the country are having troubles all of their own. Prices of all grades of paper and other stock used in printing establishments continue to raise at an alarming rate. Few publishers would dare advance their subscription price of their publications to meet the sharp advances and must grin and bear it .- Morrisville Leadmuch longer if who gran and bear'st" in the in one hewspaper advances posite. way it has for the past month.

C. H. Burdick, traveling representative for J. & F. B. Garrett, informed us yesterday that printing paper was worth double what it was a month ago, and that it was probable it would go to ten cents a pound within a very short time. The subscription price of newspapers must certainly follow other merchandise and go up if this state of affairs continue. Newspapers have been too cheap for several years, and in many instances the price obtained scarcely pays for the white paper they are printed on. Not only newspaper, but all other printers' goods, presses, type, commercial paper, envelopes, etc., are advancing rapidly in price.-Oneida Union.

Women Embalmers.

The following paragraphs are extracts from an article in the Syracuse Herald of Jan. 24:

"Two women are members of the class in embalming which is being conducted at the Empire House. Taken from the standpoint of preference, it is not a profession which women are apt to choose for a life work, and so this avenue is not overcrowded."

"In the present instances, the interest in the work is not of recent growth, for one is the wife of an undertaker and the other the widow of one who had been engaged in the same business, and from a knowledge of the duties pertaining to the business, both have developed a desire to become proficient in the art. The women are Mrs. W. B. Briggs, of Homer and Mrs. M. J. Thayer of Genoa. Mrs. Briggs decided to learn embalming in order to help her undertaker husband. She will then take up that branch of the business, and manage it. Mrs. Thayer, who ern Pines, (Yankee town,) in North Carosince the death of her husband has carried on his business, desires to become proficient as an embalmer, as it is now almost an indispensable adjunct to the profession."

"The teacher stated that in some localities there was a considerable demand for women as embalmers, and his classes always include one or more women. Women, he said, had shown themselves expert in the art whenever they had undertaken the work."

The Albany Gateway.

The New York Central is distributing a large map folder throughout the country which has a striking reference to Albany and its magnificent geographical and commercial position. The principal feature is a page illustration of an open gate, overlooking the Hudson river, with the four tracks of the New York Central in the foreground; the magnificent steamer Albany of the Day Line in the center, and the capitol, with a glimpse of the city in the distance. Over this gate are these words: "The Albany Gateway Always Open.' Underneath the picture are these lines: "Through this open door passes the commerce of a nation, over the New York Central lines, the Erie Canal, and historic Hudson River."

On the opposite page is brief reference to Albany as the capital of the Empire state, and one of the most interesting cities in America.

It also refers to the capitol building as one that is set upon a hill and as the most costly building on this continent.—Albany Evening Journal.

Between Spain and America.

Wars seem to be necessary evils, yet they bring their blessings and we can see already a great good that has already come out of the recent war between Spain and America. It has shown that America has no sectional issue to settle. There is no North, no South, no East and no West, but a United Country. The boys from the Old North State, North Carolina, stood shoulder to shoulder with those from the Yankee State, Massachuse ts. It was very gratifying to see how the Southern people welcomed and honored the "Yankee boys" as they passed Southward and it shows to usuall that the men and women of the South are loyal to the old flag. Yet many Northern people have for several years contended that the South was "true blue" and would respond when the time come. Many people up this way have friends and kinspeople who are located in the famous winter resort, Southlina and they have been writing of the kind treatment they get at the hands of the Southern people. They have divided up lands and let Northern people have it at

The Lumberman.

For all the lumberman's rough jocularity, his heart is right. Once the forest harbored fugitives from justice; but the railroad brought the sheriff, the sheriff brought the law, and law brings decency. Besides, as at sea and on the plains, the open air breathes a spirit of chivalry. Suppose a man affronts a waitress, 20 defenders leap to their feet. Suppose a poor fellow is hurt, round goes the hat. What is more, two comrades will drop their work and take him 60 miles to the doctor. And, sad to tell, there is need enough for that sort of sympathy. "Woodman," says Helen, who, in spite of my earnest remonstrance, never verifies her quotations, "Woodman, spare that toe!" A fine hero, no doubt, is this man of the forest, a brave and generous soul; but, nevertheless, as in the case of Mr. Burgess' impurpled heifer, "I'd rather see than be one." For, roundly outdoing that aly humorist's confessed preference for "fingers rather than toes," the lumberman does his best to dispense with both. What are left by the woods are claimed by the mill.-R. L. Hartt, in Atlantic.

