ply. Benjamin Francis, a Cazenovia farm hand was walking to town the other evening when he heard a shot and his pipe went flying out of his mouth. He looked around for the gunner, but found no one. It is said that the Pension Department has issued orders to examinors that if any pensioner is found guilty of indulging in strong drink to excess or making a public nuisance of himself, he may be dropped from the roll.

John Patrick of Covert lost his life on Friday night by being struck by the first section of the Buffalo Bill show train about a mile south of his home. The train was running from Ithaca to Rochester about 2 o'clock in the morning.

Charles Ingersoll, the Tompkins county treasurer, now having a berth in Auburn prison, spilled a bucket of hot coffee the other day, and was considerably scalded in the operation. His sister went to Auburn from Ithaca to see him.

The sum of $2,500 has been appropriated from the Nixon fund for the nature-study summer courses of Cornell University. Of this $1700 is for the teachers at Ithaca, $300 for the work at Chautauqua and the Thousand Islands, and $500 for incidentals and the salaries of non-resident lecturers.

The Childs-Drexel national typographical union home at Colorado Springs is to receive a third addition since its dedication in 1893. The improvement calls for an outlay of $10,-000. On Monday the dogs of John Carroll and Ansel Guest of Locke killed 9 sheep for L. Greene, 4 for J. Keefe. 12 for Joseph Harris, and wounded others. Mr. Harris shot the Carroll dog, but the other got away. The tax payers of course settle for the 25 sheep killed and those that die later. The Moravia dog poisoner should get in some work at Locke.

Col. John Wesley Yale, for 40 years a resident of Syracuse, and at one time the commanding officer of the 51st regiment of that city, died last week Tuesday at his home. He was born in Scipio, December 17, 1832. His father, Aaron Yale, was a carriage maker who in '49 joined the seekers for wealth in the western gold fields, For several years Col. Yale with L. Windholz had a contract for feeding kins. the militia at the State camp of instruction at Peekskill.

Tax Inequality.

The supervisors and assessors of Tompkins county met at the Ithaca court, house on Monday with Chairman Priest and Lester F. Stearns of the State Board. Arthur P. Baer of New York acted as secretary. He called the roll and 26 assessors answered, one being sick. The chairman stated the object of the meeting and spoke of the law that directs it. City Assessor Merrill was questioned by the commissioners, and said that in his judgment Cornell University has over $9,000,000 worth of property in Ithaca that escapes taxation, $3,000,000 in realty and $6,000,000 in money or its equivalent.

The chairman said to one assessor that the enormous sum of $900,000,000 had vanished from the assessment books made against city corporations and corporations that had franchises, upon the motion of their lawyers, because the assessors did not properly assess the corporations as directed by law, and explained by the State Board. "That is taken out of the farmers and others, and the errors of the assessors of other years should be carefully avoided now. The real estate of this State is assessed seven times greater than the personal property. This is not right and we all know it." And this section. what will the farmers do about it?

Notice.

Decline of American history in the public schools has accompanied neglect of the American History and language. Neither Language. is now adequately taught in the Chicago public schools. Let us have American history in thor oughly good American diction, says the Chicago Chronicle. Let us have the truth, told in crisp, clean, classic para graphs. One paragraph, embodying without an unnecessary word a prin ciple of democracy, a supreme event, a monumental achievement for right will sink more deeply into the consciousness of youth and he more ef feetual for American honor than pages of dissertations. American history in sound American language is a fundamental need of the Chicago public schools. The history of a country, especially a country like ours, is the best possible vehicle for instruction in the national language. American history abounds in all the elements that appeal to normal youth. American history is rich in adventure, deep with philosophy, noble in martyrs, fascinat ing with romance, its stories of land and sea unrivaled in daring struggle and success. Its biographies constitute the most splendid series of medal lions in the gallery of time. Its humor is racy of the soil. Anecdotes of transcendant beauty gem its unnals. American history, fitly spoken, is "like apples of gold in pictures of silver.' Let us have American history adequately taught in our schools in good Ameri can language.

Black diphtheria has given a St Louis girl a wonderful baritone voice. Two years ago Queer Effect says the Post-Disof Disease. patch, her voice had no quality and she did not pretend to sing. There was nothing but the high querulous key of the singer of no lay. To-day she stands on the threshold of a musical career. Judges of musical technique have told the happy possessor of this strange new voice she may have the lovers of harmony at her feet if she will cultivate her oddly given genius. For six months she could not speak above a whisper, and then only with great pain. She was even given up at one time, but a strong constitution and a brave will enabled her to live. One day, seated at the piano, she dreamily touched the keys, opened her lips and awoke. A voice she had never heard stirred the still room. It was the birth of the new voice. Offers have been made to the young woman to place herself in the best musical preparatory schools in America.

A writer in the North American Review calls attention to the evils of excessive legislation. It appears that at their last annual sessions the legislatures of our 45 states enacted more than 14,000 laws-good, bad and indifferent. Such industry might be said to speak volumes for the public spirit of the American people if we could wink out of sight the facts that many of the "acts" spring from an unwholesome desire to accomplish social reforms by short processes, and that many more of them represent individual or corporate contrivances to utilize the power of the state for the turning of private grindstones.

The town election of Loch Lynn Heights, Garrett county, was held the other day, and as everyone was busy but little attention was paid to it. Some persons, either in fun or vengeance, put into the field a ticket composed entirely of colored people, and it was elected, greatly surprising and disgusting the community. But 15 votes were polled.

The monster telescope at the Paris exposition which will, it is said, bring the moon within 36 miles, is three times the length of the largest of its predecessors, the Yerkes telescope at Chicago. It is 197 feet long, five feet in diameter and weighs 21 tons. The lenses, the largest in existence, measure over 49 inches in diameter and weigh 1,320 pounds.

A gem from the records of a Missouri court, given in an address by Hon. William H. Wallace, is the following lucid verdict in a lunacy case "We, the jury, impaneled, sworn and charged to inquire into the insanguinity of Hezekiah Jones, do occur in the affirmative."

Oleomargarine, according to data sent to congress by Secretary Gage, is 32 per cent. lard, with less than one per cent. of genuine butter. Yet 83,-000,000 pounds of the compound were sold last year.

"Rummage sales," for charitable purposes, are an English idea that has arrived in this country. The goods are contributed by people who have auperfluous clothing, furniture or odds and ends of any kind.

While her sister states are the scene of bitter struggles between capital and labor, In-No Strikes diana poasts that in Indiana. there is not a strike within her boundary lines. The statement is made by Labor Commissioner L. P. McCormack, who keeps close watch on such affairs and has correspondents in every town to furnish him with instantaneous news. The labor commissioner said Monday that industrial peace existed throughout the state. As a result of the state of affairs business is so active that there is not a man in the state who is idle for want of something to do. The commissioner's reports tell him of hundreds of factories that are working overtime and yet are unable to keep up with their business. The demand for workingmen has made wages high and many employers have voluntarily granted increases. At the same time the experience of the employes, especially during recent troubles, such as those between the glassworkers and their employers and between the coal miners and operators, have not served to encourage strikes.

The most disastrous fire in the history of Canada swept over the city of Hull and a large part of the capital city of Ottawa, April 26, eausing a loss of property estimated at $15.000,000. In Hull 1,800 buildings were burned, and in Ottawa 2,000; and more than 12 .-000 persons were made homeless. The fire, according to common report, had a cause as trifling as that of the great Chicago fire of nearly 30 years ago-a chimney overheated by the fire with which a woman was cooking dinner for her family. Relief funds have been opened in English and American as well as Canadian cities.

