NEIGHBORHOOD VILLAGES

The Happenings of the Week in Our Sister Villages.—News Correspondence.

King Ferry.
JAN. 3—E. Murray has purchased the Reuben Smith house and lot in the west part of the village.

The Joseph Fenner house south of village is being repaired.

M. Mulkins will occupy rooms over Slocum's store.

Chas Shaw is visiting in Connecticut and New York city.

The Misses Nellie and Gusta Fallon were home from Auburn last week.

Mrs. John Coiley, sister of Peter McCormick, died at her home in Ledyard Thursday, Dec. 29, 1898. The funeral service and burial were at Aurora on Monday.

At the celebration of the Lord's Supper, which was observed at the First Presbyterian church of Genoa on Sunday, January 4, 1899, at the close of the morning services, Elder S. C. Fessenden presented to the church a beautiful silver communion service inscribed to the memory of his wife, Ellen Parry Fessenden. Appropriate presentation remarks were made by the pastor, Rev. W. C. Brass. The acceptance in behalf of the church and session, was to have been given by B. Lyon, clerk of the session, but as illness prevented his being present, it was read by the pastor.

Selvio.
JAN. 3—This is snug winter weather and a little more snow would make nice sleighing.

Mrs. Kenyon is some better. Mrs. Hartnett is not much better.

New Years was very quiet; the churches were slimly attended. Mr. Holmes was down with the grip.

Rev Mr Wright had a present of a nice turkey from Wm. Wattles.

There is talk of a play at Snyder's hall soon, the proceeds to go toward a new walk.

J. K. Smith and Jacob Post bought the lumber for their barns today of John O'Hara at Moravia.

George Clark made us a call this afternoon.

HISTORY OF THE SANDWICH

Derives Its Name From An English Lord of the Eighteenth Century.

The sandwich, which of late years has become so popular, being an almost indispensable adjunct to our luncheons, teas, picnics, etc., originated with Lord Sandwich, an official of high rank in England, who lived in the latter part of the eighteenth century.

His motto: "The smallest portion of time must be put to some use," characterized his whole life, for whether discharging his professional duties or pursuing pleasure, he displayed the same indefatigable zeal and determined perseverance.

He was very fond of cards, and it was told of him that he would become so engrossed with the game that, if his duties permitted, he would sit for twenty-four hours or more, oblivious to everything about him, neglecting often to take his needed food and rest.

If, however, he got very hungry, he would order the waiter to bring him some bread and meat, and to expedite matters, he would place the meat between two slices of buttered bread, and discarding knife and fork, he would take it in his hand and eat it, still intent all the while upon the game.

This odd habit or custom got rumored about, and a new relish was suggested and christened "the Sandwich." The word was formerly written with a capital to designate its derivation.

The Sandwich Islands were named in honor of Lord Sandwich, too.

Silliness of Signs.

The number of people who believe in signs is astonishing, and even well educated men and women have some pet superstitions. Although they don't believe in signs, they think it is unlucky to walk under a ladder just as the painter drops his paint pot. It is unlucky to be struck by lightning on Monday or to be "cut" by a buzz saw on Tuesday. To fall down stairs on Wednesday with the coal hod means disaster, and to be run over by a trolley car on Thursday is painful, but rather lucky for the doctor. To fall into salt water is as unlucky as it is to fall into fresh water on a Friday, for both are equally moist. To marry a girl on Saturday, when she swings a ten-pound dumb bell for exercise, shows that she will be an expert flat iron slinger, and this means trouble for you. To be one of thirteen at a dinner on Sunday when there is enough only for ten means a poor meal. To spill the salt is unfortunate if there is no more of it, and the same applies to sugar, especially at a picnic. The latter will gain you the ill will of all the sweet things who will look sour at your awkwardness. To break a looking glass is a terrible thing if it happens to be a $150 one and belongs to a friend. So the list might be increased, but these examples are sufficient to prove that people believe in signs.

A Traveling Letter.

A curious idea is that of the traveling letter. One such has been en route for more than 50 years and is still on its journey. The class which graduated at Yale in 1844 started such a letter among themselves. Each member of this class, as he received it, was to add to it such personal memoranda of his experience and fortune as seemed likely to interest his classmates. When it came back to him in turn he was to replace his previous contribution to it by a fresh one. So the letter went the rounds year after year, relating to each other of the circle the doings of his comrades. Few are still left alive, but dearer than any other arrival by post is the travelling letter, that still stirs the hearts of the survivors with its memorials of the living and the dead of the class of 1844.

Pocket Filter for Cyclists.

