Proverbs

"When the butter won't come put a penny in the churn," is an old time dairy proverb. It often seems to work though no one has ever told why.

When mothers are worried because the children do not gain strength and flesh we say give them Scott's Emulsion.

It is like the penny in the milk because it works and because there is something astonishing about it.

Scott's Emulsion is simply a milk of pure cod liver oil with some hypophosphites especially prepared for delicate stomachs.

Children take to it naturally because they like the taste and the remedy takes just as naturally to the children because it is so perfectly adapted to their wants.

For all weak and pale and thin children Scott's Emulsion is the most satisfactory treatment.

We will send you the penny, i. e., a sample free.

Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

Warden Mead Resigns.

J. Warren Mead, agent and warden of the Auburn State prison, has tendered his resignation to take effect February first. It is understood that the close confinement and exacting duties of the position have quite undermined the warden's health, and makes his action necessary. His management of the prison affairs has been thoroughly businesslike and eminently satisfactory. His successor has not yet been named but he will undoubtedly be an Auburn man. Hon. John P. Jaeckel has been mentioned as a possible candidate for the position.

Arnold—McLaury.

FROM THE COOPERSTOWN FARMER.

A very pretty home wedding was that at the residence of Supervisor and Mrs. W. B. McLaury, near Milford, on Wednesday afternoon, when their daughter Frances Elvira was united in wedlock with Leon Vance Arnold. Promptly at two o'clock the bridal pair entered the spacious parlors to the strains of Wagner's wedding march by Miss Alta Dalton, and took position beneath an arch of evergreen decorated with mountain ash. The ceremony by the Rev. C. A. Frear was beautiful and impressive, made especially so by the soft accompanying tones of the piano. The ushers were the bride's brother, Guy McLaury, and her cousin, D. W. McLaury.

The bride wore a gown of shirred white lansdown, with pearl trimming and veil, and carried a boquet of white carnations. The groom wore the conventional black.

The presents were many, costly and useful, consisting of silver, cut glass, china, linen and cash, and evinced the high esteem in which the contracting parties are held. The gift of the groom was a beautiful gold watch.

After congratulations by the 125 guests present came the repast in keeping with the occasion. The tables were decorated with smilax and red and white carnations and above the bride's table was suspended a beautiful wedding bell tastily festooned with red ribbon.

Guests were present from Maryland, Milford, Oneonta, Kortright, Colliers, Milford Center and Portlandville. The wedding trip will include Binghamton and Syracuse, thence to Waterloo, where Mr. Arnold has a lucrative position as teacher, and where they will reside. The good wishes of a multitude of friends will follow them and abide with them.

And you do not realize what it means until you are in its grasp. Blood is life, bad blood is death, and bad blood paves the way for every possible disease. Good health is the best safeguard against disease. A doctor goes into all kinds of diseases and is not attacked as long as he keeps himself well. A priest is at the bedside of the dying with the doctor and is rarely sick, because he keeps himself well. You can be just as free from danger if you keep well. YOUR BLOOD is the vital principle. The Housewife's Afternoon Nap.

Nearly every housewife tries to take a rest, and a nap if possible in the afternoon, but few accomplish it. Mere lying down is not resting; in fact, it is easier to rest sitting than lying down. If one does not understand how to rest properly, and the woman who does not relax when she lies down cannot rest no matter how long she lies, says Sam A. Hamilton, in Good Housekeeping. To relax properly, lie at full length on the back with the head level with the body, the arms extended slightly from the body, and the feet separated some six inches. The clothing should be loose, if lying on a couch, but it is best to undress and get into bed. Start with long breaths of the kind known as "abdominal breathing," followed by upper chest breathing. Keep this up for a few minutes only, and then beginning with the head relax all the muscles the whole length of the body, that is, release the tension on them, so that if feet or hands were lifted they would fall to the bed as if they were logs of wood. It is not very difficult to relax the muscles of the arms and legs, but it takes patient practice to relax the muscles of the back, thorax and breast, but by persistent effort it can be accomplished. When all the muscles are relaxed the person feels as if she were floating in the air, there is no sense of weight. Now an effort should be made to relax the mind. This cannot be done as some have recommended by "thinking of nothing"—an impossibility—but it can be done by directing the mind to the latest pleasant thing that has occurred, conning it over repeatedly, and it will not require many repetitions to send one into a deep, baby-like sleep—the kind that rests, and from which one awakes refreshed, and with every nerve tuned in unison to the work ahead. Try it.

