CHAPTER VI.
CONVALESCENCE.

Aunt Marcie's diagnosis of Lieutenant Oakman's case was accurate. The comparatively slight wound gradually grew more angry and inflamed until his system was afire with fever and his sufferings were intense. He walked the floor two entire nights, stepping softly lest he disturbed the sleeping ones who could give him no more than their sympathy, and he rested only when nature succumbed.

The fact that the old colored woman foretold unerringly every phase of his case kept his confidence in her at par. In her crude way she explained that the bullet, which ranged along the forearm under the sleeve of coat and shirt, had carried some of the cloth with it, and it was this foreign substance that was still within the wound which caused the irritation. Until that was removed by her treatment the inflammation and pain would continue, but the mischievous substance would be exuded at some hour on the fourth day, after which his improvement would be rapid. And it came about precisely as she said. Indeed the relief was so marked that, as he expressed it, the change was like heaven itself.

A strong man desires to be let alone when he is suffering. Words of sympathy do no good and generally are a bore. Lieutenant Oakman was glad that Mrs. Eldridge and her daughter understood this truth and forbore intruding upon him. The effort to show the courtesy and gratitude due them would have intensified his pain.

But there were delicacies sent to his room, accompanied by kind wishes borne by Aunt Marcie, that were the sweetest of balms. How these people, reduced to the most painful degree of poverty, could furnish him with such delicate and nourishing food was inconceivable to the guest. All the slaves had run off excepting Pete, his wife and the boy Rastus. The plantation had been going to waste for a long time, and it would seem that the production was not sufficient for the sustenance of one person.

And here were mother and daughter, accustomed to lives of refinement and luxury, besides the three servants, none of whom showed evidence of actual want, though the poverty of attire, the substitutes for genuine tea and coffee and the meager fare itself spoke eloquently of the painful change of conditions.

It is probable that this exemption from the distress that came to thousands of other homes was due to a variety of causes. As is known, the section lay in the very heart of the Confederacy; where, until the visit of Sherman and his army, the real presence of war was not felt. Although the men attached to the plantation had long since gone to war, taking the most valuable horses with them, Pete and his wife were able to give more help to the women than would be supposed. Their love for the mistress and her daughter led them to a self denial that no one besides themselves suspected.

Since Lieutenant Oakman was not ailing in body and the arm which he carried in a sling was mending rapidly, there was no call for him to stay within doors. The second night on which he walked the floor was the most wretched of his life. A drizzling rain fell steadily through the dismal hours, and the pattering on the roof, the endless dripping of the eaves, the sighing of the wet branches, drove him almost frantic, but with his sudden release from anguish the autumn sun burst forth in splendor, as if rejoicing with him over the blessed surcease from misery.

Stirring news had come to the Union prisoner. From some cause General Sherman made an abrupt turn to the northward in his line of march, thus leaving the Eldridge plantation a goodly number of miles to the south. This was an enormous relief to the officer, who knew too well the plundering proclivities of many of his countrymen, which led them to regard everything worth taking as legitimate spoil. He dreaded a visit from them, though expecting it, until he learned of the change in the line of march. Several squads of cavalry had been seen hovering in the neighborhood, but they vanished without molesting the women, who uttered a prayer of thankfulness when convinced that nothing more would be seen of the invaders.

Of course in the event of a hostile visit the officer would have defended the household to the last, but he was only one unarmed man against what might have been a score or a hundred. Perhaps his chivalry would have availed, perhaps it would not; so it is well that it was not put to the supreme test. The situation of Lieutenant Oakman was unique. He felt that he ought not to prolong his stay, and yet what means should he adopt to depart? He was a prisoner on parole and unexchanged. Scurrying back and forth on the flanks and in the wake of the Union army were multitudes of Confederate cavalymen, through which it would be well nigh impossible for him to make his way. Some of them were irregular forces or guerrillas, who, enraged by disaster, would show scant consideration to the United States uniform. They were liable to visit the home of General Eldridge at any hour.

"I must take the first opportunity to leave," was Oakman's thought. "My arm is only slightly sore, and if mounted on a good horse, with my revolver at command, I wouldn't hesitate to chance it. Poor Fanny! It isn't likely we shall ever meet again, and as for a revolver"—

He checked himself with a thrill of hope. In the flurry of his encounter with his captors the weapon was dropped while riding the mare at full speed. Forgotten for the time, it might be he was the only one who recalled the fact. What a godsend if he could recover it! Since his rapid convalescence the officer spent much of his time in wandering about the old plantation. He loved to sit under the grand old shade trees, where seats had been placed long before. Sometimes he chatted with Uncle Pete or Aunt Marcie, and inasmuch as they refused to accept anything in the form of money from him he filled the pockets of Rastus, with greenbacks, until the dusky urchin threatened to become a budding millionaire.