Secretary Wilson proposes that the postman's wagon in the rural free delivery service, which is now rapidly extending, shall carry the daily weather forecast, with cold wave and frost warnings, for the benefit of farmers. With universal rural free delivery, every householder may receive a daily visit from a representative of the United States government. The suggestion is a reasonable one that the mail carrier should attend to other government matter, of which a distribution of the weather forecasts may be only the first upon an extending list.

The rise in the cost of building materials and in the wages of labor has led to the suspension of work on 30 government buildings which are in various stages of erection in different parts of the United States. The appropriations for these structures were made when materials were cheaper, and the amount of money at the command of the government officials is not sufficient to permit the completion of the work without further appropriations to meet the deficiency.

A Scranton (Pa.) court is asked to grant the claim of one Isaac Sidebottom against the estate of John Shafer, deceased, for "entertaining the old man playing checkers" during a great part of three years.

Americans who have visions of living cheaply in Paris should banish them. It is a good rule to count on its costing as much in the City of Laughter as in New York or Chicago, with this difference, that in Paris sleeping-rooms heated by steam or hot air and lighted by electricity or gas can only be found in high-priced hotels and pensions. Bathrooms are equally scarce, closets are important enough to be especially mentioned in the advertisements, a single window white, A. McIntosh, Chas. J. Hewitt, E. the advertisements, a single window is the rule, and the majority of rooms face courts on back yards because of the peculiar construction adopted for French apartment houses. Americans cannot find "all the comforts of home" without paying roundly for them.

It has been said that any nation which collects an indemnity from Turkey ought to receive additional compensation for the time lost and the strain on the nervous system. The delay in paying for losses inflicted upon our people in the Armenian massacres is entirely in keeping with Turkish traditions. The approved theory in the sultan's domains seems to be that "he pays twice who pays promptly."

AN IDEA FROM KANSAS.

How to Build a Cyclone Refuge Is the Cellar Which Affords All the Security Needed.

It is not always convenient for the farmer to build a cave of refuge from the cyclones that are liable to occuat any time in the spring and summer Much safer and more economical-safe; because the family will be at all times within a few steps, and convenient be cause at the word of warning all can quickly reach safety without exposure to the storm of wind, rain and hail that may be raging outside, and when the danger is passed the house can be reached without going two or three rods in the downpour of rain that follows the wind.

The safety is built in the cellar underneath the house. In an ordinary cellar one would be anything but safe should the house be lifted or blown over, for the chimneys, upper foundations and debris of the house usually fill the cellar. The safety is to guard against being crushed by these. It is constructed in the form of a table, in the southwest corner of the cellar. Posts large enough to withstand the greatest weight should be in pairs about four feet apart and the tops of the pairs should be cut with shoulders on corresponding sides, upon which rest the plank that the protecting floor is to be spiked to. These plank are bolted to the posts, and should be of oak. The covering plank should also be of three inch oak and fastened with large spikes.

The side should be boarded up or extra posts put in to guard against rebounding stones or timbers. It should cover as large a space as convenient. An ax, crowbar, spade, saw and hatchet should always be kept inside. Boxes also upon which to sit should be provided. This is much cheaper than the cave and as safe as any refuge can be. -Orange Judd Farmer.

TIMELY SUGGESTIONS.

When All Wagons Have Wide Tires the Good Road Question Will Become Less Serious.

This is one of the most important questions of the day. The question is: Shall the improvement be made in the roadbed, in the wagon or vehicles, or both? It is hardly necessary to say that the narrow-tired wheels of the wagon of to-day do great damage to a roadbed in rainy and thawing weather. I believe that the day is not far off when the wide-tifed, low-wheeled wagon will take the place of the present farm wagon. A great number of these low, wide-tired wheels have already been put in use. On most of these wheels the tires are from three to six inches wide. A wheel of this kind helps to make a good road, whereon the narrow-tired wheel is the greatest mantifacturer of chuck holes on earth. Should we not take heed to the great amount of good roads in France and some of their ways of keeping them in good order. You will certainly agree that if a roadbed be graded as is cus tomary in this country, and continually rolled, and the narrow-tired wheels, with their heavy loads, kept off of them it would soon become an excellent road bed, but, even then to put on these narrow wheels with their loads, they would soon make it a rough, ordinary highway such as this county is full of to-day. In France the heavy loads are drawn on a wagon with tires from four to ten inches wide. The front truck is just enough narrower than the rear so that the outer edge of the front wheel tracks meet the inner edge of the outer wheels. This keeps continually rolling the road-bed. When this country adopts such a wagon the good -road question will become less serious .-Progressive Farmer.

Trees Prevent Evaporation.

Tree planting for an unusual purpose has been recommended to residents of the western irrigation districts by W. L. Hall, assistant superintendent of tree planting of the division of forestry, who has recently been in New Mexico on an investigation. Agriculture in that region depends largely on irrigation, and the streams and reservoirs are much depleted by evaporation due to the heat and dry winds. Mr. Hall recommends that belts of trees be planted along every ditch and reservoir, not only to shade them, but to shelter them from wind. The problem of preventing evaporation is very important, not only on account of the loss of water, but because the percentage of alkali in the quantity remaining becomes

MARKED BY PROGRESS.

Office of Public Road Inquiries, Under Direction of Gen. Stone, Has Done Good Work.

The work of the office of public road inquiries, under the direction of Gen-Roy Stone, has been marked during the past year by steady progress along its well-established lines. A great deal of work is accomplished by correspondence and by the gathering and disseminating of important information relating to various phases of the road subject. Many thousand copies of "good roads" literature have been distributed among farmers and other persons interested, and important road conventions have been attended by representatives of the office, and many state legislatures have asked for and received assistance in framing new road legislation. Examples of steel road tracks have been completed in a number of different localities, and these experimental sections of steel road clearly demonstrated their usefulness for the western states and for other places which are but sparingly supplied with good stone and gravel. When steel becomes cheap once more, the manufacturers can take the matter up and make a series of special shapes. The object lessons furnished by sample roads have been extensive, and sections have been built in several parts of the country. As a result of the investigations, the office considers that for local needs as well as for our material development and prosperity a well-regulated system of public roads through the whole country is, day by day, becoming more necessary. While we have the most perfect railway system in the world, our public highways are and always have been inferior to those of any other country in the civilized old world. As our public roads are the veins and arteries of our agricultural, commercial and social life, they are not yet receiving the consideration that their great importance deserves. Much has been done in the United States toward road building during the last few years, but much more needs to be done. -Scientific American.

STRONG RAIL FENCE.

The Picture Here Given Shows One That Is Convenient and Not Expensive to Put Up.

When a farmer has a lot of old rail fences going to rack he will find the fence shown in the illustration the cheapest one he can build. Set posts six inches closer together than the rails are long; take two pieces of ordinary fencing-wire, each about six feet long, and place on sides of first two posts, having wire on second post on opposite side to wire on first post; fasten these wires to the post at or near the ground. Now place a rail between the wires and posts, drawing wire up tightly over rail and stapling just above rail with long staple, doing same at both ends; put on another rail as before, and continue till top of posts is reached, which completes the first panel. The other panels are made in the same way, taking care not to have both ends of the panel on the same side of posts, but run alternately as started. The illustration shows the way rails are stapled to posts and the manner of running panels. As the rails when put on posts in this way do not touch each other they will last longer than when put on any other way; and I like this method of making use of old rails very well, for by setting posts and using a little wire a good fence can be made from a very poor one. Build six to eight rails high. Should a post rot off any time set another near it and fasten rails as before. - J. G. Allshouse, in Farm and Fireside.