Tante Kruger.

Mrs. Paul Kruger is said to have soepted her husband's offer of marriage with the words: "I can bake, I can cook, I can sew, I can clean, I can scrub." Whether or not this is the customary Boer formula is not explained, but it is true that the wife of the president of the Transvaal has lived up to her words. Oom Paul is said to be worth several millions. Much of this accumulation is said to be attributed to the thrift and economy of his wife, who was not only able to do the things that could help to make a man rich, but was not ashamed to. She is still a gentlemannered, blue-eyed woman, who has not changed her method of life because the husband she married as a poor man has come to have riches and power. She still attends to the duties of which she told her husband she was capable.-Boston Globe.

A MULE TRAIN CHARGE.

It Was a Bold Move, But It Delivered the Ammunition All Right.

"The charge took place at Gettysburg the first day. I was ordnance sergeant. The ordance officer let me look after the ammunition for one of Gen. Reynolds' Chisions while he joined the general in the advance against the enemy. The same thing had been done by other ordnance officers in time of battle, and I had learned to depend upon my own resources. At the sound of Buford's batteries I had the train, consisting of 34 wagons, loaded with fixed ammunition, pull out of the meadow and started for Gettysburg on the Emmettsburg pike.

"When we had gone about half a mile the division quartermaster came tearing up the road after us. In a state of intense excitement he demanded that the train be halted, and when that was done addressed me in these words

" 'Sergeant, where is Lieut. Rogers, the ordnance officer?"

"'He is with Gen. Wadsworth, on the

"'Did he tell you to put the train in motion?

"'No, sir.'

" 'Who did?' " 'Nobody.'

"'Why did you move? Don't you know that I am responsible for these teams and wagons?'

"'The general has always approved of moving up with the ammunition when a battle begins. I am held responsible to have it there when needed.'

"You wait here for orders." " 'I ought not to, sir. They will need a new supply soon, and it is my duty to be nearer than this.' "'If you attempt to move the train I will place you under arrest," "At that moment a member of the

"MY HORSE STARTED ON A G. geant, Gen. Wadsworth directs that you move the train up to the village.' "I didn't ask for the quartermaster's permission, but gave the command forward, on a trot.

"When within half a mile of the village another staff officer dashed up with an order to hurry to the field with tm-

"Halting, I spurged my horse down the line and selected ten drivers I knew would go where they were told to go, and had them drive to the head of the line. Then, directing the balance of the train to remain until a proper order was given to move, I told the ten picked men to reach their limit of speed and keep it up until halted. My horse started on a gallop, but Bert O'Connor, who had the head team, yelled: 'Get out of the road or I'll run over you.' The spurs were applied, and I sang out: 'Come on, old Huckleberry.' (O'Connor's command was called the Huckleberry regiment.)

"Away we went on a keen run, every driver pushing his team by yells and flourish of whip. Down through the village, then to the left through a field to the Lutheran seminary, then to the right, tearing down a fence, and onto the line of battle.

"'Get back with those wagons,' roared a strange officer.

" Not until the men get ammunition." "The moment the wagons stopped a confederate battery at close range opened on them, but the work of throwing out the boxes of ball cartridges. 1,000 in a box, and breaking the covers with axes, kept up until the line was

"That done, no time was lost in reaching the pike, both for the safety of the ammunition supply and because the wagons had drawn an extra fire upon the troops.