Mrs. Eldridge and her daughter were considerate, responding kindly to his greetings and expressing their pleasure at his recovery, but the situation was so delicate to him that he avoided both. His sense of honor would not permit him to attempt in the remotest degree to take advantage of his position.

As for Miss Harriman, the situation may be said to have been one of armed neutrality. Mrs. Eldridge must have spoken sharp words to her, for nothing more was heard of her biting sentences. She avoided the guest, never sitting at the table with him, and being absent from the house sometimes all day and night. The most that was said of her by Miss Eldridge was to explain that her full name was Marian Harriman, that she had come from New England just before the breaking out of the war, and, because of her high recommendations, had been engaged by General Eldridge as a governess or companion for his daughter, who contemplated a European tour with her mother, but was prevented by the opening of hostilities.

Brief as are the words recorded of this young woman, they are sufficient to show her intense southern sympathies. She was more extreme than those among whom she lived and sometimes brought reproach upon her head for her fierce utterances.

Lieutenant Oakman remembered the spot where he dropped his revolver when he was struck by the bullet of Tim Masters. Sauntering to the place, he groped only a few minutes among the cotton shrubs when he came upon the weapon lying precisely as it had fallen. With a cry of joy he snatched it up, slipped it into his pocket and started homeward.

CHAPTER VII.
UNDER THE TREES.

It was wholly accidental, the meeting between Lieutenant Oakman and Miss Eldridge. He was sauntering thoughtfully homeward after recovering his revolver, happy at his good fortune and wondering over the future, when, in passing through the spacious, shaded grounds, he raised his eyes and saw the young lady seated on one of the rustic benches scarcely 20 paces away.

She was looking toward him and, as she caught his glance, nodded and almost unconsciously made room for him. A singular thrill stirred the officer as he raised his cap, and, slightly quickening his pace, placed himself at the side of the young lady.

A touch of summer's softness lingered in the air, but the shapely shoulders were infolded in a light shawl and the head covered by a hat trimmed by her own hands with a taste that would have won a compliment in Paris itself. She even carried a parasol, which was folded, while she used the sharp point to dig the ground at her feet, sometimes by way of emphasis and again with no purpose at all.

After a few words the young woman said: "It seems inhospitable, Lieutenant, after your brief stay with us for me to urge you to leave, but I am compelled to do so." "When I have received so much kindness from your family, there can be no such thing as inhospitality on your part."

"My words sound very like it. How else can they be construed?"

She had begun gouging the soft ground near the point of one of her tiny shoes with the tip of her parasol and looked upward and sideways at him with a faint smile.

"The motive must be the interpreter. Your words are prompted by the same feeling that led you and your mother to extend hospitality when it was sorely needed."

The gentle face became thoughtful, and after a moment's silence she said in a lower tone:

"You speak the truth, for you are in danger."

"Such has been my situation from the first."

"But the danger has become imminent. Despite the care we have used it has become known that we are sheltering a Union officer under our roof."

"And thereby have placed General Eldridge in a false position."

"It is not that. He is too chivalrous to object. In truth he would have been displeased had we failed in our duty, but there are others who do not think as he does."

"Not Masters and Ackers?"

"Their treatment of you does not warrant your distrust."

The officer's face flushed and he made haste to apologize.

"It does not, but they might be obeying the orders of others. I understand that since the Union army has passed through this section there are many Confederate cavalymen hovering on the outskirts at the rear of the force, picking off stragglers. Some of them are in this neighborhood."

"They are and mean to pay you a visit."

"But I am already a prisoner."

"And yet confined in no prison."

The words meant a good deal. Lieutenant Oakman felt that the most chivalrous enemy would have been justified in objecting to the privileges he enjoyed.

"Miss Eldridge, could I have carried out my wish I should have left this lovely home several days ago."

She had resumed her gouging of the earth at her feet, and for a minute seemed absorbed in the progress she was making. Then again she turned her face sideways and asked with a bright smile:

"Why?"

The officer would have been spitted before telling all that was in his mind.

"I am entirely recovered from my wound and could have gone before this. Instead I am in the unworthy position of an ablebodied soldier lingering in the rear when his country needs the service of every one of its sons."

She did not respond until she completed digging a ragged orifice a little farther in front of the hem of her dress. Then, still surveying the tiny pit, she said:

"Not your country, but your section."

"No, allow me—mine—your country, for such it is and shall be to the end of time."

How many southern girls would have permitted these words to pass unrebuked? To the majority, it would have proved the spark to the powder magazine.

Suppose he had uttered them to Miss Harriman? But no—the supposition was incredible.