A simple pocket filter, which may save cyclists and travellers from disease germs, is a short rubber tube with a mouthpiece at one end and a wire netting at the other. Inside the netting is a small portion of powdered charcoal in a little net cell. When the charcoal end of the tube is inserted in the water, the germs are not allowed to pass, and the charcoal frees the water from all impurities which may be contained in it. The tube acts as a straw, through which the water is drawn, pure and clear. It is a handy way to drink from a brook.

In taking a ride through the country one cannot be sure of the purity of the water in strange places, and the filter is a safeguard against all possible trouble.

Indian Espionage.

Every camp of white men in the Coopah Country is watched by an Indian. Captain Newton H. Chittenden, the famous traveler and Indian archaeologist, said that all the time he was on the desert an Indian or two remained with him at night. He did not notice the coincidence at first, but after five or six nights he took note, and invariably, near sundown, an Indian would appear. Generally it was a new Indian, one he had never seen before. He would ask for supper and tobacco, and, after partaking of the white man's hospitality, would curl up in his blanket and sleep. The unfailing regularity with which the Indians appeared, and always with the same excuse, that they had been hunting deer and were belated, excited Captain Chittenden's suspicion; but, as the Indians did not harm him, he did not molest them, but good-naturedly accepted their espionage during his stay in their country.—New York Sun.

His Attempt at Socialism.

A recently appointed vicar in East Angelica is trying to carry socialism into practice. Asserting that others have with himself an equal right to what he possesses, he lives in the upstairs rooms of his parsonage house and allows the parishioners the run of the downstairs apartments. Very few parishioners avail themselves of the privilege. The vicar in question has just been elected to the board of guardians, and his votes on questions of relief are awaited with interest.—London Tit-Bits.

TWO GRATEFUL WOMEN

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"Can Do My Own Work."

Mrs. PATRICK DANEHY, West Winsted, Conn., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—It is with pleasure that I write to you of the benefit I have derived from using your wonderful Vegetable Compound. I was very ill, suffered with female weakness and displacement of the womb. I could not sleep at night, had to walk the floor, I suffered so with pain in my side and small of my back. Was troubled with bloating, and at times would faint away; had a terrible pain in my heart, a bad taste in my mouth all the time and would vomit; but now, thanks to Mrs. Pinkham and her Vegetable Compound, I feel well, and sleep well, can do my work without feeling tired; do not bloat or have any trouble whatever.

"I sincerely thank you for the good advice you gave me and for what your medicine has done for me."

"Cannot Praise It Enough."

Miss GERIE DUNKIN, Franklin, Neb., writes:

"I suffered for some time with painful and irregular menstruation, falling of the womb and pain in the back. I tried physicians, but found no relief.

"I was at last persuaded to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and cannot praise it enough for what it has done for me. I feel like a new person, and would not part with your medicine. I have recommended it to several of my friends."

PLAYING THE PENALTY

"Well, my son?"
"I was in that gambling house, father. A man ascended the stairs just ahead of me. It was to observe and study the features of this man that I followed him. I soon after forgot what led me to do so. I can remember no more—no more!"

"Why did you desire to follow this man to observe and study his features?" asked the banker.

"I was requested to do so by one I cannot now name. I failed, utterly failed, in my mission. But I will not believe that I am guilty of that terrible crime. I never before beheld that dirk. No, no, I am not guilty!"

"That you are not, my boy!" exclaimed a husky voice, and the tall form of Sellars, who, unobserved, had descended the stairs and entered the cell.

"Thank God!" cried Robert.

"It was at my request that this young man was following and studying the features of a would-be assassin," said the detective; "though I little dreamed that his doing so would lead to what I was striving to avert. The object of the fiend who drove that dirk blade home was not only to murder Terry, but also to place the halter about the neck of Robert Kellogg. His intent was to remove one and let the law remove the other."

"Pray," said the inspector, "who may you be?"

"At home," was the quiet reply. "I am known as Lang Sellars. By profession I am a detective."

"What?" exclaimed Hunt. "Lang Sellars, the Southern detective? Allow me to grasp your hand, sir!"

"With pleasure, inspector."

"You visit our city in pursuit of your calling, Mr. Sellars? Surely not to remove the mystery surrounding this case. You could not have heard of it."

"I noticed a record of the crime in a morning journal," the detective said. "I will call and talk matters over with you before I leave the city. I am here on a matter in which I may need aid. But I must make haste now."

"Glad to aid you at any time, Mr. Sellars. I will place half my men at your disposal."

"Oh, thanks, many thanks. I may not need them. Certainly not more than one or two. Will you please allow me to see the dirk with which the assault of Terry was committed?"

"Certainly. I have it here." And the inspector produced it.

"Ah, ha!" observed Sellars. "A silver cross embedded in the hilt. Let me see?" And he withdrew a dark sheath from an inner pocket. "Yes, see! And he thrust the blade of the weapon where it had reposed prior to a certain event that was on his mind. A complete fit. A silver cross on the hilt of the dirk. A silver cross on the scabbard! May I retain this a few hours, inspector?"