"The commander of that confederate battery had a pienic with those mules and white canvas-covered wagons. Helet the line of battle go to devote his six pieces to mules and wagons as we struck the pike. The hind wheels of a wagon were knocked off. The balance of that load was thrown to the men and the driver passed to the rear with a two-wheeled vehicle. Another shot struck a mule in the head. Its harness was cut and a five-mule team passed leisurely along the pike to have the canvas cover ripped off by an exploding shell. Another shot whipped off the hind legs of the mule 'Indiana' was riding. How 'Indiana's' eyes 'bulged out' when his wheel mule fell. Six of the ten wagons were hit and three of the mules killed before the train reached town, where it was ordered to halt, but not a box of ammunition was lost. One of the wagons was so slivered that it was left on the pike a short distance from the seminary, where that night Gen. Lee made his headquarters.

"The mule train, the only one in the war on either side, so far as I can learn, that ever charged the enemy-infantry, cavalry and artillery-rested on its laurels in a side street of Gettysburg that hot afternoon until the First and Eleventh corps reached town on the way to Cemetery Heights. Then, with the enemy within close musket range, and rapidly advancing and firing, the train moved-moved with the last line of infantry, cavalry and artillery, amid the roar of battle, the loud commands of officers and a mix-up that was wellnight inextricable. Brave Bert O'Connor was at the rear. I rode by his side. The victorious enemy came so close that we emptied our revolvers into their faces several times on the way out.

"Reaching the seminary, I saw commanders of troops getting orders from Gen. Hancock. The instant he was alone I rode up, saluted and asked where I should place my command.

"Where is it?"

"I pointed to the mule train. "'Where have you been with these

"'To the front, with ammunition,

"'This is the front; go to the rear." "As I left him I heard Hancock say: Wadsworth had better give that sergeant a regiment of cavalry." -J. A. Watrous, in Chicago Times-Herald.

ARE MARKED DESERTERS.

Many Veterans of the Civil War Who Did Their Duty But Have No Discharges.

According to Judge Advocate General Lemly, of the navy, one of the most striking examples of inequitable legislation to be found upon the statute books exists in the case of a sertain en, cabinets for your class of soldiers and sailors, veterans of the civil war, against whom the technical charge of desertion appears on record. The circumstances which have brought about these inequitable medicines. Manufactconditions he stated as follows:

In the spring of 1865 a considerable period of time elapsed during which the urers' prices rush them army and navy were not in active service, the exigencies of the war being over, while at the same time the steps necessary to a formal disbandment of the forces had not been taken. Men rity. who had left their homes willingly to enter the army or navy, and who had remained in the service faithfully during the activities of the war, understanding that the period of public peril had passed, and that the purposes of their enlistment had been substantially served, quietly returned to their homes ITHACA and resumed their places in civil life, in very many cases without awaiting the formality of a discharge.

The manner in which the individual members of these great well-trained and efficient organizations, immediat ly and without confusion or disorde of any kind, reentered the civil body politic from which they had come and took up again the pursuits of privat business, has elicited the admiration of students of American national polity. But however admirable and desirable from the point of view of the political economist the speedy reentry into productive industry of soldiers and sailors no longer needed for active duty may have been, in all cases where such reentry was made without awaiting the arrival of formal papers of discharge, it was, from a military point of view, irregular; and the soldiers and sailors who, when the war was over, thus returned to their homes were technically guilty of the offense of desertion. In later years, when seeking official employment, applying for admission to military or naval organizations, or desiring to obtain a pension, such men, conscious of their patriotic and honorable service, have been astonished to find that upon the records they are rated as deserters.

By an act of congress approved August 14, 1888, it was provided that where men in such situation had served faithfully in the navy for a period of at least six months during the war of the rebellion and until May 1, 1865, the mark of desertion might, in certain described meritorious cases, be removed. The operation of this act was limited to five years, doubtless because it was supposed at the time of its enactment that such period would be sufficient to afford all applicants thereunder an opportunity to present their requests for relief. It happened, however, that many of the men entitled to the benefits of this remedial provision did not ascertain their true status until after the act itself had expired by limitation, as they did not seek to obtain pensions until reduced to the necessity of so doing through advancing years or misfor-

But whatever the cause, the records of this department show that a very large number of meritorious claimants who could have obtained relief under this act, as falling within the class for whose benefit it was obviously intended, failed to make application in season; and the technical charge of desertion in their cases still debars them from rights and privileges fairly earned by honorable service in time of war. The inequity of these conditions is emphasized by the fact that an act passed for the benefit of the army, and similar in terms to the act of August 14, 1888, has been made operative without limitation as to the time when applications thereunder must be filed.