CONVENIENT RAIL FENCE.

A Million Dollars a Day.

The poultry interests in this country now aggregate over $300,000.000 a year, and a well-advised statistician predicts that when the returns of the census of 1900 are in they will show that "the hen" produces $1,000,000 a day. Big thing, isn't it? It makes some industries large enough to be a basis for stock gambling to sink into insignificance. But you can't very easily corner the hen. She is "too fly."-National Stockman and Farmer.

The 1901 meeting will be Narrows. On this trip we passed the new battleship Kentucky, which was anchored off Tompkinsville and happened to be exchanging salutes with a war vessel of the Argentine Republic. The Kentucky is one of Uncle Sam's latest addition to the navy, and is a fine looking ship. We approached the captain of our ferry boat and asked for his glass, that we might see this fighter at closer quarters, which request he generously complied with, at the same time remarking that it was unusual. We also had permission from the chief engineer to visit the fire room or stoke hole, but didn't care to stay there but a few minutes. The boys who work in those places earn all they get. Thirty tons of hard coal were shoveled into the flery mouths of six furnaces. One of the boys on this boat had served six years on the Monitor Terror, as water tender. One thing which interested us was the presence of so many foreigners, at least people of foreign parentage At least two thirds of the excursionists on this boat were persons of foreign origin, the Germans predominating.

After the business session Wednesday the association became guests of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company and went for a trolley ride around Brooklyn, its suburbs and parks, and finishing with a visit to the navy yard, all of which was highly interesting and enjoyable. No battleships were in the yard but several torpedo boats were drawn up for repairs. among them being the Winslow, upon which Lieut, Bagley was killed early in the Spanish war. Arrangements had been made to meet Admiral Philip, but he had departed before the editorial party arrived; he has since died and was buried in the national marine cemetery at Annapolis. Several 6 inch guns from Manila and Santiago are to be seen, and also smaller guns captured in the Mexican and earlier wars. The navy yard is under marine guard day should provide some which are.

and night. During the thunder storm which came up at this time we sought shelter in the office of the corporal of the guard, who proved to be a good, sociable fellow as well as a veteran of the Spanish war, having been with Col. Huntington when he landed first on Cuban soil; this lad had a toe shot off at that time. We have ever had a strong personal interest in things military, having narrowly missed the entrance examinations at West Point years ago, and it was a great pleasure to talk with these marines, who see much of the world, aboard a man-ofwar. In the evening the association was to have witnessed the celebrated Paine fireworks in the battle of Manila, etc., but a heavy shower prevented the display.

On Thurday morning, through the courtesy of the Brooklyn newspapers, the association took an ocean ride as sage from Auburn announced good far down as the Scotland light(ship) news for all, being that the State and return. During last May an infant child of neighbor was suffering from cholera infantum. The doctors had given up all hopes of recovery. I took a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic and Diarrhea Remedy to the house, telling them I felt sure it would do good if used according to directions. In two days the child recovered. Having made this comforting assurance, it then proceeds to upset it all by the statement that the lightning rod has no more influence over the course of ****************** lightning than the color of the paint on our houses. It offers a little consolation to the timid in cities by the statement that "in places where the population is entirely concentrated and the buildings are close together the fatal results of lightning are practically nil. It is in the country districts, where trees are abundant and houses frequently surrounded by them, that fatal accidents more frequently occur." Notwithstanding its cocksure remarks about "negligible chances," it is questionable, says the Chicago Tribune, whether the Electrical Review, by emphasizing the worthlessness of all protection, will not increase the timidity of that large number of persons who are made miserable every time a thunderstorm occurs. It will not add to their happiness to know that 32 persons have already been killed by lightning since January 1, although the season of fatality has hardly begun. If none of the existing devices for protection is of any avail the electrical experts

The strangest ecclesiastical suit on record in this country, perhaps any Proper Height country, has come before the courts of a Church. in a city not far away, says a Boston exchange. An Episcopal church is being sued because it is not sufficiently "high church." It appears that a certain person left money to this church with the provision that the services should come up to a certain standard of churchmanship. While the minister is doing his level best to whip up the convictions of his people to the standard of the high-church policy, he has failed, it is claimed, to get as much ritualism into the services and the responses of his flock as the money calls for. It will be very interesting to find out who is to blame in such a peculiar case. The parson has solicitously "turned" on all the ritual within his knowledge, and the people declare they have taken all they can digest. As no canon of the church tells just where high churchmanship begins and broad churchmanship ends, it will be very edifying if the secular court will throw some light upon the vexed

The Indian girls of the Chickasaw nation seem to be "up to date." The evils arising from the marriages of white men with Indian girls have become notorious. Usually the unions were sought by whites of worthless character, merely in order that they might get possession of the valuable lands allotted to the brides. In view of this a law was enacted by the Indian legislature establishing the marriage fee in such cases at $1,000. As a remedial measure much was expected of the law. It has just come into effect, and at Ardmore, I. T., recently some thousand or more Indian girls, in meeting assembled, indignantly "resolved" that the law and the instigators thereof were intolerable interferers with woman's inalienable right to marry whom she would. And the end is not yet.

Many thousands have been restored to health and happiness by the use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. If afflicted with any throat or lung trouble give it a trial for it is certain to prove beneficial. Coughs that have resisted other treatment have yielded to this remedy and health has been restored. Cases that seemed hopeless, that the climate of famous health resorts failed to benefit, have been permanently cured. Sold by Banker, Genoa.

Rode Astride a Big Bear

None Ever Knew Whether Steed or Rider Was Worse Scared.

DID YOU ever ride a bear?" asked Bill Ellis one night as we sat down at the camp fire after hunting all day,

"No, I suppose not," he continued without waiting for me to reply. "Lots of folk haven't. In fact, I'm the only feller I ever heard of that ever did. All the ridin' is generally the other way. Bear seldom carry outside passengers. But Old Clubfoot packed me one day in great shape. That old sarpent used to range these hills and if there was anything he liked it was lead. He was a regular travelin' lead mine. He was so dangerous I never hankered after his pelt, but one day I nearly ran over him and he came for me, so that there was nothin' to do but shoot. I fed him some lead right in the gizzard and all he done was to gulp as if it was good, and come right on with his mouth wide open for some more. I accommodated him right in the mouth, too, but one of his big white teeth flew into splinters that whizzed up into the air. I had a Sharp's rifle and just as I went to load it again the cartridge stuck in the chamber and I couldn't shut it. Disappointment seemed to make the old cuss only the madder and on he came, bent for a full breakfast.

"I suppose you'd have perspired, as they say in polite talk. I didn't have time to get a pore open, for luck was on my side and I was only a few yards from a live oak. I was young and pretty quick and swung myself in a jiffy onto a big limb. I felt a rip in my pants as I whirled over and, after gettin' well out of reach, I felt there and there was three or four slits six inches long where his claws had just missed by casin'. You may laugh all you please about folks that work with the seat of their pants, but if it hadn't been for the dry goods boxes down at the country store you wouldn't be entertainin' me with your ear to-night.