"Certainly."

The surprised banker had been standing near his son, a listener and observer; but here Robert introduced him to the detective.

"I can hardly understand, Mr. Sellars; yet I think my brother has written me concerning you. Do you not reside in Wilmington?"

"My home is there," answered the detective. "You will understand all when I have explained; but there is not time now. I have matters in hand that cannot be deferred. I wish you and your son to accompany me."

"But Robert cannot be released until—" "Oh, that is all right now," said the inspector. "The boy is free. I am perfectly satisfied that Mr. Sellars' assumption of the case is correct. Though had the blow proved fatal—"

"Robert would have been released before night, inspector. There is no assumption in this case—on my part."

The clock in the inspector's office struck the hour of eleven, as Sellars, accompanied by the banker and his son, stepped into the street.

"The bank has not been opened to-day," said Mr. Kellogg. "I had Earl post a notice on the door this morning. However, I have my key and we can gain admission."

"I have no wish to visit the bank," said Sellars.

"Shall we go over to the hotel?" "No, Mr. Kellogg, we must visit you home, and at once. There is no time to lose."

"My home! Why, I do not at all understand that!" exclaimed the banker, filled with astonishment.

"Nor could you be expected to, at this time. All will be made plain to you soon." "Earl left the station just before you returned, father. He called to express his sympathy."

tain quality."
"I shall hardly forget it," said Sellars calmly. "That package contains the contents of the one which Collector Elsworth of the express company was robbed on the twenty-seventh of June."

"Impossible!" exclaimed the banker. "Oh, no; I assure you it is a fact. But please request your driver to touch up his horses. Minutes are very valuable just now."

The amazed banker did as requested and leaned back in the vehicle with eyes fixed on the countenance of the great active as the bay team sped on.

CHAPTER XXI.
Once on the north side of the river, Thomas guided his team eastward to Dearborn avenue, and out that residence thoroughfare the vehicle rolled on.

When within half a block of the banker's residence Robert observed: "There is Earl just entering the house now."

Not a moment later the carriage was brought to a halt before the gate, and the three men descended therefrom.

"Mr. Kellogg," said the detective, laying a hand on the banker's arm as they passed up the walk, "no ordinary ordeal confronts you. It will require all your resolution and firmness of character to confront it. It was to fathom two mysteries that I accompanied Dr. Strong to Chicago. I have fathomed both."

"Two mysteries! You accompanied Dr. Strong to Chicago? Really, I—"

"Let explanations come later, Mr. Kellogg; there is no time for them now. I ask of you only that you maintain your composure, and believe that I make no move unadvisedly. Unlock the door cautiously, Robert. We must enter silently and without a word."

The outer door was noiselessly swung open and the three men entered the spacious hall.

"I think, Mr. Kellogg," the detective said in almost a whisper, "that you—"

A woman's scream followed by the loud report of a revolver, cut short the sentence and sent Sellars flying up the stairs, Robert close behind him, and the aged banker with the exclamation, "My God! What does that mean?" closely following.

The door leading to the widow's apartments was standing open, and smoke from a revolver was escaping into the hall.

Through the door rushed Sellars, Robert following.

The room had no tenants, but the door leading to the inner apartment also stood open, and in it, with a smoking revolver clutched in his hand, stood Earl.

To grasp the revolver from his hand and thrust him before him into the room was the work of a single instant.

On the carpeted floor before a trunk that was standing with open lid, and half its contents strewn upon the floor, lay the form of a man.

Standing with blazing eyes, disheveled hair, and half her raiment torn from her form, gazing with a look of malignant hate down upon the object at her feet, stood Elinor Kellogg.

"That ends the wretch!" were the words that had escaped her lips as the detective rushed into the room.

"Not yet, not yet!" exclaimed Sellars. "I must have a statement from this man's lips. But first!"

Before he was aware of his intent, Sellars had the wrists of Earl securely shackled.

"Watch him," he said. "Ah, your father!"

"In God's name, Sellars, what means this?"

"That wretch was murdering my mother when I ascended the stairs," said Earl. "He was choking her to death over that trunk. His motive must have been robbery. I fired to save my mother's life. You can see from her appearance."

"Dear Elinor!" exclaimed the banker, approaching her.

"My son states but the truth. That fiend entered the house and stole up the stairs while I was searching for something in my trunk. How dare you, sir! Ah, I have seen you before."

"Very probably, madam," responded the detective; "many times, perhaps. I was a friend of Andrew Kellogg."

The widow's pale lips twitched.

"Once seen, you are not one to be forgotten," she said. "You are Lang Sellars, the Southern detective."