It is earnestly recommended that congress be asked to take such action as will revive and render operative without limitation the beneficial provisions of the act of August 14, 1888.-Washington Star.

the Reseas a Seldier's Wife Didn't Come to America When the Was Expected.

"Dear me," said the weary man at midnight when the watchman told him the next ferryboat started in 40 minutes, "did you ever get into a peck of trouble simply through a bit of carelessness? I wrote a letter last night which must reach its destination by noon to-morrow. Instead of mailing the letter at the corner, I carried it to the theater and now I'm spending most of the night getting over to New York so as to make sure the blooming thing will leave in the three o'clock mail."

The watchman sat down on a bench and rested his head on his hand in a contemplative way. "That reminds me," he remarked at last, "of the time I sent a money order to my wife in old England and what I didn't know about money orders made trouble for postmasterson both sides of the ocean. worried my wife and kept my family away from me for three months longer. I was a young fellow then, had served all through the civil war, and we thought it would be over soon. I had saved my pay till it amounted to $200 and I wanted to send the money to my wife, so she and the two kids might join me here when I was mustered out.

"Well, I had heard of the money orders which the government had just began to issue and a sergeant in my company told me it was a safe way to send money. So I went to the post office and they gave me a blank and told me what to do with it, and then they gave me another when I spoiled the first one, and after an hour or two I wrote what they said would do, and they took my money and gave me a piece of paper for it. I wrote to my wife and told her to go to the post office and she would find £40 there for her, and to buy tickets on a Boston steamer and come to America right away. I counted the days before she would come, and in about three weeks I thought sure my family would be on the sea.

"Well, it was about ten weeks before I heard from my wife. She wrote that she went to the post office and told the postmaster her husband, Private John Wilkins, had sent £40 and she had called for it. He said: 'Well, where's your money order?' and she said she didn't know anything about my money order, and then he told her to go home and wait till Wilkins sent it to her. She had waited she wanted to know if the money had been lost on the way and if she was ever to see her John again, anyho v. "You can bet that letter made me hot and I went to the pastmaster and blowed him up for something no better than a robber. He looked over a lot of papers and then told me the money had been sent, and I told him he lied, and then he and his clerk bounced me for impertinence. I went up to camp and was telling the orderly sergeant all about the outrageous treatment of me when along came the captain, and he said: "Hello, Wilkins, have you got a wife in Nuncaton, England? "Yes, sir,' said I, saluting, and much astonished at his knowledge of my private affairs. 'Well,' said be, 'I have a letter addressed to the captain of company B from the postmaster there, and he says he has £40 for Mrs. Julia Wilkins, and she can have the money when her husband sends the order for it "Then I was mad as a batter. "I was earning that money,' said I, 'when we were marching with Sherman to the sen, and I gave it all to that d-d rascally postmaster, begging your pardon, captain, and what do I know about any order? But he gave me a receipt for the money and I can show it to you." "Show me the receipt?" said the captain.

"I went down into my knapsack, bauled out the paper and gave it to the captain as triumphant as could be. He looked it over for about two minutes, and then he said: 'You're a fool. That's the money order they want in England, You'd better send it to your wife if you want her to have the money." "You could have knocked me down with a feather; and I thought the captala rather rubbed it is, though meant kindly, when he said as turned down the company street:

The Sabbath school teacher had been telling the class about Joseph, particularly with reference to his coat of many colors, and how his father rewarded him for being a good boy, for Joseph, she said, told his father whenever he caught any of his brothers in the act of doing wrong.

"Can any little boy or girl tell me what Joseph was?" the teacher asked, hoping that some of them had caught the idea that he was Jacob's favorite.

