CORPSES LINE GALVESTON'S STREETS

The City Is Still Flooded—Vessels Blown Far Beyond High Water—Mark-Whole Families Are Wiped Out of Existence.

HOUSTON, Sept. 11.—Richard Spilane, a well known Galveston newspaper man, who reached Houston after a terrible experience, gives the following account of the disaster at Galveston:

"The city is in ruins, and the dead will number probably 5,000. I am just from the city, having been commissioned by the mayor and citizens' committee to get in touch with the outside world and appeal for help. Houston was the nearest point at which working telegraph instruments could be found, the wires as well as nearly all the buildings between here and the gulf of Mexico being wrecked.

"When I left Galveston, the people were organizing for the prompt burial of the dead, distribution of food and all necessary work after a period of disaster.

"The wreck of Galveston was brought about by a tempest so terrible that no words can adequately describe its intensity and by a flood which turned the city into a raging sea. The weather bureau records show that the wind attained a velocity of 84 miles an hour when the measuring instrument blew away, so it is impossible to tell what was the maximum. The storm began at 2 o'clock Saturday morning. Previous to that a great storm had been raging in the gulf, and the tide was very high. The wind at first came from the north and was in direct opposition to the force from the gulf. While the storm in the gulf piled the water up on the beach side of the city the north wind piled the water from the bay on to the bay part of the city.

"About noon it became evident that the city was going to be visited with disaster. Hundreds of residences along the beach front were hurriedly abandoned, the families fleeing to dwellings in higher portions of the city. Every home was opened to the refugees, black or white. The winds were rising constantly, and it rained in torrents. The wind was so fierce that the rain cut like a knife.

"By 3 o'clock the waters of the bay and gulf met, and by dark the entire city was submerged. The flooding of the electric light plant and the gas plants left the city in darkness. To go upon the streets was to court death. The wind was then at cyclonic velocity, roofs, cisterns, portions of buildings, telegraph poles and walls were falling, and the noise of the wind and the crashing of the buildings were terrifying in the extreme. The wind and waters rose steadily from dark until 1:45 o'clock Sunday morning. During all this time the people of Galveston were like rats in traps. The highest portion of the city was four to five feet under water, while in the great majority of cases the streets were submerged to a depth of ten feet. To leave a house was to drown. To remain was to court death in the wreckage. Such a night of agony has seldom been equaled. Without apparent reason the waters suddenly began to subside at 1:45 a. m. Within 20 minutes they had gone down two feet, and before daylight the streets were practically freed of the flood waters. In the meantime the wind had veered to the southeast.

"Very few if any buildings escaped injury. There is hardly a habitable dry house in the city. When the people who had escaped death went out at daylight to view the work of the tempest and the floods, they saw the most horrible sights imaginable. In the three blocks from Avenue N to Avenue P in Tremont street I saw eight bodies. Four corpses were in one yard.

"The whole of the business front for three blocks in from the gulf was stripped of every vestige of habitation, the dwellings, the great bathing establishments, the Olympia and every structure having been either carried out to sea or its ruins piled in a pyramid far into the town, according to the vagaries of the tempest.

"The first hurried glance over the city showed that the largest structures, supposed to be the most substantially built, suffered the greatest.

"The Orphans' home, Twenty-first street and Avenue M, fell like a house of cards. How many dead children and refugees are in the ruins could not be ascertained.

"Of the sick in St. Mary's infirmary, together with the attendants, only eight are understood to have been saved.

"The Old Woman's home, on Rosenberg avenue, collapsed, and the Rosenberg schoolhouse is a mass of wreckage. The Ball high school is but an empty shell, crushed and broken. Every church in the city, with possibly one or two exceptions, is in ruins.

"At the forts nearly all the soldiers are reported dead, they having been in temporary quarters which gave them no protection against the tempest or the flood.

"No report has been received from the Catholic Orphan asylum down the island, but it seems impossible that it could have withstood the hurricane. If it fell, all the inmates were no doubt lost, for there was no aid within a mile.

"The bay front from end to end is in ruins. Nothing but piling and the wreck of great warehouses remain. The elevators lost all their superworks, and their stocks are damaged by water.

"The life saving station at Fort Point was carried away, the crew being swept across the bay 14 miles to Texas City.

"I saw Captain Haines, and he told me that his wife and one of his crew were drowned.

City. In addition to the living and the dead which the storm cast up at Texas City caskets and coffins from one of the cemeteries at Galveston were being fished out of the water there.