In blue, the one who visited the bank and inquired of the cashier if he had kept a record of the numbers of certain bills. He is a detective, or at least he claimed to be one."

"Do you recognize him, Robert?" "I do, Mr. Sellars; he is the man of the park, the man of the gambling house, who assisted me down the stairs."

"And the man who thrust this dirk blade into the breast of Lawrence Terry," observed Sellars, holding the blade and sheath before the eyes of the rapidly sinking man.

"Now," continued the detective, as he affixed a heavy black mustache that he produced from an inner pocket, to his upper lip, "he is the man who assaulted and robbed Collector Elsworth. And here in this package that I hold in my hand is the money he robbed him of."

"You—you have been to my room—you have been trailing me, Sellars."

"Yes, Juan Zayola, and I have trailed you down."

"Then you know—"

"That package contains the bills enclosed by Terry on the twenty-seventh of June, and for which Elsworth received, Mr. Sellars," asked the banker.

"Oh, no," was the reply. "It contains the money of which the collector was robbed—Mr. Terry never handled the bills enclosed here."

"I am completely at sea, Mr. Sellars."

"The collector did not bear from the bank the package for which he had received. Watching his opportunity, Earl—here he is—made a convenient exchange of packages. The collector unconsciously bore from the bank a package of worthless wildcat bills. In most of the cases the banks of issue were defunct. Earl brought the money for which the collector had received home; it is lying at the bottom of the madam's trunk."

"Will wonders never cease!" exclaimed the banker, gazing steadfastly at his teller, who sank into a chair with a moan.

"Earl," he continued, "guilt is written on your features. Your trembling limbs denote it."

"I was aware years ago," said Sellars, "that Elinor Kellogg had a penchant for buying up wildcat bills. There are thousands of dollars of this same currency in that telltale trunk."

"You are a very remarkable man," observed the widow, with what calmness she could assume. "Pray what more can you relate of my past?"

"Much more, madam, much more. Your maiden name was Pearl Almeiro. You are of Spanish descent, and early in life were an equestrienne in a traveling circus. Some of your light finery of those days of yore is in that trunk and scattered upon the floor."

"Indeed!" exclaimed the madam with wide-open eyes.

"On the sixteenth of June, 1839," continued the detective, "you were married to Juan Zayola, a traveling magician, he was then. This is the man."

"Marvelous!" exclaimed the widow absently.

"Up to that time naught could be said against your character. From that date your nature became changed. You did not become the legal wife of Juan Zayola. He had a living wife and child."

"The wretch!"

"You ascertained this within a week and left him. His wife had already committed suicide, leaving the infant child behind."

A deep groan emanated from the lips of Juan Zayola.

"Give him the stimulant again, Robert. I think I hear the doctor ascending the stairs."

"The child was a male. You secured the infant and raised him as your own. He grew to manhood believing himself your son. He is now known as Earl Kellogg."

"My God!" groaned the wretched man on the sofa. "I supposed that child had died in infancy. I left Richmond to fulfill an engagement; when I returned my wife had committed suicide and of the infant I could obtain no trace."

"Ha, ha!" wildly laughed the widow. "I took care that you should not."

"I have letters, newspaper clippings and photographs in my possession," said the detective, "that greatly aided me in my investigations. They were obtained from that open trunk."

"Oh, the physician, doubtless. Here is your patient, doctor."

"What new horror is this?" exclaimed Dr. Hewit, advancing.

"Why were you, Lang Sellars, spying through my trunks? Why dogging me like a bloodhound on the trail?"

Just a Cough

Not worth paying attention to, you say. Perhaps you have had it for weeks. It's annoying because you have a constant desire to cough. It annoys you also because you remember that weak lungs is a family failing. At first it is a slight cough. At last it is a hemorrhage. At first it is easy to cure. At last, extremely difficult.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

quickly conquers your little hacking cough. There is no doubt about the cure now. Doubt comes from neglect.

For over half a century Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has been curing colds and coughs and preventing consumption. It cures Consumption also if taken in time.

Keep one of Dr. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral Plasters over your lungs if you cough.

A Spanish Woman's Gift.

After the three days' fighting we moved from San Juan Hill to another, that we came later to call Misery Hill. It was while we were on Misery Hill that Private Earl got the Spanish mantilla. The Spanish refugees were at El Caney and Earl and I ran the guard lines and went there to look at them. That was after the surrender. Some of the refugees were well dressed, but all were hungry. Seated on the porch of a cottage we encountered a handsomely attired Spanish woman. We opened communication by signs.