Japan's Industrial Activity.

Since the beginning of hostilities Japan has bought 33 steamers of more than 85,800 aggregate tonnage and chartered 76 vessels with a total tonnage of 161,800. The Japanese Toyo Kisen Kaisha, or steamship company, has declared its usual dividend of 12 per cent. The company is to construct two 15,000-ton passenger steamships. Instead of ordering these from some British or German shipbuilding company, the raw material will be bought and sent to Nagasaki and the ships built by the Japanese shipbuilding company at that port. In spite of the war no less than eight steamers are now under construction at the Mitsu Bishi dockyard and engine works at Nagasaki, Japan. One of these is for the Seattle service, and will be launched in November—6,000 tons. Five of the others are for service in the China seas. Japan is buying the locomotives for the Korean railroads exclusively in the United States, chiefly because of more speedy delivery. It is favoring England and the United States in the purchase of material for the new waterworks of Yokohama. England is particularly favored for material for shipbuilding and naval equipment. The large war vessels built for Japan in Germany were ordered to England for their armament. Cheap living is no longer the order of the day in Japan. Small houses rent for $25 a month. German 2½-cent cigars cost 13 cents. Beer is 18 to 25 cents a bottle.

Long Step Toward Peace.

Among the hundreds of thousands of American citizens who decry the awful influences and effects of war, the information that the negotiation of an arbitration treaty between this country and France may be followed by similar peace contracts with Germany and Great Britain will be received with enthusiasm, says the Chicago Sun. No better sign of the times and the desire of the great nations of the world for peace and the prosperity that invariably follows is at hand than this disposition to take steps to avert possible war. Slowly but surely the peoples of the earth are getting away from this one great relic of barbarism. The time may never come when war will be a thing of the past, and no longer called in as a means of settlement of the last resort, but it is reasonable to hope that arbitration treaties will have the effect of reducing the danger of war to the minimum and forcing disputing powers to exhaust all other means before the dogs of war are turned loose. It is a matter of satisfaction to Americans that, although this country is young in years, it is old in experience and wisdom, thus becoming one of the foremost factors in bringing about conditions that are steps toward the time of universal peace.

Mrs. Fisk, of "Becky Sharp" fame, is out with a letter condemning the shipment of cattle in stock cars during the severe weather of winter time. With the maternal observer's usual degree of determination she advises that either the cattle be shipped after they are dressed or else provide suitable canvases for the exposed sides of the shipping cars.

A GOOD BARN FRAME.

Here Is a Plan by Which All Posts Are Kept from the Floor Space.

The following excellent plan for a barn frame was recently submitted by Mr. Adam Roth, of Ontario, to the Canadian Farmers' Advocate:

"Because of its slanting purline posts, this plan is commonly called the bridge beam. In most of the barns the posts are vertical. Too many upright posts in a barn floor are a hindrance, especially in small barns built when timber is plentiful. According to the proposed plan not a single post is on the barn floor. A team and wagon is able to be turned at any spot.