Two Answers.

Not long ago a Boston clergyman received an evening call from an elderly man and woman, who expressed a wish to be joined in the bonds of matrimony then and there.

"Have you ever been married before?" asked the clergyman of the man, an honest-eyed, weather-beaten person of seafaring aspect.

"Never, and never wanted to before," was the prompt reply.

"And have you ever been married before?" the question came to the woman.

"No, sir," she replied, with equal promptness; and with a touch of humor that appealed to the clergyman at once, she added: "I never had a chance!"

The marriage ceremony was speedily performed and the clergyman refused to take any fee, telling the bride, with a twinkle in his eye, that it had been a privilege to officiate, which he would have been sorry to miss .- Youth's Com-

"Kind Lady and No Dog."

The surveyors who were employed in laying out the line of the proposed Ogden avenue extension left behind them at certain intervals certain peculiar marks to indicate points which they had fixed. One elderly housekeeper who lives along the line has, through and experience with strangers, become quite wary. She had read a newspaper article not long since telling of the marks which tramps and beggars put on the premises of what they term "easy people." So when she came to her front door and saw the surveyor's mysterious signs, she studied them intently, and, saying softly to herself: "Kind lady and no dog, hey?" went back into the house with a smile. When she reappeared she was armed with a scrubbing brush and some cleaning brick. She at once proceeded to remove every mark left by the surveyors,-Chicago Evening News.

The claim of other cough medicines to be as good as Chamberlain's are effectually set at rest in the following testimonial of Mr. C. D. Glass, an employee of Bartlett & Dennis Co., Gardiner, Me. He says: "I had kept adding to a cold and cough in the winter of 1897, trying every cough medicine I heard of without permanent help, until one day I was in the drug store of Mr. Houlehan and he advised me to try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and offered to pay back my money if I was not cured. My lungs and bronchial tubes were very sore at this time, but I was completely cured by this remedy and have since always turned to it when I got a cold, and soon find relief. I also recommend it to my friends and am glad to say it is the best of all cough medicines." For sale by J. S. Banker.

Sponge Sugar or Honeycomb.

Beat the white of an egg to a stiff froth, and add a teaspoonful of fine sugar. Boil to the "soft crack," without cream of tartar, two pounds of granulated sugar with half a pint of water. Have ready a bottomless frame, say five inches square, or a tin hoop. Place this on a wet marble or plate; it is well to cover the frame, if of wood, with paraffin paper. When the sugar is cooked remove it from the fire and add the sweetened egg and whatever flavor or color is desired. Stir it altogether for a minute until the sugar rises in the saucepan. After it rises let it fall. Stir, and it will rise the second time. As it does so, pour it into the frame and let it remain until cold. Remove by passing a string or palette knife under it. Break in pieces. Success depends upon not pouring it out the first time it rises, but doing so while it is rising the second time before it begins to fall,-Cosmopolitan.

A LESSON IN HISTORY.

BY WRIGHT A. PATTERSON.

"HAT are you going to tell us a story about to night?" asked Tom, as he settled down beside his grandfather's knee after the evening meal had been finished. "I'll let you and Neilie guess what it is going to be about," said grandpa.

It is going to be about China, I know, said Nellie, "for you told us China was a veritable story land.

"It is a story about Africa, where they are having a war now," said Tom. "My teacher asked me the other day if grandpa had ever told us a story about that, and I know he has been there.

"I am alraid you are both wrong," said grandpa. "Nellie is right in saying that Chana abounds in stories, and you are right in saying that I was in the country once where there is a war going on at the present time, and I may tell you a story about what I saw there, or some of the people who live there, at another time, but this evening I am going to tell about something else. You know I crossed the Pacific ocean when I came here to live with you-"And be our real grandpa?" broke in Nellie, who considered her grandfather of more importance since he had taken up his residence with them. 'And I crossed the great mountains and plains in the western portion of our own country. I had come from the east, and there I had visited a historic church in the islands which we recently got from Spain, and am going to tell you a story of that some day. But to go on with this story. As I rode across the country between here and the Pacific ocean I thought of the man who had built the long line of railway that had made such a pleasant journey possible, and of all the good he had done in the world before he died. I did not think of him again so very much until to-day, when I was reading in a magazine of a university he had founded, and what a great institution it is to be, all because of the money he had given

"I knew that same man when he was but a boy, and both of us were living in New York state together. He was only a poor boy then, and had no prospect of becoming the rich man that he was when he died. He used to do all sorts of odd jobs for the people in the part of the country in which we both lived, and, was much liked.