The woman signed that she was hungry. Earl emptied his haversack of bacon and hardtack and gave it to her. After a little further attempt at thumb and finger conversation we started on. We had not gone many steps when the woman caught up with us and thrust her mantilla into Earl's hands. He tried to refuse it, but she would not take it back. So he thanked her and we continued our stroll. The mantilla was a beautiful piece of fabric. It was silk, so soft that you could crush it into a single handful, and embroidered with life-like figures in gold.

"What in thunder," I asked "will you do with the mantilla?"

Earl held it up and let the sun shine through its folds, bringing out all its silken beauty, and said with a smile "I'll take it home for my mother to wear on Sundays."

Private Earl died of fever at Montauk Point. The newspapers say his mother vainly searched for him through that big camp for four weary days. And then found not her son, but a grave. I sometimes wonder if she ever got that mantilla.—New York Sun.

Chalk For a Foundation. There is a village in England built upon an enormous boulder of chalk. This boulder is half a mile long, and must have been carried coastward a distance of twenty-five miles by some great iceberg. It was dropped to the bottom of the glacial sea, where it came partly covered and surrounded by blue-gray boulder clay.—London News.

Grooming Horses by Electricity. The electric current is now applied to operating horse-grooming machinery, less than three minutes being sufficient for going over an animal. Horse-clippers can also be operated by electric power at high speed.

LOOKING OVER

The entire field of science, nowhere has there been such progress as in the science of optics and the fitting of glasses. Our success in this line is due, in a measure, to the fact that we embrace every new, MERITORIOUS idea, employ all the latest instruments, as well as constantly seek to originate new methods of excellence that will in any way aid us in the practice of our profession.

THE CAUSE OF TEMPERANCE.

BY WM. A. FISHER.
 The demon rum we all should shun,
 And help to overthrow;
 He blights and curses all who run
 Into his undertow.

Come, all ye men, so brave and true,
 And help the battle press—
 The cause of temperance must go through
 And be crowned with success.

Yes, for our own and other boys
 We'll work and vote as well,
 'Till every town and hamlet's free
 From the beverage of hell.

The battle is not ours—but God's—
 To him we'll give the praise,
 And after the great victory's won,
 Our shout of triumph raise.

Bishop Foster on Moderation.

Moderation is counselled. Moderation! Who counsels moderation? Have we not tried temporizing policies with this wild beast of nameless possessions long enough? Have we not sought to tame him with moral suasion? To melt him with the tears of broken-hearted womanhood and childhood; by appeals to any latent manhood or humanity that might yet be in him; by the homes he has desolated, and the victims by millions that he has immolated? Have we not resorted to mild repression measures, only to see how futile they are? Have we not "bound him" with the withes of low license, and high license, and hampered him with local option and obstructive legislation? Have we not, despairing of any success, with the beast himself, exhausted all possible methods of rescuing his victims, only to find him at the end of a hundred years of successive effort strongly entrenched and defiant?

It is seventy years since Beecher stirred Boston and the nation with his startling appeal. For half a century the impassioned Gough has gone up and down the land, creating by his appeals (that should move the hearts of stone) moral sentiment. Thousands of others have plead, and wept, and prayed. For twenty years women have knelt on curb stones and entreated. The state still pampers the beast and turns him loose to raven and destroy.

Where he had hovels he has built palaces. The low grogery has flowed out into the gilded saloon. The scurvy miscreant, once despised but patronized, has become the acknowledged gentleman of fashion. He has moved from his obscure quarters into the street where decent citizens live, and is toasted and feted by well-bred men and women. He has formed an ostentatious league and banks millions to defend his disreputable profession. He calls conventions and sits, with parade, in deliberation of his rights and immunities, and the public press busies itself with reports of his proceedings and speaks of him with respect.

The Plague of the Century.

A plague! A plague! I shall show you that it is a plague of suffering to the inebriate. In the first place it is a plague of suffering to the inebriate, because it is to him a loss of good name. God has so arranged it that no man loses his reputation except by his own act. The world may assault a man, and all the powers of darkness may assault him—they can not capture him so long as his heart is pure and his life is pure. All the powers of earth and hell can not take that Gibraltar. If a man is right, all the bombardment of the world for five, ten, twenty, forty years, will only strengthen him in his position. So that all you have to do is to keep yourself right. Never mind the world. Let it say what it will. It can do you no damage. But as soon as it is whispered, "He drinks," and it can be proved, he begins to go down. What clerk can get a position with such a reputation? What store wants him? What church of God wants him for a member? What dying man wants him for an executor? "He drinks!" I stand before hundreds of young men—and I say it not in flattery—splendid young men who have their reputation as their only capital. Your father gave you a good education, or as good an education as he could afford to give you. He started you in city life. He could furnish you no means, but he has surrounded you with Christian influences and a good memory of the past. Now, young man, under God you are with your own right arm to achieve your fortune, and, as your reputation is your only capital, do not bring upon it suspicion by going in and out of liquor establishments, or by an odor of your breath, or by any glare of your eye, or by any unnatural flush on your cheek. You lose your reputation, and you lose your capital. The subject comes over me this morning like the waves of the Atlantic for power. Oh! when I see the influences abroad in Brooklyn and New York to destroy young men, I hardly know what to say. For the young men themselves all sympathy have I, and all compassion. For those who deal out the deadly stuff, all pity that they should bring upon themselves the condemnation of good society and the retributions of God.