He was frightened by his own temerity and looked questioning at her.

The gouging of the pointed wood had excavated a symmetrical orifice in the dirt. Several grains were flung over the toe of the Cinderella-like shoe. She firmed them off and continued digging, as if prompted by a definite purpose. Her face was grave, but she remained silent.

"Have my words given offense?" asked the Lieutenant with a pang of self reproach, while studying the perfect profile before him.

"No. I could not respect you were your sentiments different."

What a superb creature she was—a true daughter of the south and with the chivalry of Saladin or, what was the same, of General Arthur Eldridge himself!

He wanted to say a thousand things, but dared not trust himself to utter one of them. His voice, his looks, his manner would betray the truth, and that would be worse than a hundred deaths.

She was still leaning slightly forward, plying her diminutive spade, but she now stopped, sat upright and looked toward him.

"Lieutenant, let us not touch on that theme. It lies too close to the bleeding hearts of the south. I am glad you have recovered from your wound and what I say to you was suggested by my mother, not by myself."

All well and proper enough, but Lieutenant Oakman wished she had not told him.

He bowed, and she continued:

"I am a soldier's daughter and know the risk you incur in attempting to thread your way through our lines. It is impossible on foot, and you have no horse."

He again inclined his head.

"Then why not disguise yourself?"

"That seems hardly feasible, and you forget that I am on parole."

"But when your life is in peril you are justified in escaping. Leave to me to smooth away that feature. We have a uniform in our house that you can exchange for your own."

"Am I to do the myself in the garments of General Eldridge?" "It belongs not to him, but to Captain Trenholm of the Twenty-ninth Georgia cavalry. He left it in our care."

It was on the tongue of Lieutenant Oakman to ask who the mischief Captain Trenholm was that his personality should be intruded into their conversation. The information was like the grip of icy fingers on his throat, but for very shame he mastered himself.

"I fear the Confederate uniform will"

"I should have left this lovely home several days ago." not give me much protection, for I shall have too many difficult questions to answer. I am unfamiliar with the country and do not know which way to turn to seek my friends, while the whole journey would have to be made on foot."

"It would not." "Begging pardon, I cannot see the possibility of its being otherwise." "I will furnish you with a horse as fleet as your own Kentucky mare, that I heard you say could outspeed the wind."

"You!" exclaimed the amazed officer. "Impossible!" She smiled at his bewilderment and added: "Do you doubt me?" "I can doubt nothing you say, but—"

CHAPTER VIII. A NOTE OF WARNING.

"No, but I wonder." "What my warrant is for my pledge? Know then, my enemy, that we have hidden a few things beyond the reach of the marauders. My favorite pony has been concealed for months in the woods, where he can be found only by Pete, our faithful slave. I will have him brought to the house tonight and placed at your service; but remember," she hastened to add, reading the protest on his lips, "I expect you to return him to me if it be possible when he shall have served your purpose. Do as you choose about donning the uniform of Captain Trenholm."

"I accept your offer, and words fail me to express my gratitude." "Then oblige me by not hunting for the words. You will need a guide, and there is the real trouble," she said thoughtfully, "for there is no extra horse for him. Suppose I let Rastus conduct you for a few miles, after which you must rely upon your own discretion and the assistance of heaven."

"You are the general and I the private; therefore it is mine to obey. May I ask when I am to march?" "The sky is clear and the moon at its full. I do not know whether that is an advantage or not. You will start while the night is young unless—"

She hesitated and resumed nagging the earth with her parasol. "Unless what?" he asked gently. "It becomes necessary for you to go earlier. It is growing late. Let us enter the house."

He sighed, for there was much he wished to say, but could it interest her? He rose to his feet and walked by her side across the lawn to the porch in front of the mansion. Both were silent. He was on the point of making a commonplace remark when she started with the exclamation: "Why, what a surprise!"

A tall, bearded man in the faded uniform of a Confederate captain came hastily down the steps and, hat in hand, strode across the lawn. Catching the miss in his arms, he warmly embraced and kissed her. The faces of both glowed with delight, and for a brief minute they remained oblivious of the presence of the wondering, chagrined and—shall it be said—mentally tortured Union officer.

Then, recalling her forgetfulness, she presented Captain Wager Trenholm to Lieutenant Ledyard Oakman of the Union army. The Confederate officer extended his hand. "Happy to meet you, lieutenant! I learned a few days ago of your misfortune and also of your good fortune in being quartered at the home of General Eldridge."