"I crawled along to the trunk of the tree and began to wonder how I was to get the rifle up. Old Clubfoot was there with his big paws clawin' down bark only two feet from my toes and tryin' to get up. His breath felt like the steam of a locomotive and his eyes would almost have done for a headlight, he was so mad. I had seen mad bear before, when they had a foot caught in a trap, but I never saw such ragin' fury as this old scamp had when he found I was just beyond his reach and the trunk of that tree too straight and smooth for him to climb. "Just as I began to think of a Sunday school hymn suitable for a saved sinner. I felt a bite. Then there was another and another and somethin' crawlin' up my sleeve and on my neck and up my ankles and more bites by the second, with the smell of ants gettin' mighty powerful. Then you bet I did perspire in no time. Did you ever try an ant bite? How many bites from one of the big red or black ants do you suppose it would take to kill a man? And how long do you suppose it would take? A horse stung by enough bees is dead before any pisen can possibly reach his vitals. A man dropped in bilin' water would be dead before any heat could ever reach his innards. It's the shock to the nerves what does the business, and before the fifth bite was well in my nerves was gettin' terrible shook up. Then I saw the tree was full of 'em and lines of hundreds of big red ants runnin' up the trunk. No use to mash 'em, for a hundred'll come to the funeral of everyone you mash. It wasn't half a minute before some still small voice inside whispered that I would have to get out of that tree, for it was certain the ants would kill me and with more sufferin' probably than I was likely to get at the hands of the

"You'd a been mighty smart and slipped down the tree on the opposite side from the bear, wouldn't you? That shows what you know about bear. You can have 50 feet start and he'll climb your back stairs in just 1% seconds. I wasn't that variety of squash. It was over 200 yards to the next tree and that was a low one, where he might claw me down even If I was lucky enough to reach it. A grizzly standin' on his hind legs is mighty high and his durned claws add another foot onto his long arms, and when he stretches them out you've no idea how they reach. All he's got todo is to get one hook into your meat and you're his'n. There was only one thing to do and that was to scare the stuffin' out of him. They're just like wild cattle on a plain. If you run from 'em they'll make a bulge on you sure, but if you run at 'em and wave your coat you stand a show of scarin' em off. There was only one thing to do, and that was to ride him, for swearin' at him didn't have no more effect on him than it does on you when you make a rank miss on a first-rate shot at a deer.

"There was no time to my out any fine plans, for the ants bit worse and worse and came thicker and thicker. So I ran out on a big limb and the bear followed me out there and looked up and showed his big white teeth and seemed to say-ain't you got some more lead to feed me? T'm tired of waitin' so long. I gave him my hat for a change, and as it fell, to the ground he dropped his head and began to chaw on it. Before he had a chance to show any disappointment, because a bear's favorite teethin's ring-a man's skull-wasn't inside of it, I just dropped square a-straddle of his back.

"What are you lookin' so queer about? You don't believe it, eh? Well, now, I ain't a-tryin' to make out that I was particularly brave. It was only a stroke of genius. There wasn't any courage about it. It took more bravery to stay with the ants. There was millions of 'em, and I just had to ride out of there. It was the ouly way to beat the grave. Of course a man must be somethin' of a bareback rider and know how to keep his bearin's-no joke intended-but when you get in such a scrape as that there's nothin' e'se to do, especially for the bear, for he had ridden so many hunters that I thought a change would be beneficial to his constitution. You might not have been as good a rider as I was and probably would have got off at the first pile of rocks we sailed through. But you'd have mounted him just the same as I did, because you'd 'a' had to.

"Did he snort? Not much. He had no time for that. Did you ever watch a fly sittin' on an arrow when you let go the string? 'That was about my fix, only I didn't drop off. Fact is, I didn't dare to, for he wasn't scared enough yet. He started fast enough, but when I got a good grip with each hand into his wool, dug my heels into his flanks and hollered 'Oit out o' here, you son of a gun!' he shot out like one of these rifle balls you hear tell of that gather speed so fast, that when we went under the first tree I didn't have time to unload him and catch onto a limb and swing up again, as I had meant to. That would have been a dandy trick to play him. for if he'd ever taken a notion to come back he'd never 'a' found the tree. A shootin' star might as well try to find the cloud it went through before it busted.

"In about half a second somethin' green whisked past. It wa'n't in my eye, for you never saw nothin' green in that when it come to a question of bear. I'm green on theosophy and a few other fine pints of religion, but not on bear, thank you. It must a been another tree, but I wa'n't very particular about stopping to find out. so on I journeyed. Just as we cleared that, somethin' gray went a-swimmin' around on all sides with a thousand quails a-whizzin', squealin' and dartin' around my head, and the durndest rattle you ever heard. It sounded as if the lightnin' had struck the pantry of the giants and busted all the crockery and turned the fleas loose. It might a been a rock pile we went through, but I wasn't particular enough to get off to look. Just then I saw a couple of brown spots ahead, with somethin' behind that looked like the tail of a coyote, and then two streaks of brown went past us from in front, but they fell behind so fast I couldn't tell, but I rather guess they was coyotes.

"Just then there was another flash of green, and then a regular cloud of it swimmin' around me, an' such a rippin' an' tearin' of clothes an' the awfullest smashin' an' crashin' of brush an' such a scratchin' of my eyes an' scrapin' off of my skin where the clothes had been, an' all at once I come to a dead stop so fast that it turned me upside down. As soon as I could get the blood out of my eyes enough to see, I found myself in one of these great big mountain manzanitas with my heels a lookin' at the sky an' not a durned rag on me but a bit of court plaster I had on back of one ear. I kept still for a second, expectin' a thunderbolt or somethin', but the coast was all clear an' the sun a smilin' as only our dear California sun can smile, with the birds all a singin' praises to their Maker and not an ant or a durned thing in sight to bother anybody. Just then I heard some one holler: 'Get out of here, you son of a gun.' It made me jump up, but it sounded so natural like it set me to thinkin', and durned if it wasn't my own voice-just arrived. 'Oh, yes, he done pretty well for a lame bear, but what sport I'd a had if I'd only had my spurs on."-Los icans in Angeles Times.

TOBACCO.

A Parable in Which Is Set Furth the History of the Vile Weed.

Then shall the kingdom of Satan be likened unto a grain of tobacco seed, which, though exceedingly small, being cast into the ground, grew and became a great plant, and spread its leaves rank and broad, so that the huge and vile worms formed a habitation there-

It came to pass in the course of time that the sons of men looked upon it and thought it beautiful to look upon, and much to be desired to make lads look big and manly. So they did put forth their hands and did chew thereof. And some it made sick; and others it caused to vomit most filthily.

And further it came to pass that those who chewed it became weak and unmanly, and said: "We are enslaved and cannot cease from chewing it." And the mouths of all that were enslaved became foul, for they were seized with a violent spitting, and did spit, even in ladies' parlors, and in the house of the Lord of hosts, and the saints of the Most High were greatly plagued thereby. And it came to pass that others snuffed it, and they were taken suddenly with fits, and they sneezed with a mighty sneeze insomuch that their eyes were filled with tears. and they did look exceedingly silly. And yet others wrought leaves into rolls, and did set fire to the one end thereof, and did look very grave and calf-like, and the smoke of their torment ascended up forever and forever. And the cultivation thereof became a great and mighty business in the earth, and the merchants waxed rich by the commerce thereof. And it came to pass that the saints of the Most High defiled themselves therewith, even the poor, who could not buy shoes, nor bread, nor books for their little ones, spent their money for it. And the Lord was greatly displeased therewith. and said:

"Wherefore this waste, and why do these little ones lack for bread and tions. shoes and books? Turn now your fields into corn and wheat, and put this evil thing away, far from you, and be separate and defile not yourselves, and I will bless you and cause my face to shine upon you." But with one accord they all exclaimed: "We cannot cease from chewing, snuffing and puffing. We are slaves."-Volunteer's Gazette.