"I was only a boy, too, and a poor boy at that, just like he was, but I am afraid I did not improve my opportunities as he did, and so I am still poor, while when he died he had so much money he hardly knew how to

"I was about 20 years old, and this boy was two years older than that, when we first heard in the east of the discovery of gold in California. By that time he had studied law and had become a lawyer, but as soon as I heard the news that set all the people of the eastern states wild I went to him and wanted him to go to California with me. He told me that he did not want to sacrifice the small practice he had already built up for the chance of getting rich in the west, and finally when I could not get him to go with me I started out alone and went by ship around Cape Horn to California. "Like hundreds of others who went to Cal-I did find my friend from home. His law office had been burned down and all his law books destroyed, and as he did not have money enough to buy new ones be concluded he would follow me to the west.

'It was the merest chance that we found each other, and for a long time we worked together, but neither of us were very successful, and finally I concluded I would go somewhere else, and asked him to go with me, but he wouldn't do that. He said that it did not pay to keep jumping from one thing to another, and that as he had come to California to find gold he was going to stay there until he found it, if there was

"That was just the secret of his success all through life. He kept everlastingly at a thing until he accomplished it. When I found that I could not induce him to go with me I started out alone to see some of the world, and went from one place to another all over the Pacific ocean, always in search of the wealth which I never found. Then I went to Asia and Africa and Europe, and then back again to the Pacific, never staying very long in any one place, but never finding the gold which I was so sure would come to me at each new place that I tried. I never had to go hungry, and I was never at a loss to find money enough to take me to the next place I wanted to go, but I never found the fortune I was always looking for.

"While I was doing all this running around my boy friend was still at work in California. Like many others, he found gold, but not in the immense quantities that he had expected, and when he had secured enough to go into something else he did so, but still stayed in California. He and his brothers, who had gone to California before him, started a store and sold goods to the men who were looking for gold. The people saw that he was a man who could be relied upon and they began to trust him more than they would the men who jumped about from one thing to another.

"The men who had gone to California in wagons across the plains or by ship around Cape Horn realized the need of a railroad to carry people straight across the country in a few days, and when they organized the company that was to build one of these roads they elected him the president of the company. A little later the people of his state found him a good man to trust and they elected him their governor, and so it went on. The people always found him just the man they had expected he would be, because he had kept at the one thing. After he had been governor the people sent him to the senate of the United States.

"This man had a little boy who came to him after he had made his great wealth, and he wanted his boy to see the great countries of the world, and he made him travel everywhere. But a few years ago when the boy was in Italy with his mother he died, and his father felt very badly about it, so he determined that all the money he had made, which he had intended his boy should have, should be used to educate other boys and girls. He felt that that was what his boy would have liked to have done with it him-Merritt's Wagon Shop self, and so he estiblished a great university in California, and he called it the Leland Stanford, Jr., university, for that was the

"When I was reading about that school to-day, and I realized who had built it and given to it such vast sums of money, it seemed to me that it was not only a monument to Senator Stanford's son, but to the senator as well, and that it would be an inspiration to other boys to stick to one purpose in life, instead of continually changing. Do you not think so?"

"I think that was a good story," said Tom. "But I am glad you traveled all around, so that you can tell us the good stories you do." "It is bedtime now," said mamma, as she started up the stairs with the baby, and Tom and Nellie followed her, but grandpa's lesson had not been lost upon them.

MOVING ROYAL SEPULCHER.

The Coffined Ashes of British Monarchs Carted Off Like Common Clay.