"There can be no question of my good fortune. A son and brother could not have been treated with more kindness than I." "Which is all a matter of course, wherever this family is concerned. Nevertheless, I have come to inform you that you are no longer a prisoner." "How is that, captain?" The big, handsome soldier laughed heartily. "I have become so accustomed to being taken prisoner that it is growing slightly monotonous. I ten into the hands of a party of your folks the other day. Through Tim Masters and Jim Ackers, two of our scouts, word came to your people that you were staying at the house of General Eldridge, as a wounded and paroled prisoner. While it may not have been strictly en regle, the situation was so peculiar that an arrangement was made by which I was paroled and set free under the pledge that I should make the agreement known to you, and that upon your arrival within the Union lines the exchange would be completed and we could both straightway set to work to cut each other's throat—begging your pardon, Adele—with our aforetime vigor and honesty."

That, then, was the simplified situation. The exchange, so far as Captain Trenholm was concerned, was completed. All that remained was for Lieutenant Oakman to get back to his own lines, which might prove easy or impossible. Usage required that he should be provided with an escort, but in the general turmoil and confusion that was difficult, if not wholly out of the question.

But the captain in his breezy way suggested a solution: "I will give you a letter, signed by myself, certifying that you are a Union officer who has been regularly exchanged and is therefore entitled to safe conduct to your own lines. I am sure the presentation of that document to whomsoever stops you will be sufficient to clear the path."

"You are entitled to an escort," added the Confederate, "and it is quite likely one will be furnished you. I regret that, inasmuch as I have ridden the last ten miles alone, it is out of my power to aid you, but I am sure you will find my letter all that is needed in the way of a passport. You will remain with us a few weeks until fully recovered."

"Many thanks, captain, but I am now fully recovered." Miss Eldridge, who was looking into his countenance, remained silent. Strange that she did not unite in the request of her friend! It would have made no difference in the decision of the lieutenant, but he felt a pang of disappointment at this evidence of her indifference.

But why should she feel otherwise? She was a native Georgian, with her heart bound up in the triumph of southern independence. The man at her side was her hero. Their tastes, hopes, aspirations, prayers, dreams and longings were the same. The other had been sheltered at her home; but, all the same, he was an enemy.

It is the fashion for the story writer to make the wounded Union officer win the heart of the fiery southern girl. It was done many a time, but not always. "What warrant had I for any such grotesque hope?" Lieutenant Oakman asked himself. But for the coming of his rival he would never have confessed even to himself that he had ever held such a hope. "She and her mother felt a pity for me. That's all. This fellow is an infernal sight better looking than I. He's a Confederate. He gained her love long ago, and—bah!" he added in the acme of self disgust. "What a monumental ass I am making of myself!"

And he ground the bud to a pulp under his heel.

After the happy meal was finished the captain, overflowing with high spirits, moved to a stand at the side of the room and wrote with many flourishes the letter whose nature has already been made known. Folding it up, he addressed it in his large round hand, "To whom it may concern—greeting."

"There," he added in his genial fashion, "I am sure that will prove a coat of armor even if not quite in accordance with the usages of war."

"Many thanks. It cannot fail me," replied the lieutenant, accepting the document, which he placed securely in an inside pocket of his coat, after which

The captain wrote with many flourishes the letter. He resumed his seat, and the conversation went on. Mrs. Eldridge and her daughter beamed with pleasure, while the captain was entertaining in the highest degree. Oakman joined in the jest and smiles, but it was all forced, for he plainly saw the captain reach out and take the willing hand of the young lady

THE DEATH of Robert G. Ingersoll takes from this sphere one of the brightest and best known orators and wits this country has ever produced. Rated as an atheist and accordingly hated by thousands of his countrymen he was nevertheless to be admired for his sincere and gentlemanly remarks concerning his honest opinions. His outspoken ideas on religion alone prevented his reaching the top of the political ladder.

Must Die Next Week.

Governor Roosevelt has refused to take any action in the case of Rice and Kennedy, the two men under sentence of death at the prison. The electrocution is set for the week beginning July 31, and during next week the first double electrocution in this city will take place. Sing Sing prison has a double execution the same week and the electrocution will not take place here before the middle of the week.

Among the visitors who will be here at the electrocution is the superintendent of the Massachusetts State prisons. That State has adopted electrocution as the agent of the death penalty but so far no one has been killed. He comes here for information.

Kennedy has been receiving spiritual advise from Rev. J. J. Hickey, rector of the Holy Family church, and this afternoon he was baptised in the Catholic faith.

Rice's spiritual advisor is Chaplain Herrick.—Bulletin.

Base Ball Notes.
Tomorrow at 3 o'clock the Genoa boys will meet the crack team of the Auburn high school, on the Dolsen field. This is one of the Auburn city league teams and they play great ball 'tis said. The admission to this game is 15 cents, ladies 10 cents. The people enjoy good ball playing and should be willing to pay a little for it.

OPERA HOUSE BLOCK,

MORAVIA.