Dated July 7, 1900. social position, but with bad habits, recently asked a young woman to be his wife. Many girls would have felt flattered, and have accepted him. Her answer was sharp and decided:

"You say I have qualities you wish in the woman who is to be your wife. I do not know as that. But there are habits I do not have, and I cannot accept a husband who has them. I do not smoke, nor swear, nor indulge in wine. I am not in debt. I do not spend my days in idleness, nor walking the streets with silly unthinking girls, nor my nights with questionable associates. As you have most of these habits, I am not willing to become your wife. Nothing but misery could come of such a union."-Union Gospel News.

WANT GOOD ROADS.

The Farmers of Pennsylvania Are Beginning to Pay Attention to the Cost of Hauling.

The subject of good roads is beginning to occupy the attention of the farmers of Pennsylvania, and promises to become, before long, a proninent factor in state and county elec-

In a recent address at Doylestown Edmund G. Harrison, chief engineer of the United States department of road inquiry, said the average cost of transporting products in the United States over common roads is 25 cents per mile, an aggregate of $900,000,-With good roads, such as they have in many parts of New Jersey, Connecticut, New York, Massachusetts and Kentucky, he said, the cost is reduced to eight cents per mile. The average of building good roads is about $3,000 per mile.

According to these figures, it is much cheaper to maintain good roads than it is to allow the poor ones to remain. Good roads practically effect a saving of two-thirds in transportation.

The residents of cities have learned to realize the benefits of improved highways. It is safe to assert that Philadelphia would not go back to the old era of cobblestone paving and reeking gutters if they had to sell the public buildings and the ground on which they are situated.—Philadelphia Item.

A Pennsylvania woman has secured $25,000 damages for the alienation of her husband's affections. If she is reasonable she will now take comfort in the thought that she got all they were worth.

Drainage is not simply the carrying away of the surplus moisture. Tile drainage prevents the accumulation of stagnant water in the soil and deepens the soil for the work of roots. thus assisting to prevent evil effects during periods of drought. The soil is also renderd much warmer, while the penetration of the air brings oxygen to the vegetables and mineral matter in the soil and hastens chemical reaction. When a field is tile drained it can be plowed a week or ten days carlier than wet places, which enables the crop to get a better start in the first stages of growth.

ALONG THE WAYS.

The ways are lone, but in the night God, who hath loved us, whispers "Light!" The same as when, on that far morn, Light to a needful world was born. he all the darkness of the land Still that Almighty, guiding hand!

Pillars of fire there are to-day To guide God's wanderers on the way As truly as they shone of old To the rare chosen of His fold. Strengthened by Love we understand Still an Almighty's guiding Hand!

Where is the night that is so dim That worlds, conflicting, darken Him? Is He not there—where Darkness goes, Bending the rainbow o'er the rose? The worlds swing sweet at His command, Swerved by His great, Almighty Hand.

Lean thou, my darling, to my kiss:-Wherever there is Love God is! Love in the loneliest ways of life-Kiss of the mother and the wife, and clinging of the child at rest On the forlornest mother's breast!

Lean to my kiss: for God shall make Sweeter the world for thy love's sake! Thou hast, from me, in thy young years, Only the tenderness of tears. They're all I have to give, but they Shall make a sunshine on thy way. All Heaven hath sweetly dreamed and smiled, Dear, in the sweet face of a child;-A little child, whose accents fall This-wise: "To love is best of all!" So shalt thou know, when years are past, Love leads us unto peace at last! F. L. Stanton, in Atlanta Constitution.

When Charlis Laid Down'

By Kennett L. Harris.

TT WASN'T a month ago." said the brown-faced man at the Transit house, flicking his boot with a little rawhide whip and smiling broadly; "I didn't s'pose a man could get into the yards and not hear on it. You know old man Ketter-Bronson Ketter-don't you?"

"From the Pan-Handle?" asked the man in the corduroy suit.

"Pan-Handle nothin'. He's just over in Indiana-retired last week about two million to the good; you must have seen something about it in the papers. Don't you read a paper

"Name sounds sort of familiar. I may have seen something about him, but I disremember it just now. What about him, anyway? How did he get the best of Charlie?" "Oh, well," said the brown-faced man in a tone of slight disgust, "if you don't know Ketter you can't appreciate it. I'd thought you'd have maybe heard of the biggest stockraiser in the state, though. Bronson P. Ketter!"

"No," said the man in the corduroy suit, "I can't just call him to mind."

"Pshaw! Well, anyway, the old man came up here som'er's about a month ago to buy a bunc. of stockers and feeders. He made up his mind that he could save the buyer's commission just about as well as not, and he wasn't far out at that. Why, of course you know Ketter. You heard of him selling that Hereford bull for $7,500?"

"No. I haven't got him placed yet. Maybe I know him, though.

"Sure thing you know him; he breeds more Herefords than any one man in the United States, and there ain't a better judge of live stock nowheres. I used to think I was a tal'rable good guesser on weight until I met up with him. I generally figured I could come within a quarter of a pound of how much a steer would scale, but old man Ketter 'll give it to you in ounces. Yes, he skinned Charlie a plenty. "He came down to the yards one morning looking about as innocent as ever you see a man look in your life, and rubbering around with his mouth half open, like he was making his first visit. Charlie said he seen him when he first came in, looking at the red-plush mounted horns as if he'd got a right smart notion to buy a pair to hang up in the sittin'-room. That done as much as anything prob'ly to throw Charlie off.

"After awhile he drifts around to the pens where Charlie and Parker Stebbs and Gore Hennessey was holding their stockers and feeders-quite a bunch of them-and he looked over at the cattle sort of as if he wanted the boys to think that he was dead on to his job. Charlie says it was a peach of a bluff that he made. He had a straw in one corner of his mouth, and when he chewed down on that and pulled his chin whiskers and cocked his old gray eye at the stock he looked so all-fired knowing that any judge of human nature would have swore up and down he didn't know a darned thing.

"Charlie walks up to him. 'Fine day,' he says.

"'It might be wusser'n it is,' says the old man. 'How they sellin'?'

"'Higher'n a cat's back,' says Charlie. 'Was you thinking of buyin?' I'll let 'em down a few notches if you want to do business. It's a daisy

"The old man pulled a plug of tobacco about as long as your arm out of his pocket and bit off a chew. Then he says, kind of drawling and squeaky -you know how the old man talksoh, I forgot, though, you said you says didn't know him; well, anyway, he but what I might buy a few if you don't open your mouth too wide when you tell me the price. I can't afford to pay no fancy price, though?"

"'How many do you want to buy?" says Charlie.

"The old man scratches his chin kind of thoughtfully. Then he takes another look at the bunch.

"'I don't know,' he says, after awhile. 'Mebbe two hundred, if the price is right.'

"'I'll make the price right,' says Charlie, winking at Hennessey. 'Come n and take a good look at 'em first.'

"There was a mixed lot in the pen, and mighty few averages among them. They was mostly good or bad. The old man booked 'em over, and while he was looking at the cattle Charlie was locking at him, taking particular notice of what seemed to strike his fancy. According to Charlie's idea the old man was showing poor judgment. He'd pick out some consumptive Wisconsin Knothcad and shift his straw around in his mouth and he'd say: 'There's a purty fair lookin' critter. I bet if I put him on grass he'd run up to 900 in three months afore he got a kernel of corn.

"'Good 90-day stock,' says Charlie, and he winks at Parker Stebbs behind the old man's back.