"In the business portion of the city two large brick buildings, one occupied by Knapp Bros. and the other by the Cotton Exchange saloon, collapsed. In the Cotton Exchange saloon there were about 15 persons. Most of them escaped.

"How many more corpses there are will not be known until the search is finished.

"The cotton mills, the bagging factory, the gas works, the electric light works and nearly all the industrial establishments of the city are either wrecked or crippled. The flood left slime about one inch deep over the whole city, and unless fast progress is made in burying corpses and carcasses of animals there is danger of pestilence.

"Some of the stories of the escapes are miraculous. William Nisbett, a cotton man, was buried in the ruins of the Cotton Exchange saloon and when dug out in the morning had no further injury than a few bruised fingers.

"Dr. S. O. Young, secretary of the Cotton Exchange, was knocked senseless when his house collapsed, but was revived by the water and was carried ten blocks by the hurricane.

"A woman who had just given birth to a child was carried from her home to a house a block distant, the men who were carrying her having to hold her high above their heads, as the water was five feet when she was moved.

"Many stories were current of houses falling and inmates escaping. Clarence N. Ousley, editor of The Evening Tribune, had his family and the families of two neighbors in his house, when the lower half crumbled and the upper part slipped down into the water. Not one in the house was hurt.

"Of the Lavine family six out of seven are reported dead. Of the Burnett family only one is known to have been saved. The family of Stanley G. Spencer, who met death in the Cotton Exchange saloon, is reported to be dead.

"The Mistrof House, in the west end, was turned into a hospital. All of the regular hospitals of the city were unavailable. Of the new Southern Pacific Works little remains but the piling. Half a million feet of lumber was carried away, and Engineer Roschke says as far as the company is concerned it might as well start over again.

"Eight ocean steamers were torn from their moorings and stranded in the bay. The Kendall Castle was carried over the flats, Thirty-third street wharf to Texas City, and lies in the wreckage of the Inman pier. The Norwegian steamer Gyller is stranded between Texas City and Virginia Point. An ocean liner was swirled around through the West bay, crashed through the bay bridges and is now lying in a few feet of water near the wreckage of the railroad bridges. The steamship Taunton was carried across Pelican point and is stranded about ten miles up the East bay. The Mallory steamer Alamo was torn from her wharf and dashed upon Pelican flats and against the bow of the British steamer Red Cross, which had previously been hurled there. The stern of the Alamo is stove in, and the bow of the Red Cross is crushed.

"Down the channel to the jetties two other ocean steamships lie grounded. Some schooners, barges and smaller craft are strewn bottom side up along the slips of the piers. The tug Louise of the Houston Direct Navigation company is a wreck. It will take a week to tabulate the dead and the missing and to get anything near an approximate idea of the monetary loss. It is safe to assume that one-half of the property of the city is wiped out and that one-half of the residents have to face absolute poverty."

McKinley Vs. Bryan

[Syracuse Herald.]

It is a curious fact that the Democratic and anti-imperialist partisans who accuse President McKinley of a sinister desire to usurp extra-constitutional power and imperial authority are the very men who on other occasions sneer at the President as a milk-and-water executive, as having no mind or stamina of his own, as being altogether too pliant to influences surrounding him, particularly that of Mark A. Hanna. Is it not passing strange that a man who is so timid and spineless as our Democratic friends represent McKinley to be should not be satisfied with the vast authority and responsibility of the Presidency, but should actually covet the power of an imperial dictator and tyrant?

Of course, these two views of McKinley are entirely and ridiculously antagonistic. In a letter in the New York Evening Post, Charlton T. Lewis, who has bitterly opposed the Philippine policy of the administration, announces his intention of supporting McKinley in preference to Bryan, and he riddles the theory that President McKinley has in him the making of an imperial despot. Mr. Lewis truthfully declares that "there is nothing in his (McKinley's) character or history to suggest a wish on his part for any power but that of an elected or Constitutional Executive." He furthermore asserts that if the President has any fault it is "the weakness with which he has so often surrendered his own convictions of duty and policy to the pressure of a passing phase of popular feeling or of apparent party expediency;" and that, so far from the President having a lust for foreign conquest, if he had his way we should have had no war with Spain and no battle of Manila at all.