The year 1899 will become a notable one in the annals of British royalty as marking a phenomenal rattling among the dry bones of past monarchs. The coffins with the remains of George III., George IV., William IV., the duke of Kent, the duke of York, Princes Octavius and Alfred (children of George III.) have been removed from Westminster Abbey; the duchess of Brunswick, Princesses Charlotte and Elizabeth (children of William IV.), Queen Charlotte, Princess Charlotte, Princess Amelia, Queen Adelaide, Princess Augusta, King George IV. of Hanover, and, last of all, the present duchess of York's mother, the duchess of Teck, are being moved from where they lay to make room for those who must inevitably follow in the years that are to

The royal sepulcher, which is situated directly beneath St. George's chapel, and the royal memorial chapel at Windsor castle, is one of the places to which no member of the public is ever admitted. Some one of the royal family may pay an occasional visit; some few, very few, privileged persons have at times been known to have had their curiosity satisfied, but from the public eye the place is kept secret. Even by those who have been permitted to descend the stairs and pass through the gates into the presence of the royal dead the visit could not be called inspiring.

First of all, there was the getting down-no easy matter even with the required permission; and there is no wonder the visitors were few, except when the sepulcher had to be opened to receive a new inmate.

The bottom gained, nothing more was visible for a time but the heavy gloom, all the more weird by the dim light given by the two sickly candles and the lantern carried by the watchman. Gradually, as the eyes accustomed themselves to the light, or, ifornia in those days, I did not find much rather, the darkness, one began to disgold, but before I had been there a year tinguish massive octagonal pillars, supporting what seemed to be a vaulted roof. Down the center ran a long stout table and round the sides some shelves, upon which rested strange dark things that did not in the gloom look what they really were—the coffins containing the dust and ashes of long since departed royalties.-Chicago Chronicle.

CHILD AS AN INDIVIDUAL.

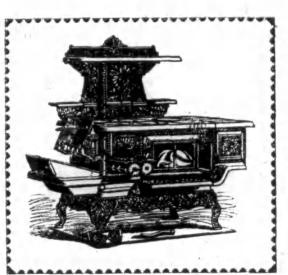

The Schools Cannot Give the Poise of Selfhood to Developing Characters.

The personal side of life is as important as the social side. When suppressed it breaks out in a riot which lays waste the moral and intellectual forces. Too many instances will occur to everyone to make it necessary to emphasize this fact. The world echoes to the complaints of men and women of genius whose individuality has been in some way throttled by false claims. upon them. Few have attained a sane and sweet possession of selfhood while fulfilling their duty to humanity. And these few were either strengthened early by beneficent influences within the home, or they gained in maturity through severe struggles the poise that ought to have been established for them in childhood. Only through the home, only through the assistance of parents adding to natural gifts of insight and sympathy a disciplined understanding, can the child properly develop his individual nature. A complete education must combine the community teaching of the school with the individual teaching of the home. Let parents cease to think that their duty is done when they commit the care of their child to trained instructors. Putting aside, as far as they can be put aside, physical and moral education, even intellectual education itself depends for its best interests largely upon parents. For mental activity starts from feeling, and all the higher thoughts which may come to us as the result of knowledge and experience have their springs deep down in our emotional life. What we learn to admire in childhood becomes unconsciously the object of our ambition in maturity; and as will is merely a wish turned into an act, and our ultimate character is the result of willing, it is evident that the most powerful agents of our destiny are those which arouse within the infant mind those desires which are to pass into the motive powers of our later life.-Florence Hull Winterburn, in Woman's Home Com-

A Gonvincing Answer.

"I hobbled into Mr. Blackmon's drug store one evening," says Wesley Nelson, of Hamilton, Ga., "and he asked me to try Chamberlain's Pain Balm for rheumatism with which I had suffered for a long time. I told him I had no faith in any medicine as they all failed. He said: 'Well, if Chamberlain's Pain Balm does not help you, you need not pay for it.' I took a bottle of it home and used it according to the directions and in one week I was cured, and have not since been troubled with rheumatism. Sold by J. S. Banker.