"'There's another likely critter,' says the old man, poking at a runty Canadian.

"'Small boned and well bred; them's the kind to put on flesh,' says Charlie. 'You've got a good eye for points.

"The old man looked as if he was trying hard not to look tickled, and moved around in the bunch, charlie at his elbow, with his eye on him. Once in awhile the old man would crack up a good animal and speak disapprovingly of it-there wasn't anything raw nor coarse about his work. He couldn't have bunkoed your Uncle Charlie if there had been. When he got through inspecting he picked up a chip and sat down in the corner of the pen and began to whittle at it with his jack-knife. 'What'll you take for the pick of the bunch?' he says.

"'See here,' says Charlie; 'I haven't got time to sit down and whittle and talk trade with you. If we do business we've got to do it in a hurry. I'll make it an inducement to you, too. I'll let you take 200 of your pick "The old man got up and dusted off his pants. 'It's a go,' he says, 'and now we'll do business. Get in your man to cut 'em out, and my friend'll get in the alley to hold 'em. All set?

"Charlie stood it for the first five or six, and then he began to squirm a little. When the old man had got five or six more on top of them, and all the flower of the herd, he took out his handkerchief. The old man wasn't going about it like a new beginner. He didn't stop and take a front view and a back view and squint Steam Marble and Granite Works over and under every animal, like he did at first. He just moved about quick and tapped one after another with the little peeled willow he had in his hand, without seeming to look what he was doing. But every blamed one he touched or pointed at was the best in sight. Gore told me he never seen such a pretty bit of selection all the years he'd been in the

"But by the time the old man had got 25 in the alley Charlie squealed. 'Stop a minute,' he says; 'I've got a proposition to make.'

"'What is it?' asked the old man. "'T'll pay you three dollars a head for all up to the 200 you don't pick.

"HE HAD A STRAW IN ONE CORNER OF HIS MOUTH."

I'll make it an even 600 if you're willing to call the deal off,' says Charlie. You're a dickens of a poor judge of cattle, you are.'

"'I thought you said I had a good eye for points awhile ago,' says the old man. 'I b'lieve you thought you ITHACA, was lying both times. No: I propose to make more than $600 on that bunch. Let's hurry up and get this business done.'

"He went on with his pick and Charlie braced himself up against the side of the pen and chewed his finger nails and listened to what Parker Stebbs and Gore Hennessey had to say. They had a-plenty to say, too.

"Finally the old man got through, and you ought to have seen the aggregation of tail-enders he left. It would have made you sob, Hennessey

"Parker told me that Charlie stood says: 'They ain't so bla-a-me poor, for a minute or two chewing on his

Then he pointed over to one of the refuse and says, kind of bitter: 'I should think you'd have taken him along anyway. You was admiring him awhile ago.

"'I'm sort of fickle,' says the old man. 'It's good 90-day stock, though -according to your tell, Mr. Walker.' "'How did you know my name, and what's yours?' asked Charlie, kind of surprised. "'Oh, I've knowed you by sight any time this ten years,' says the old man. 'My name's Henry J. Fowler.' Right there was where Charlie laid down and had his fit."

"Was it Henry J. Fowler?" asked the man in the corduroy coat. "Certainly it was. Haven't I been telling you?" "You said Bronson P. Ketter. Of course I know Fowler, but you kept asking me if I knew Bronson P. Ket-

"Well, that's one on me," said the brown-faced man. "Bronson Ketter! Oh, pshaw! Why. I don't know as I'd have remembered Bron Ketter myself if anybody else had spoken of him! Well, well!"-Chicago Daily Record.

The Campaign of 1900

Is now open and is probably the most important since 1860, and the issues are just as important, just as well defined, and more numerous than ever before, and these vital facts together with what is happening every day in all parts of the world, make it imperative and necessary that the intelligent man, woman and child should read the newspapers. It is the only way to keep posted, to keep in touch with the political, military and social events, and to enable the voter to cast his ballot for what he knows he wants. To enable one and all to prepare for this national event, the following campaign offers are now quoted: When taken in connection with the GENOA TRIBUNE, the Tri-Weekly World one year 65c; the Tri-Weekly Tribune one year 8oc; Weekly Tribune 25c; Semi-Weekly Post-Standard (Syracuse) 5oc; Rochester Democrat and Chronicle 55c; New York Daily Press $4.50. # SINGLE TALENT OF SOPER

It Gave Pleasant Dreams to the Life

W HENEVER I hear a young man complain of not having the right kind of a chance in life," said the general life insurance agent, "I think of old Soper, and his one talent, and what he made of it. Never heard of old Soper? Well, he's been dead these 15 years, but he gave pleasant dreams to one whole generation of struggling life insurance solicitors.

"It was shortly after I had gone to work as a solicitor for the Fraternity Life, nearly 18 years ago, that I met him first. One day an elderly, welldressed man came into the office and asked if he could get a few facts about the Fraternity's policies. I got him into a retired corner and proceeded to fill him up. He was a very intelligent man, with a clear head for figures, and he made notes from time to time with a heavy gold pocket pencil in a morocco-covered notebook.

"When I had told him all I knew. he thanked me and said: 'You seem to have an excellent policy and I may wish to talk with you further if you will kindly let me have your card.'

"I did so and suggested an early interview, and after a moment's reflection he named what was in those days the top-notch hotel in New York, and said I might look him up in the smoking-room that evening between six and

"I showed up in the hotel smokingroom at five minutes past six, and about half-past he strolled in with an evening paper. I got him into an easychair and went to work. I thought l talked well and he certainly seemed deeply impressed. Finally when the psychological moment seemed to have arrived I said:

"'Now, Mr. Soper,'-he had given me his card at the office-'I want to write you for $10,000 at once.'.

"Ten thousand dollars,' he repeat ed. There was that in his tone that told me on the instant that the sum I had named seemed insignificant. "'Or better still, $25,000,' I said as soon as I caught my breath "'What is your insurance limit?' he

"'Fifty thousand,' I gasped. "He nodded quietly, and seemed lost for a time in meditation. Then suddenly he arose. "'Your policy has features which attract me,' he said-with a kindly smile. 'Indeed, the Influential's is the only one that seems to compare with it. I am to see the Influential agent tonight, and if I do not conclude with him I shall wish to have a further talk with you. Just now I must ask you to excuse me as it is my dinner time." "'Oh Lord!' I said to myself, 'there's just my luck. I could have the thing nailed in five minutes more, and now that other agent, who's probably an old hand, will practically take that $50,-000 commission out of my pocket,' I made a lightning calculation of how much money I had with me, $25, by an accident, and summoning all my nerve asked the old chap to dine with me. He consented graciously, and it looked as though I had my opportunity by the

"I won't bother you with the details of that dinner. After we'd finished soup-Blue Points and soup had always seemed to me a simple manner-I retired from the role of host in confusion, and asked him to take charge, which he did. I had started the wine with a modest hock. He ordered a claret, Lafite, of a vintage, he said, he could recommend, which cost more than champagne, and followed it up with a Montrachet at six dollars a quart. And at the end he introduced me to his favorite brand of cigars, a fat thing he called a Celestiale, that smoked like a dream of Araby the Blest, and for which I subsequently gave up 50 cents apiece.

'When I wandered home that night my pocketbook was lighter by $24.75, but what did that amount to? He was going to drop me a line when to come round and finish the thing up-and $50,000 was the amount he was thinking of.