Nearly 58 Years Old!

It's a long life, but devotion to the true interests and prosperity of the American People has won for it new friends as the years rolled by and the original members of their family passed to their reward, and these admirers are loyal and steadfast
to-day, with their faith in its teachings, and confidence in the information which it brings to their homes and firesides.

As a natural consequence it enjoys in its old age all the vitality and vigor of its youth, strengthened and ripened by the experiences of over half a century. It has lived on its merits, and on the cordial support of progressive Americans.

It is the New York Weekly Tribune, acknowledged the country over as the leading National Family Newspaper.

Recognizing its value to those who desire all the news of the State and Nation, the publishers of THE GENOA TRIBUNE (your own favorite home paper) have entered into an alliance with the New York Weekly Tribune which enables them to furnish both papers at the trifling cost of $1.25 per year.

Every farmer and every villager owes to himself, to his family and to the community in which he lives a cordial support of his local newspaper, as it works constantly and untiringly for his interests in every way, brings to his home all the news and happening of his neighborhood, the doings of his friends, the condition and prospects for different crops, the prices in home markets, and, in fact, a weekly visitor which should be found in every wide-awake, progressive family.

Just think of it! Both of these papers for only $1.25 a year.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

A Review of What Has Transpired
of Public Interest.

Kansas City, July 24.—Blanche Davis
has sued her divorced husband, R. H.
Davis, for $10,000, alleging breach of promise to re-marry her.

Cape Town, July 24.—In the course of his reply to an address of welcome at Claremont, Cecil Rhodes declared that there was not the slightest chance of war between Great Britain and the Transvaal.

London, July 24.—The Western Electric Cable Company's establishment at Woolwich was destroyed by fire. The loss is £250,000. An American plant recently fitted up at the works was totally destroyed.

Hingham, Mass., July 24.—The Rev.
John W. Day, for nine years pastor of the First Unitarian Society of this place, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Church of the Messiah,
St. Louis. The salary is $7,000.

Springfield, Ohio, July 24.—Foster E.
Peck, nine-year-old son of E. W. Peck, living four miles east of this city, has died from lockjaw. It originated from a wound he got under the big toe of his right foot in stepping accidentally on a rusty nail.

San Francisco, Cal., July 24.—In interviews with 25 leading merchants
the opinion is expressed that General Otis should be supplanted by somebody like Miles, with 100,000 men, capable of crushing the Philippine rebellion.

Youngstown, Ohio, July 24.—Postmaster Shaffer has received a letter from President McKinley expressing sorrow over the death of Judge L. W.
King, of Youngstown. The President referred to King as a brave and able man.

Lancaster, Pa., July 24.—The warehouse of Philip Betz was destroyed by an incendiary fire and shortly afterward John Easley, a butcher occupying an adjoining property, was arrested as the incendiary. Betz told the police that he caught Easley in the act and seized him, but the man got away,
though Betz fired his revolver at him.
In his flight he left his hat behind. He was captured later.

Richmond, Ind., July 24.—Benjamin Simmons, a liveryman, shot and in all probability fatally wounded John E.
Webb, a freight brakeman on the Richmond division of the Pan-handle. Simmons used a shotgun, the full charge
taking effect in the abdomen of Webb,
and producing an immense wound,
through which the intestines protruded.
Bad feeling has existed between the men for some time.

Lynn, Mass., July 24.—The United States Government has begun preliminary surveys at Nahant for permanent fortifications on Bailey's Hill, the highest part of the peninsula. During the war with Spain the hill was occupied for temporary coast defence, and has since been used as a testing ground for the American Ordnance Company. The Government will compel the removal of the famous old Tri-mountain House.

Washington, July 24.—Admiral Dewey has filed suit in the District Court of the District of Columbia to recover the prize money due him and the officers and crews under him at Manila.
This is the regular course of procedure for the value of ships captured at the battles of New Orleans and Mobile Bay.

Anna, Ill., July 24.—Stella Burnell, aged fourteen, forged the name of George C. Parks, a druggist, and of her aunt, Miss Lulu Warner, to four notes, amounting to $190, at the First

Rushville, Ind., July 24.—Mahon Miller, a threshing machine owner, had a narrow escape from death in a peculiar manner near Moscow. Miller has a machine with one of the new blower attachments for automatic strawstacking. The blower was in need of repairs, and Miller crawled into the long pipe to adjust it. While in the blower the machine started, and was running at full speed in a few seconds. Pieces of Miller's clothing were wafted out on the strawstack by the blower, and the man on the stack stopped the machine. Miller was rescued with but little clothes on his body, an almost suffocated.