The inebriate suffers also the plague in the fact that he loses his self-respect.

When you destroy a man's self-respect there is not much left of him. Just as soon as a man finds he is a slave, he loses his self-respect. Then a man will do things he would not do otherwise, he will say things he would not say otherwise.

The fact is a man cannot stop, or he would stop now. He is bound hand and foot of the Philistines; and they have shorn his locks and put his eyes out, and made him grind in the mill of a great horror.—Selected.

The Mark of the Beast.

By Rev. Jesse S. Gilbert, A. M., Ph. D.
 In his wonderful apocalyptic vision John beheld the beast having such power that no man could buy or sell or transact any business unless having his mark in their right hands or upon their foreheads.

There have been almost as many different interpretations of this prophecy as there have been different commentators. One thing is certain, there is no beast that hides in the forest or roams the fields too fierce, mean and destructive to be a symbol of the rum traffic.

This nefarious business is a beast; all its instincts and characteristics being beastly. Like the beast of the apocalypse, it puts its brand upon everything. It puts its mark upon business, Merchants and other business men are afraid of it, for they dread its boycott. In many places, in order to do business, men must bear the mark of the beast.

True, we find some who sell groceries or dry goods, but not their principles, but many are held by the firm grasp of the power of the saloon. Not long ago we wanted a lawyer in our county to undertake a case that would antagonize the rum traffic, but failed in our search. Yet the vilest murderer, the meanest and lowest horse thief could easily have found a lawyer to plead his cause.

Its blighting mark is upon the home. It places its terrible image and super-scription upon every faculty of man's nature. Moreover, it is a licensed beast; unchained and licensed by the vote of men bearing the name of Christian.

It has placed its mark upon our noble army, and the deadly canteen has really slain more victims than Spanish bullets or Cuban fivers.

How long shall this beast roam and savage? The Christians of our country must answer, and they must answer at the ballot-box. Prayers without votes are only Quaker guns, that can deceive neither God nor man.

Wedding Bells.

On Monday, December 26, 1898, at 10 o'clock a. m., a large number of relatives and invited guests assembled at the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Young at Atwater, to witness the marriage of their daughter, Ella P., to Joseph R. Grant. At the appointed hour the strains of music from the organ, Miss Cora Goodyear presiding, were heard, and the groom, accompanied by his brother as best man, took his place under an arch of evergreen and holly. Over a path strewn with flowers the bride, accompanied by Miss Grace Pike of Groton as the bridesmaid, entered the room. The bride's dress was white organdie over white. In impressive words and reverent manner the Rev. Mr. Terwilliger of Ledyard pronounced the words that made them man and wife. The Rev. W. C. Brass of King Ferry offered an earnest prayer, asking God's blessing upon the ceremony and for their future happiness and success in their new relation. Congratulations followed. The dinner was carefully and well prepared and served in a pleasing manner. The tokens of friendship were numerous, and bespeak the high esteem and respect in which the young people are held by their many friends. Amid scores of good wishes and showers of rice the happy couple departed for a among relatives at Cincinnati and other places.

One of the most enjoyable events of the season occurred at the home of Daniel Colling in Scipio on Tuesday, December 27, 1898, when their daughter Nellie was united in marriage to Frank L. Hoagland of Venice. At the appointed time the bridal party entered the parlor where the ceremony was performed by Rev. E. A. Holmes of Scipio. William Colling officiated as best man and Miss Jennie Colling, twin sister of the bride, was maid of honor. The bride was attired in steel gray henrietta trimmed with white satin, while the groom wore the conventional black. An elaborate wedding feast followed the congratulations, and numerous valuable and useful presents, including a beautiful decorated dinner set the giver of which failed to sign his name, were left by the many friends of the young people. On Thursday evening the parents of the groom gave them a reception at which another sumptuous repast was partaken. The happy couple have settled in their future home at Venice, recently purchased by the groom. May happiness and prosperity attend them through life.