Obviously, William McKinley is not of the stuff of which Presidents who may become dangerous to a people or a country are made. Can as much be said for Bryan? Turning to Mr. Bryan, this anti-imperialist writer continues:

Had McKinley proclaimed his sympathy with the most dangerous revolt against equal rights and civil order which our Northern states have ever known, and denounced the government for asserting its right of way for its mails and its inter-State traffic against local rioters and murderers; had he gone into a State in which a faction of his party had enacted fraud and sanctioned violence in order to rob the people of their votes, and demanded that the entire party should for his sake adopt the crime; had he undertaken as Chief Magistrate to pack the Supreme court, in order to make its judgments conform to his policy; had he used his ascendancy over his partisans to force them, against their better judgment, to advocate national repudiation and dishonor, in order to win the aid of a more violent faction, we should regard him, perhaps, as a stronger, but certainly as a more dangerous, President than he is. * * * All these things Mr. Bryan has done or pledged himself to do, and no man who is capable of any of these acts is fit for a place of honor or power in the republic.

The more that wavering voters consider the subject the more clearly they will see that their interests will be in no danger, from so called imperialism or militarism or any other cause, while William McKinley is President. An executive who is so anxious to please the people, to study and follow the currents of popular thought, is disqualified by his temperament and tendencies to serve as an instrument for the overthrow of our republican system. There never was a more cautious and conservative President than McKinley. To trick him out as an aspirant to imperial honors and a plotter for imperial conquest, is to affront the sober common sense of the American people.

The Lane That Had No Turning.

Since adventuring into Egypt in quest of the raw material of which fiction is made, Mr. Gilbert Parker's Canadian fields have been lying fallow. He returns to them, however, with new vigor, and even fuller power; and the serial which he has just completed finds him at the highest dramatic level to which he has yet attained.

"The Lane That Had no Turning" is remarkable for its honest strength, thorough originality, and absorbing interest. The scene of the story is Pontiac (whether Valmond came), and the period the middle fifties. The leading characters are Madeline, a famous singer, and her husband, Seignior of Pontiac, for whom she dares all and risks all. The story gains interest as it progresses and concludes with a striking and wholly unexpected finale.

"The Lane That Had no Turning" will begin in The Saturday Evening Post for Sept. 29, and run through five numbers.

Trusses fit when we do the fitting. There is an extensive assortment here and we select the best style for each case. Prices vary from $1 to $5.

A SUNDAY IN A FOREST.

Lord, we on this Thy day would worship Thee,
While stately trees, like mighty harps Touched by the winds, send forth their harmony,
And birds sing praise in chorus sweet,
While flowers blooming at our feet,
Lift up their heads towards the sun and Thee.
All voices blend, all colors harmonize,
All forms are graceful in the earth and skies;
The spanning dome which stretches over all;
The clouds which float, like vessels, rise
and fall
Upon the sky's deep sea—these are but signs
Which tell us, Lord, of Thee.
Though voiceless these inanimate do
sing,
And we far more have cause for fervent praise,
While birds their sweetest songs are carolling,
With swelling hearts, we would our voices raise.
Wake then, my soul, pour forth thy song
of love,
This is thy Father's house and He is here,
The sweetest song which angels sing
above,
Is not more sweet unto thy Father's ear.
—G. A. Warburton, in N. Y. Observer.

THE ETHICS OF SUICIDE.

To Take One's Own Life Is Neither Sensible Nor Moral, Says Count Leo Tolstol.

There is just now such an alarming increase of suicides that all who have the temporal and eternal interests of mankind at heart should consider ways of stopping this form of stupid iniquity.

To take one's own life is neither sensible nor moral.

Life in reality is indestructible. Life is not confined to time or space. Life is everlasting.

Death at the utmost can only change life's outward form, shortening its existence in this world.

As to life's abbreviation in this world, what guarantee have I that its spiritual resurrection in the hereafter will be more pleasant and congenial? How do we know that we will, after destroying our own bodies, be enabled to attain for our "ego" that which we can attain here below?

Moreover—and this is most important—it is senseless to lay hands on our own lives, driven by some form of discontentment, because we assert by this act that we have a thoroughly false conception of the significance of life itself.

Most bestial is the idea that life has been vouchsafed to us only and alone for carnal and mental enjoyment and pleasure. Life is given us for our self-perfection and in order that we may be enabled to serve mankind collectively.

All work, everything we undertake, appears disagreeable, sometimes mountain high. Obstacles abash us, dangers inspire fear, disappointments discourage us, misfortunes bring despair.

Nevertheless, suicide is foolish and immoral, because only a coward lays down his weapons in battle and flees, rushing perhaps into greater peril.

Suicide is immoral because life has been granted us until the time when we shall die a natural death, and with the proviso that we serve all men, and not to tire of it when we can no longer please our own flesh and mind.