Altoona, Pa., July 24.—Frank Hier-geist, who died of smallpox, was to have been married this week. His brother John is dying of the same disease. His mother and two other members of the family are recovering. The people about Utahville, where there are nearly 100 cases, complain that the deputies appointed by the State Board of Health to preserve the quarantine break it themselves by making bicycle tours to surrounding towns. The State authorities have been notified. At Irvona, where a quarantine was established by the Board of Health,

one of the guards went to sleep at his post. A smallpox patient slipped out, stole the guard's gun and paraded the town, causing great excitement. He was finally captured.

Pine Bluff, Ark., July 24.—Information received here indicates that the negroes of Lake Village, Chicot County, have arisen against the white people of that vicinity. Lake Village is the county seat and is about twenty-five miles from a railroad. The negroes largely outnumber the white population. The home of B. Vinson, a white attorney, has been burned and the white people are arming themselves for self-protection. Mr. Vinson prosecuted and secured the conviction of a prominent negro named Lightfoot for larceny and Lightfoot's friends were offended and are inciting the negroes to riot.

It may be necessary for the Governor to send troops before the trouble is abated. Lake Village is in the extreme southern portion of Arkansas.

years he was politically known as Senator Burrows's right-hand man.

McMahan, the street-car motorman who was mistaken for a burglar in the act of breaking into Al Wheeler's house, and was shot by Peter Saeger,
a neighbor, died, and Saeger is in jail,
charged with murder.

General Griggs, who has been spending his vacation here, was called from a golf game by an urgent message from Washington. It is surmised that he is to be consulted by the President concerning Cabinet changes which General Alger's retirement will bring about.

Little Egg Harbor, N. J., July 24.—
The three-masted schooner Samuel E.
Wood ran ashore off this place during the night, and is high and dry, and flying distress signals. The Wood is rel over a game of craps near the Maysville Railroad bridge, near this city, Mike Connelly, a saloon keeper, was shot in the abdomen three times

by Forest Lang. The wounds will result fatally. Lang claims self-defense.

Munich, July 25.—There have been renewed disturbances at Augsburg, where the stone and brick masons are factory employing Italian workmen, were obliged to make repeated charges upon the rioters before they could be dispersed. Many of the mob were injured.

eral Wyman of the hospital service has cident which occurred when the vessel was launched.

Springfield, Ohio, July 25.—Will Wis-singer, the fifteen-year-old son of Charles Wissinger, of 22 East Mulberry street, this city, was drowned at Riverside Park. He fell off a toboggan in making a descent.

ther overtook them with a shotgun, Miss McCreesh, who walked twenty-eight miles to meet Mr. Johnson, who lor, in granting a divorce in the George Graft case, said each party was entitled to the decree from the evidence, cruelty and neglect. Graft is a promi-

DIED ALMOST A POOR MAN

Col. Ingersoll's Estate Consisted Principally of Life Insurance.

HAD SAVED BUT LITTLE.

He is Said to Have Spent and Given to Various Forms of Charity, Over $50,000 a Year.

So Far as Known He Left No Will—The Stricken Family Receives Hundreds of Messages of Condolence From All Parts of the World—Body May Be Cremated.

New York, July 25.—Col. Robert G. Ingersoll died a comparatively poor man. There is, it is said, an insurance of $100,000 on his life, that is all. Yet the great agnostic made from $50,000 to $60,000 a year every year since the war. But what he didn't spend on his family he gave away.

He had a moderate account at the Bank of New Amsterdam, in this city, but owned no real estate. If he left a will it cannot be found, though, of course, after the family recovers from the awful shock of his death the missing document, if there is one, may be found.

"I don't think the Colonel left a will," said his brother-in-law and private secretary, C. P. Farrell, at the Dobbs Ferry home. "If he did I don't know of it. Col. Ingersoll died poor. He was a great money-earner, but a poor money-saver. For years, perhaps thirty years, his income was immense. I can't recall any lawyer who is his equal at earning money. Others have made larger fees at times, but no lawyer's fees that I know of have run so high in the general average.

"He has not left any estate worth speaking of. His life was insured for his wife. Others have had the benefit of all that he earned in the law and in lecturing. What he did not spend on his loved ones he gave away in charity."

It needed not Mr. Farrell's word to prove Col. Ingersoll's constant thoughtfulness for his family. He knew he was ill—worse than he told a soul. He feared the worst. His physician, Dr. A. Alexander Smith, had told him that his trouble, angina pectoris, might carry him off at any moment. So he made all the provision he could in the short time that was vouchsafed to him.

The check sent by Col. Ingersoll will never be paid. It is a rule of New York banks not to cash any check of an individual depositor after his death.