"But, somehow, although I saw him half a dozen times during the next two weeks, I hadn't quite landed him; although every time I left him it seemed as though everything was over except drawing my commission. He lunched with me three times during those two weeks and dined with me again. I had to borrow the money, but it was no time to look at a dollar or two. And examiner. He looked sympathetic. " 'Sorry,' he said. 'Bright's disease.'

"'Sure as death,' he said. 'Not very far advanced, but the analysis is plain as day. Absolutely worthless risk."

"I wrote Soper a note the next day. But, though it was the only decent thing to do, it was several weeks before I got up courage to go round. and see him. Finally one night I did hunt him up, but I didn't say my little speech. I found him in the main dining-room at dinner. One Perkins. an agent of the Influential, was doing the honors. There were all sorts of things on the table, solid and liquid. Also an assortment of insurance tables.. Perkins was talking earnestly, and Mr. Soper seemed deeply impressed. I retired quietly, ponderng as I went.

"A couple of weeks later I ran across Perkins. I mentioned seeing him at dinner, and asked him casually if he had come into a fortune.

Then Perkins told me a harrowing hard-luck story, how he had happened on to this solid, elderly party who was evidently a millionaire, how he had worked at him for three weeks. spent $58.45 in lunches and dinners. finally written him for $50,000-no less-and had him thrown down on his medical examination.

"I offered Perkins my sympathy. and after that tried to forget the Soper episode, until one day young Peasley, our newest solicitor, took me aside. Peasley had been acting peculiarly. Ordinarily he was one of those not unattractive youths who share their hopes and fears with such of their acquaintances as can be got to listen. But lately he had affected a portentous demeanor that had puzzled, the rest of the office.

How Six Children Died - A Preity Story That Comes from Darjeeling, India.

In September, 1899, while Rev. Mr. Lee and his wife, of the Methodist school at Darjeeling, India, were absent on business for their mission in the hills, a storm and landslide swept away their home and buried their six thildren. The eldest son, Wilbur, a boy of 13, survived long enough to breathe the story. There is a saered pathos in his sketch of his heroic sister, and of the brave way in which all the little ones met death.

Vida Maud Lee, a girl of 17, had charge of the young flock, and when, in the dead of night, the storm increased, and rocks and earth, loosened by a two days' deluge of rain, began to roll down the mountain, she tried to lead her brothers and sisters to a place of safety.

The road and every path of escape were blocked with broken trees and fallen soil and stones. In the rain, the dense darkness and the deafening wind, she knew that the children must scatter, and some of them be

"We will go back to the house," she said. "Then, if God wishes to save us, He will save us together; and if not, He will take us together."

Returning, blinded and drenched, they lighted a lamp, kindled a fire and prayed. There were no terrified shrieks for deliverance—only "Thy will be done." The sublime faith of the eldest sister had lifted even the youngest soul. In the midst of the awful uproar around them the peace of a better world had already begun.

A sudden slide of rock crashed against the house, and the corner of the room fell in. Vida rose and stood calmly with her helpless company.

"Children!" she said, "the house is going to fall, and we shall all soon be in Heaven."

"If you could only have seen Vida's face!" continued the little narrator in his last words to his mother. "Shelooked so beautiful when she talked to us! And we weren't a bit afraid. We just felt as if we were all in the train, coming to see you and papa."

In another room the brave girl once more gathered her patient brood, and there, in a loving group, they knelt and awaited the inevitable end. The bitterness of death was past. They did not know that they were "more than conquerors." A moment later the great avalanche rolled. over them, and five pure young spirits scene of ruin found little Wilbur, so badly injured that he could not live, and tenderly cared for him. He lingered a few days, till the afflicted parents could reach him.

The foregoing facts, communicated by his mother to the Western Christian Advocate, were related by him, little by little, on his death-bed. Alone of the .ix dear children, "he seems to have been sent back," she said, "to tell us of their triumph."

Kindly Thoughts and Honest Purposes Manifest Themselves in Intangible Ways.

We are all conscious that other people carry with them and radiate a certain atmosphere. We always find it difficult, perhaps impossible, to say in what it consists. Probably it is the subtle, ethereal effluence of personality and character; the aroma of desires and achievements and purposes. Often it is unnecessary for a person to say a word to you to bring others under the spell of this influence. While it is often associated with beauty or an impressive physical presence, that is by no means invariably so. A glance of the eye or an expression of the countenance reveals a spirit that repels us or to which we are drawn. More largely than we often think the influence that radiates from us is under the control of our wills. Kindly thoughts and honest purposes manifest themselves in these intangible ways. You do not need to tell me whether you are well disposed-I feel it. A very large part of our power to confer happiness on others depends on the quality of our personal radiation. It may inspire or depress; make the difficult thing look feasible, or weaken the resolution to resist temptation. Often we do not know when we are doing good or harm; but these unconscious influences are the net product of what we are.-Bostor. Watchman.

The year 1899 was noteworthy for its charities. Never in any twelve-A Noble Record month since records have been in Charittes. kept, in this or any other country, has so large a sum been poured out for the helping and uplifting of mankind as was bestowed last year in the United States in the form of gifts and bequests to colleges, libraries, hospitals, churches and other institutions. The recorded total, says the Youth's Companion, is sixty-two and threequarter million dollars, to which might be fairly added at least two million and a quarter more, in small donations-the little gifts of which the left hand of the giver never knew Not only is the size of this total cheerful to contemplate, but in several other respects it invites favorable comment. First, the amount of money bestowed in the form of direct gifts was greatly in excess of that left by bequest. In other words. rich men did not wait until death had robbed them of the power longer to enjoy their wealth, but gave of their possessions while they could still follow the course of their benefactions, see that their wishes were regarded, and advise concerning the fulfillment of their plans. This course is not only most sensible from a business point of view, but it also insures the giver a larger share in the pleasure of his benefactions. It makes him part and parcel of the good he does, and so leaves him a better man. The knowledge that people of large means are more and more coming to adopt this course is not the least attractive characteristic of last year's charitable record. Another point worth mentioning is the growing disposition to give anonymously. It shows, better than anything else could show it, a sincere and personal interest in the noble aims for which the gifts are made, and an absence of the self-interest which seeks ad-

Ogden, a partner of John Wanamaker, in Success, "it indicates an improvement in the quality of their education, and a development along the lines of practical common sense. I believe in education-the more thorough the better-for every man who has the character and capacity to receive it. But the proper use of education is largely a question of character, and a man without the elements of superior character is better off without higher education. An educated man, with proper staying power, will stand the best chance of success in the business world. This, of course, implies that he has not been spoiled by his education. The great difficulty of higher education expended upon improper material is that it educates a man away from the rugged and hard struggle that is needed for business success. A liberal education makes one man, and spoils another. The difference is a question of character. The business world is full of prizes for the brainy man, and education will teach such a one to use his brains to the best advantage."