In the desert of Optina a lame, paralyzed monk lay suffering for 30 years. He could only use his left arm. Physicians declared that the poor man was suffering untold tortures, but he never uttered a word of complaint, his eyes ever uplifted toward an image of the Virgin Mary at the foot of his bed. Thousands visited the bedridden sufferer, and it is difficult to compute the amount of good done by this humble, uncomplaining servant of God.

The monk thanked God every day for the little spark of life maintained in him.

This unfortunate monk, I claim, did more good than the thousands upon thousands of happy, healthy people who boast of helping their fellow men in the various charitable institutions.

As long as we live we can perfect our own selves and serve one another, and we only serve others by perfecting ourselves in this world and in the world to come.—Count Leo Tolstol, in N. Y. World.

Serving Without Recognition.

Unselfishness seeks no human recognition. To do good to those who do not appreciate it, to serve those who will never even know by whom the service was rendered, are marks of true unselfishness. Whether our service is recognized or not is of small consequence. But it is of consequence for us to make sure that our service is freely rendered without thought of recognition.—S. S. Times.

Some Questions

Asked at our Fair Exhibit.
"Do you pay freight to our nearest depot?" We do, and we make no charge for crating or bur-lapping.

"Can we order by mail?" Yes, indeed, and be dead sure you pay exactly the same as though you came to our store. We have ONE PRICE for all, no difference who or where you are. Can you not see that with one price strictly adhered to, we must be absolutely sure that we are on rock bottom? We "THROW IN" nothing, not even suspenders or an extra pair of shoestrings.

"Will you send us Pictures, Photographs, etc., on application?" We will.

"Will you figure on a job which will come to $10,000, more or less, for a hospital in a large Western city, most of the Furniture to be specially constructed?" Bet you we will; last week we finished deliveries on a job for a corporation, not a thousand miles from Cornell University Campus, where the items of Desks and Dressers alone numbered over 200, all of which were specially constructed. We know where every factory in the United States is, what each can do, and, having been associated for a term of years with the New England Furniture & Carpet Co. of Minneapolis, the largest housefurnishing establishment in the West, which possibly outfits more Hotels, Hospitals and Public Institutions than any other house in the country, it is fair to suppose that we can furnish goods, make prices and render service which will be satisfactory.

—On this page will be found an announcement from Loomis & Parker the well known dealers in farm implements, vehicles and horse furnishings. They have a great stock and are good fellows to deal with. Notice their ad from week to week. —J. W. Blackwell of Lodi was in town Monday. He had a team and lumber wagon, a sewing machine and large chair, and had driven thro' from New Woodstock Sunday, a distance of some 50 miles. We understand that he took the property in default of payment on a chattel mortgage.

—Mrs. S. Howe was called to Cortland Monday by the serious illness of her sister, Mrs. Lucretia Humphrey, who died Wednesday morning. The funeral will be held today at 1 o'clock. Miss Susan Howe, who arrived Monday evening to spend some time at home, went to Cortland this morning to attend the funeral.

—Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Kinney of Cortland stopped in town for a short time Monday. They were taking a trip on their locomobile, having been to Syracuse, Auburn and Union Springs and expected to go to Ludlowville and Freeville and on to Cortland. The locomobile attracted considerable attention as it was the first vehicle of its kind to pass thro' Genoa.

—The drouth continues. Wells containing plenty of good water are indeed a rare thing. Farmers have to draw water for their stock and nearly every family in town is getting along on half rations. The Hubert mill shut down Monday night, there not being enough water in the creek to make steam in the boiler. Did any body ever drill for a flowing well in this valley?

—An invitation is extended to all to be present at the Dryden fair on Wednesday, September 19th, when there will be married by Rev. R. W. MacCullough, D. D., Ph. D., in front of the grand stand, a high school graduate and a business man, their names to be announced at the time of the ceremony. Messrs. Beard & Peck of Cortland have charge of this interesting event, and are the donors of the $50 parlor suite as a wedding gift.

—A meeting of the Woman's Missionary society of the Presbyterian church will be held on Saturday at 3 p. m. at the home of Mrs. Slocum, instead of Mrs. Hagin, as announced Sunday. Subject, "Japan." All are welcome to attend this, and all other services of the church. The new singing books just purchased for use in the Sunday school are very pleasing to both the younger and older —The days of ice cream soda are nearly over.

—Ray Bower made a business trip to Skaneateles the first of the week. —Ray Bower and sister, having purchased the Orr place near Skaneateles, will take possession Oct. 1st. —A dance has been announced for Friday evening, Sept. 21, at the rink in this village, under the auspices of the baseball team. Music will be furnished by Lanterman's orchestra.