A pleasant home wedding occurred Wednesday, Jan. 4, 1899, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Fox, when their youngest daughter, Addie, was united in marriage to Mr. Harold E. Kniedeck. At 4 p. m. the immediate friends and relatives of the contracting parties assembled in the parlor where the solemn rites of the Episcopal Church, conducted by the Rev. Mr. Cynter, made the couple one for life. The bride was tastefully attired in cream lansdown and the groom in the conventional black. After the customary well-wishing and bride-kissing the guests retired to the dining room where a tempting supper was served. The bride received many handsome and useful presents. The guests returned to their homes on the 7:15 p. m. train to DeRuyter, Cortland, Groton and Union Valley. Mr. and Mrs. Kniedeck will make their home in the near future at No. 27 Cascadilla Ave., Ithaca.

ANTIQUITY OF DICE.

Have Been Used in Religious Ceremonies From Time Immemorial.

The origin of the dice is buried in romance and mystery. They have been used in religious ceremonies from time immemorial. Dice have been used in all earlier forms of worship to find out the future by divine aid and guidance.

The variety of the world's dice is surprising, but practically may be divided into two kinds. One kind is cubical, represented by our ordinary dice. With two exceptions, Korean and Etruscan, the spots are arranged so that the six and one, five and two, and three and four are opposite, making the sum of opposite sides invariably seven.

This is the dice not only of modern Europe and America, but of classical Greece and Rome, of Syria, Persia, India, China, Japan, Burmah and Siam. The other principal kind of dice is the long square prism, also marked with "dice eyes," found scattered among the prehistoric remains in Europe and existing to-day in India and adjacent countries.

With these dice must also be classed the top of spinning dice, with four or six sides, which are twirled with the fingers. The oldest is from Naucratis, a Greek colony 600 B. C. Only two specimens of dice have been discovered at Babylon. No name for dice has yet been found in the cuneiform writings.

Weight of Bismarck's Brain.

Prince Bismarck's brain, according to the flattering estimate of the anthropologist, Otto Ammon, was probably the heaviest known to anatomical science. Herr Ammon, in consultation with Prof. Schafer, the sculptor, concluded from the measurements taken for Schafer's bust that the brain of the old statesman weighed 1,867 grammes, and consequently exceeded in weight that of any known genius. Cuvier's brain weighed 1,830 grammes. Byron's 1,807, Kant's 1,650, Schiller's 1,630 and Dante's 1,420. The average weight of the brain of an intelligent European is only 1,380 grammes. Herr Ammon's belief cannot be verified, owing to Bismarck's orders.

Costly Cats.

In London and Paris cats are more highly prized than in the United States, and there are frequent sales there of tabbies at $250 each. Some choice cats, with rare "markings" and "points," are disposed of at $500 each.

The famous cat Nicodemus, which won the first prize for beauty at a New York cat show, cost its owner, who purchased it of a street urchin, the sum of 10 cents. After the close of the exhibition the gentleman received a dozen offers of $1,500 for it, and one woman bid $2,100.

A lady who controls a cat farm in California paid $1,000 for a cat in Paris and considered it a bargain.

A Considerate Man.

A Welshman who was in London when extensive sewerage operations were in progress lost his watch. He reported the matter to Scotland Yard, and the officials said they would leave no stone unturned to find the missing timekeeper. Shortly afterward Taffy again visited the metropolis, and saw street after street being turned up. He was told in all thirty-six miles of road were in the same condition. He rushed down to Scotland Yard and exclaimed to the wondering inspector: "I didn't think I was giving you all that trouble. If you don't find the watch by Sunday, I wouldn't break up any more streets."

The Largest Locomotive.

The largest locomotive in the world is the Giant, of French type, on the Mallet compound articulated system, that was constructed by the Belgian State railway administration for the sharp gradients near Liege, having been shown at the Brussels exhibition of last year. This engine, carried by six pairs of wheels, weighs in running order 108,000 kilos, equal to 106 tons, which weight is entirely utilized for adhesion; but the arrangement is such that each pair of wheels only loads the rails with 18,000 kilos, equal to 17 1/2 tons.

Largest Statue in the World.

The largest statue in the world is Bartholdi's "Liberty Enlightening the World" at the entrance to the New York harbor, presented by France to America in 1885. The cost of the statue was about $40,000; its height, from the base to the top of the torch held high above the head of the goddess, is 151 feet. The statue, standing on a pedestal eighty-eight feet high, is made of repousse copper and is so large that forty persons can be accommodated in the head, while the torch, reached by a spiral staircase, will hold twelve.

Lengthened His Tomb.

Woolrych Perowne, in his book on "Central Asia" gives an interesting description of the tomb of Daniel at Samarcand. The Mohammedans believe that Daniel continued to grow after death, and so year by year they lengthened his tomb till it was sixty feet long, which was apparently regarded as a proportion great enough for even the most holy of saints.

THE GREAT NEED.

The Necessity That All Understand Their Attitude to Temperance.

In a recent address, delivered at the International Convention of United Presbyterian Young People, John G. Woolley said:

What is right? Is that what you want to know? Come on then, and at that level, and not a hair below it, drift with me once more into the black mountain of the liquor problem.