A candidate for the position of teacher in a New Hampshire district school was found sadly deficient in spelling, grammar and mathematics, and it was with a perfunctory air that the examiner turned to the subject of geography. "Where is Chicago?" he asked, selecting a question at random from a sheet of miscellaneous queries. "Well, it's out west," replied the candidate, with the tone of one who had unexpectedly landed on solid and familiar ground. "In what part of the west?" persisted the heartless examiner. "Well, now," said the young man, with an ingenuous but fleeting smile, "I know whereabouts in the union Chicago is, just as well as anybody. I could go right there if I had a ticket, but I haven't got the flow of language to make it clear, that's the only trou-

In addition to this the state of Caliof miscellaneous fruit to Paris once a week during the whole period the exposition remains open. The fruit will cross the continent in refrigerator cars and then proceed in cold storage from the Atlantic seaboard to France. Few Americans who have not traveled abroad, says Youth's Companion. are aware of how small a quantity of fruit is eaten in Great Britain and on the continent, as compared with the enormous supply consumed in this country. It is an old saying that an Englishman makes the eating of a peach almost a religious ceremony. London papers treat as prodigious the receipt of oranges from the continent; but it is insignificant as compared with the amount consumed in this country. The European abstinence from fruit is due not merely to the scarcity of fruit, but also to lack of appetite for it, and a belief that, as anything more than an occasional article of diet, it is unwholesome. Our own experience as a people is exactly the contrary. Americans are not only the greatest fruit raisers but the greatest fruit eaters in the world, their taste in that respect being one which their diversified climatic conditions enable them to gratify in unusual variety. It is hoped that our fruit exhibit at the Paris exposition will help to overcome the European prejudice, and so extend our market. It will at least demonstrate the pomological wealth of the country and the ability to deliver it anywhere in good condition.

Put Potson in since the agitation concerning the usthe Milk. ing of formalin as a preservative shows that the use of the poison is general. It is said, reports the Chicago Inter Ocean, that evidence sufficient to convict over 100 milkmen of a violation of the city ordinance has been collected, and unless a marked improvement is observed legal proceedings will be begun against these dealers. Milk Inspector Grady says that seven-eighths of the milkmen formerly used this preservative, while the proportion has now reduced itself to about one in ten. The ordinances forbid the use of any kind of preservative. "The question of formalin being injurious in its toxic action when used in milk as a preservative is not the question for the health department to decide," said Health Commissioner Reynolds. "The ordinances forbid its use, and we will enforce the ordinances." Milmen are indignant at the charges that have been made by the health department and others that dealers have not been treating their patrons fairly in the matter of quantity and quality. They say that, if milk has been watered or preservatives have been used, it has been done by the shipper. They have not the time, nor the inclination, they declare, to test every can of milk shipped to them. They admit that it is possible some dealers may use preservatives, but they say that the chemicals are harmless. It is the general belief among the dealers that the milk delivered to Chicago people is as good

THINNING OUT FRUITS.

It Must Be Done in Good Season If Really Satisfactory Results Are to Be Obtained.

The average farmer pays little or no attention to thinning fruit. If the tree is overloaded, so that the limbs bend almost to the breaking point, some will set props under the limbs to keep them from breaking entirely down, while others more careless will let the limbs break off. They may complain of the size and quality of the fruit when it is harvested, but few think it necessary or will take the trouble to thin out in good season, and thereby not only save the trees, but secure fruit of a much better quality. In nearly all cases a tree making a thrifty growth will, if left unmolested, set more fruit than under ordinary conditions it should be allowed to mature. In fact, one cause, though not the only one, of trees failing to bear is on account of being allowed to overbear one year, lowering the vitality to such an extent that the tree is incapable of bearing the next year.

Thinning can be done to an advantage where fruit of good size and quality is desired. But if anything like satisfactory results are secured it must be done in good season, reasonably soon after the fruit sets.

The larger the fruit is allowed to become before thinning the greater the drain upon the tree and the less good will result.

It of course seems troublesome to go to fruit trees and take off from one-fourth to one-half the specimens, selecting those that are too close together and that are the least promisand pure as is delivered in any city in ing, yet when there is a full crop and uniform choice fruit is desired, thinning becomes necessary. And when it is to be done advantage should be taken of the first favorable opportunity for doing the work. Peaches, pears and grapes especially can be thinned to an advantage, and in many cases apples also .- N. J. Shepherd, in Farmers' Voice.

Spraying with Petroleum.

"I have been using petroleum for spraying my fruit trees," said a wellknown grower the other day. "This was recommended by Prof. J. B. Smith, of the New Jersey experiment station. Of course we always try these new remedies with more or less apprehension. It is that way with every new thing. They may be all right, and yet there is a certain amount of danger. I sprayed the trees before the leaves appeared, and must confess that I watched caretook place recently, and the damage fully to see them start. There they are growing nicely, and apparently uninjured. The scales are, I think, destroyed. You will observe that the bark feels soft and greasy. I think this is a good thing, for it loosens the bark and prevents the tree getting into the condition which would be called hidebound in a horse."

"O, they do such funny things, and they are such very, very easy money. My little brother taught me that, and I can't help it. They are so extremely tractable before, you know, and, from what I hear, so utterly fractious after, that it's a wonder to me they-"

"Before and after what?" "Why, the church affair of 'Lohengrin' music, weeps and rice, of course. True, I only know of the fractiousness of the after from hearsay, but I have been here for two years, and I do know the tractableness of the before like I don't know my catechism. O, they are so dead easy!" and the flower shop girl with the wavy chestnut hair picked up a loose strand of the same and deftly tucked it behind her left ear.

"All of them, you know, are more or less mentally unhinged during the be-fore stage," she went on. "But a man who came in here during the noon hour on a day a couple of weeks ago-I waited on him, for the proprietor and all of the girls except myself had gone for luncheon-had about the worst case of "'Fifteen dollars a dozen,' I told him. "'How many dozen just like that have you got in the shack?' he inquired, "'About ten dozen,' I replied.

"'All right-I'll take 'em,' he said, and then he began to look at the other flowers. When he saw a vase of American Beauty roses as big as double chrysanthemums he asked me: 'What is the figure for these?"

"'Two dollars apiece,' I told him. "'Put about 50 of 'em with the others,' he said.

"'O, quite enough,' said I, 'and just the right kind, too,' and just then the proprietor came in, and the big man from the west handed him a $500 bill. Don't they all need guardians? Goodness gracious me, I do so pity the poor things!" and the girl with the wavy chestnut hair again belied the pity she said she felt by her smiles.

"And what do you think of a man who sends flowers, and beautiful ones, too, to his wife every day in the year? Sundays and holidays included," she went on, matching a heliotrope orchid with a piece of heliotrope ribbon. "Well, we have such a customer. He first came in here a little over a year ago, and ordered an expensive box of flowers to be sent to the home of a lady who lives across from the park, and who had 'Mrs, prefixed to her name. After that he dropped in rain, snow or shine, every day, and selected a beautiful lot of flowers to be sent to the same 'Mrs.' He, of course, never had any occasion to give his own name, and, of course, none of us in the store dreamed that he was sending the flowers to his wife. So hopelessly improbable, that, you know. All of us girls decided that he was a bachelor, or widower-he was a middle-aged man-cultivating the good graces of an attractive widow, probably wealthy, and we wondered if she were good looking and all that. One day, after he had been sending her flowers regularly for seven months, he failed to come in, and so the proprietor sent up a handsome basket of flowers to the address of 'Mrs.' anyhow. The next day he came

"'My wife was a trifle indisposed yesterday,' he said to the proprietor, and, of course, I could not leave her. I thoroughly appreciate your sending the flowers without my ordering them, and so does my wife.'

"The proprietor looked at him in rather a puzzled sort of way.

"'Had I but known at the time of your wedding-' he began!

"Have I not just been telling you that he is married? And then the poor sillies-I mean the young ones in the before stage again-d'ye know they really and truly believe the girls when the girls tell 'em that they 'press every flower you send me in my copy of Tennyson?' Actually believe every word of it, they do! They never stop to think that no volume of Tennyson as big as the Doomsday book has ever been published. 'How'll they press?' is the question that lots of the poor, deluded things ask me when they are picking out roses to be be sent to the onliest ones. O, so easy!"-N. Y. Sun.