To-day had been settled on for the funeral by the male members of the family, but widow and daughters forbade it. So it will take place Tuesday. It will be a private funeral. No one will be invited but those nearest and dearest the dead, and will be held at the home, in Dobbs Ferry.

The delay in fixing a time for the funeral had making necessary arrangements is due to Mrs. Ingersoll and the daughters, who still are inconsolable, and will not realize that Colonel Ingersoll is gone from them. Mrs. Ingersoll will not talk about a funeral, and will not consent to any detail of arrangements. Her grief is so intense she cannot bear to have the subject of her husband's body removed from the house broached to her.

It is possible that Col. Ingersoll's body may be cremated. He preferred that in life himself and his wish may be followed.

The stricken family have received hundreds of messages of condolence from all parts of the world.

Robert Green Ingersoll was born in Dresden, N. Y., on August 11, 1823. His father was a clergyman of views so broad as to cause frequent dissension between himself and his parish. Young Ingersoll's boyhood was spent in Wisconsin and Illinois, where the family removed in 1843.

After studying law, he opened an office in Shawneetown, Ill., with his brother, Eben, who was afterward elected a member of Congress. Both entered politics, but neither liked the small town, and in 1857 they went to live in Peoria.

Robert Ingersoll was, in 1860, a Democratic candidate for Congress, but failed of election. In 1862 he became Colonel of the Eleventh Illinois Cavalry, and soon afterward he joined the Republican party. In 1866 he was appointed Attorney-General of Illinois.

Mr. Ingersoll's political prominence dated from a speech he made at the Republican National Convention of 1876, nominating James G. Blaine for President, in which he likened Mr. Blaine to a "white-plumed knight of old." Since then he had made political speeches in many campaigns, his services being in great demand.

In 1877 Col. Ingersoll refused the post of Minister to Germany. He took part in many famous lawsuits, all over the United States, and was counsel for the so-called Star Route conspirators, who were acquitted in 1883.

Col. Ingersoll achieved notoriety by his constant and bitter attacks against the Christian religion. He gave lectures and wrote books and pamphlets against it. Among the publications were "The Gods" (Washington, 1878), "Ghosts" (1879), "Some Mistakes of Moses" (1879), "Lectures Complete" (1883), "Prose Poems and Selections" (1884), a large number of minor works, and introductory chapters for two books, entitled "Modern Thinkers," compiled by Martin Van Buren Denslow (Chicago, 1881), and "The Brain and the Bible," by Edgar C. Beall (Cincinnati, 1882).

TWO MURDERERS CAUGHT.

One of the Negroes Puts the Blame on His Partner.

Springfield, Mass., July 25.—James Russell and Robert Wade, two colored men who are thought to be the murderers of Rabbi Louis Grenzberg in Binghamton, N. Y., July 4, were arrested in this city by inspectors Boyle and Quilty. The inspectors have been watching for the men for several days, and thought they were in the city. A man answering Russell's description called at the post office for a letter, and the police were notified. The post office clerks were instructed to delay giving the man his mail if he called again, and to summon the police.

Russell called for his mail and within three minutes the police were notified and had arrested him. He was taken to the police station and made no resistance. Wade was found at a house in Eastern avenue.

Russell refused to talk, but Wade said that he lived opposite Grenzberg's shop in Binghamton and that he and Russell had a serray with Grenzberg, Russell doing most of the fighting.

Fighting 5-Cent Fares in Detroit.

Detroit, July 25.—The City Council, in special session, adopted a resolution declaring that the increasing of the street-railway fares to five cents straight was an unwarranted act of bad faith and a violation of law, and directed the city's legal department to begin legal proceedings against the companies to test the legality of the increase. Proceedings were authorized to enjoin the carrying of freight over the street-car tracks, and to determine the legality of the present working combination of the companies.

Syracuse to Sue the State.

Syracuse, July 25.—The big hoist bridge over the Erie Canal at Salina street, the principal business street in Syracuse, has been in the air and inoperative for a week and efforts to repair it have been futile. Mayor McGuire has directed the Corporation Council to bring an action against the State for damages on account of the interruption to traffic on the ground that the condition of the bridge is due to incompetence on the part of the State officers. The bridge was built last year at a cost of $35,000.

Railroad Telegraphers Talk Strike.

Lima, O., July 24.—For some time it has been known that the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton telegraph operators have been dissatisfied with their treatment by the company, and a meeting was held here. The session was secret. It was decided to demand the reinstatement of several operators who, it is alleged, were discharged without cause. If the demand is not granted the matter will be taken before the federation of the road's employes, with the demand that the entire federation strike if the men are not reinstated.

Drink of Water Cost Him His Life.