Some of you may find it hard to give attention, because the subject does not appeal to you, but it is important to you one and all. It is appropriate to any audience from the nursery to the congress, and I think that if the domestic brutes could hear and understand me they would be gathering at these doors and windows to listen, for they know full well some of the meanings of my ministry; and when the church should cast me off, dogs and horses would take me up.

It concerns society at large, for, like the fox beneath the Spartan soldier's doublet, it tears her very heart out, bravely as she carries it.

It concerns government; for it feeds the wells from which it draws its very breath of life, denies its title to itself, violates the dead, plunders the living, and breeds prenatal paupers and criminals to perplex and defeat it.

It concerns capital; for it is the main-spring of arson, embezzlement, mobs, riot, and murder.

It concerns labor; for it saps its strength, its honor, and its hope until industry becomes a galley slave, willing to take its pay in blows and sweaty rags and squalor.

It concerns the church; for by so much as it enjoys she suffers loss.

It concerns the school; for by so much as it outruns it in the race for power it converts culture into crime, and makes the educated "the dangerous classes" to the common weal.

It concerns every home; for it is a denial of its every sanctity and an insult to its best ideals.

It concerns love—and how many a love-story is going through its first chapter in this convention; it leeches its very blood, and leaves behind the ashes of inexpressible desolations.

THE MERRY SIDE OF LIFE.

STORIES TOLD BY THE FUNNY MEN OF THE PRESS.

The Maiden's Soft Answer.—A Great Tactician.—Cleared For Action.—Frithee, I Command Thee.—A Severe Test.—Intended to Stay.—What Marred It, Etc.

There was an old person named Hannah, Who fell on a piece of banana. With a slip and a slide More stars she spilled Than are seen in the Star-Spangled Banner.

A gentleman flew to assist her; He picked up her muff and her wristler. "Did you fall, ma'am?" he cried, "Do you think," she replied, "I eat down for the fun of it, mister?"

Why Rubbers Are Considered "Good Forms."

There was a time, not so many years back, when it was not quite fashionable to appear too robust. A little languor was considered rather becoming in a young woman.

And everything that conduces to health is now good form. For instance, in the matter of wearing rubbers. A few years ago a good many women objected to wearing rubbers, on the ground that they detracted from the trim appearance of the foot.

The added fact that rubbers are now so much more shapely and graceful in their lines than they were a dozen years ago, and that they are now made in such infinite variety, has served, of course, still further to increase their popularity.

An Argument.

It is the part of every householder, or any one in authority, public or private, to carefully consider orders before they are given. But after they are issued it would be suicidal to all government to argue out the matter with employe, servant, or child.

Many funny stories are told of freshly trained soldiers and sailors, to whom the thought was new that their first virtue was implicit obedience. One such tale dates back to our Civil War, and is told for truth by one who overheard it.

The captain, a passionate man and a believer in stern discipline, lost patience with Tom, and when the fellow was brought before him for the third time in one week for some neglect of work, he said, angrily,

"What—again, Tom?" "I'm not here of my own will, sir," began simple Tom.

And poor Tom, finding his efforts to speak were cut off, at last said, resignedly:

"Well, captain, have it your own way. I didn't come here to argue with you, sir!"

And after that Tom's unsympathetic comrades called on him every day in his imprisonment, which he may have deserved, but scarcely understood, and told him that they "did not come to argue with him!"

And while Tom's story sounds absurd, it is true that many of us are just as foolish, and take just as long to learn the beauty and strength of obedience.

FISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION

Healthy, Happy Girls often, from no apparent cause, become languid and despondent in the early days of their womanhood. They drag along always tired, never hungry, breathless and with a palpitating heart after slight exercise so that merely to walk up stairs is exhausting. Sometimes a short, dry cough leads to the fear that they are going into consumption. They are anemic, doctors tell them, which means that they have too little blood. Are you like that? Have you too little blood? More anemic people have been made strong, hungry, energetic men and women by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People than by any other means they are the best tonic in the world. Miss Lulu Stevens, of Gasport, Niagara Co., N. Y., had been a very healthy girl until about a year ago, when she grew weak and pale. She lost her appetite, was as tired in the morning as on retiring, and lost flesh until she became so emaciated that her friends hardly knew her. The doctors declared the disease an anemia, and gave her up to die. A physician who was visiting in Gasport prevailed upon her to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. She did so, and was benefited at once. She is now well and strong—the very picture of health.—Buffalo (N. Y.) Courier. The genuine are sold only in packages, the wrapper always bearing the full name. For sale by all druggists or sent, postpaid, by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., on receipt of price, fifty cents per box. Book of cures free on request.