Philadelphia, July 24.—A drink of water cost Isaac H. Hartzell his life. The ice cooler at the Reading Railway's ferry slip on the Delaware River at the foot of Chestnut street stands on the edge of the wharf. Hartzell, who was a teamster, ran in a hurry to the cooler and stood there drinking. When he set the cup down he slipped, fell into the river and was drowned before help could reach him.

The Only Sure Cure for Rheumatism.

"I hobbled into Mr. Blackmon's Drug Store one evening," says Wesley Nelson of Hamilton, Ga., and he asked me to try Chamberlain's Pain Balm for rheumatism with which I had suffered for a long time. I told him that I had no faith in any medicine as they all failed. He says: 'Well if Chamberlain's Pain Balm does not help you you need not pay for it.' I took a bottle of it home and used it according to directions and in one week I was cured, and have not since been troubled with rheumatism. It is the quickest and only sure cure for rheumatism I have ever used." For sale by J. S. Banker.

ELIHU ROOT HAS ACCEPTED.

On Aug. 1 He Will Succeed General Alger as Secretary of War.

HE IS AN ABLE LAWYER.

The President Satisfied His Desire to Have an Experienced Attorney Occupy the Place.

Acceptance of the Post Received in Washington—Lynching of Italians in Louisiana May Seriously Disturb Relations Between the United States and Italy.

Washington, July 25.—Elihu Root of New York will succeed Gen. Alger as Secretary of War on Aug. 1. President McKinley has made the formal announcement of Mr. Root's appointment. The place was offered to Mr. Root by telegraph after a Cabinet council, and after Senator Platt had assured the President that Mr. Root would accept Mr. Root's reply, accepting the post, has been received.

Senator Platt has left Washington for New York. Speaking of the selection of Mr. Root, he said that the President desired an able lawyer for the Secretaryship. Had the President agreed to appoint a military man, Senator Platt said he felt sure Gen. Francis V. Greene would have been the choice. But as President McKinley was anxious to have a man who would be able to handle the many legal questions that might arise in the civic government of the new colonial possessions, he considered it more necessary to have a great lawyer than a great military man.

Secretary Alger's successor will not be restricted in any manner as to the head of the War Department. He will be consulted as much as possible, and all orders will be signed by him, but General Corbin will be the military chief of the Secretary and the President, and Secretary Root will of necessity have to be relieved of much of the routine involved in purely military charges.

In conducting the Philippine campaign the President will advise with the Secretary in all important matters, but Mr. Root will be a civilian among soldiers and ex-soldiers. Consequently his military judgment and activities will be limited.

The Lynching of Italians.

Washington, July 25.—The lynching of five Italians at Tallulah, La., is viewed with concern in official circles on account of the effect it may have on the relations between Italy and the United States. Officials recall that a similar affair, the lynching of men of the same nationality in the same State during the Administration of President Harrison, nearly caused a war between this country and Italy, and did result in the withdrawal from Washington of the Italian Minister. The affair at Tallulah is the third of its kind involving the relations between the Italian Government and that of the United States. Only a short time ago this Government paid indemnity to Italy for the killing by a mob of some Italian subjects in Colorado. It is believed here that the least that will result from the lynching at Tallulah will be the payment of heavy indemnity to Italy.

The seriousness with which the matter is viewed by the Italian authorities were indicated by the promptness of Italy in calling the lynching to the attention of the State Department.

Otis Refuses More Medical Aid.

Manila, via Hong Kong, July 25.—Chief Surgeon Woodhull considers that the increase in the military force in the Philippine Islands will necessitate the employment of forty additional surgeons. Surgeon Woodhull's recommendation to that effect has been disapproved by Major-General E. S. Otis, commanding the United States forces here. There are nearly three thousand soldiers in hospital. The official report last week showed 1,800 in hospital in Manila, and there are several hundred at San Fernando and other garrisons. There are also 275 sick in quarters in Manila. The regimental surgeons report that large numbers of soldiers on duty are unfit for service.

Plans to Crush Filipinos.

Washington, July 25.—The President and Adjutant General Corbin have already begun giving attention to plans for the campaign which is to be resumed in the Philippines as soon as the wet season nears an end. The hope is to make a complete finish of the Tagal insurrection within the months of October and November, if the weather will permit.

Acquitted Borda's Slayer.

Montevideo, July 24.—A jury has for the second time acquitted Avolino Arredondo, the murderer of President Idiarte Borda. Among the arguments brought forward in the prisoner's behalf was one that it was not proved that the President's death was caused directly by the shot, as no autopsy had been held on the body.

Choynski Defeats McCormack.

Chicago, July 24.—"Joe" Choynski, of California, got the decision over "Jack" McCormack, a Philadelphia heavyweight, here at the end of a six round contest. Choynski was knocked down in the first round, but from that until the sixth he had a decided advantage.