PLAN OF BARN FRAME

"Not only is a barn constructed in this way more convenient, but also stronger. A frame made on the square basis is more apt to give to one side. Supposing we wanted to prop up something heavy, say a sawlog, we would not put a square under it, but a triangle. The slant purline posts serve the same purpose as do the slant ends of a bridge. We read a great deal of barns blowing down or being broken down by snow. The storms are becoming more and more severe as the forests are cut down, and the thinner the forests the weaker the timber used; thus we want to give each foot of lumber its proper place, where it has the greatest opportunity to resist pressure, and also place timber where it is most needed. The times are past when oak, pine and beach logs two feet in diameter and 30 or 40 feet long were used.

"The timber used in this plan is 10x10 throughout the whole frame. The end posts A B are 18 feet long; the bottoms of these are framed into the ends of C & E; the purline posts are 33 feet long, and are slightly grooved in C to prevent them from slipping at the bottom. It is necessary that C be one long log, or if in two pieces they must be well joined, so as to hold the bottoms of D and E firm. F, the cross beam, is 33 feet six inches long. This beam is kept firm by double braces at the bottom; these braces should be about eight feet long. G G are two plank draw braces, inlaid in D and F and E F; then two bolts put through at each end. By having G G fastened in this way they have a double purpose, both as braces and draw-braces. The rafters are two feet apart and 16 feet long. The rafters only reach to the top of the plate marked H. Short rafters, 18 inches long, are nailed against the others, with a four-inch rise at the bottom. After the sheeting and shingles are put on the end roof has a bell shape appearance.

"The three or four inner beams of the barn should be made on the above plan, while the outside ones have to be made with upright purlines in order to nail on the sheeting."

STOCK SUGGESTIONS.

When fed dry, shelled corn is more economical than corn meal to feed to fattening hogs.

Desirable breeding qualities in a herd are fixed by a long line of careful selection and breeding.

A sheep adapted to every section and to every breeder's surroundings cannot be grown in the same animal.

When an all-corn ration is fed to growing pigs the muscles of the body do not develop to their normal size.

To secure the best results care should be taken to feed the hogs according to age, conditions and time of marketing.

In selecting breeding stock it is an item to know whether they are from a family noted for fertility, as this is an inherited quality.

Do not think that rough usage will cure a horse of the shying habit. He soon associates the one with the other and becomes hard to control.

House the Sheep Early.

I begin feeding early as a shrinkage in the fall is double loss. A little feed in the early winter will produce substantial gains, while the lack of it will result in a decided loss. There is no time in the year that you get more for your grain than in the early winter.

Keep the flock sheltered from all storms at this season, putting them in the barn merely to shelter them from the wind and storms and not to keep them warm. Keep all doors open, yet avoid drafts. This keeps the barn at nearly the same temperature as the outdoor air. Keep the sheep dry and prevent drafts and you need not worry about the cold.—D. D. Deeds, in Farm and Home.

Linseed-Meal for Horses.

When horses are not thrifty it may be due to sameness of diet. A pint of linseed-meal three times a week will "loosen the hide," and the animal will soon show the effects of such an addition to the food. If the bowels are affected by the linseed-meal reduce the supply.—Midland Farmer.

A REAL DAUGHTER OF THE REVOLUTION

By CAROLINE GEBHARDT.

Copyright, 1902, by J. B. Lippincott Company.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—Story opens on Ellery plantation in South Carolina in time of American revolution. Col. Bessemer and British dragoons arrive and ask accommodation of Miss Jane Ellery in the absence of her father and mother who are tories. During breakfast the officers are disturbed by firing, and an American officer dashes through the lines and disappears in the woods.

CHAPTER II.—Storm delays departure of British soldiers, and Col. Bessemer, quite willing to remain in the company of Miss Ellery. During dinner a strange figure with black face and covered with long coat, enters dining-room and gives Miss Ellery a note.

CHAPTER III.—British officers startled by appearance of stranger, but did not recognize in him Capt. Worthington, who they much wished to capture. He was a patriot lover of Miss Ellery. That night the British were attacked at the Ellery plantation, and many of them killed and wounded.

CHAPTER IV.—Miss Ellery starts on a visit to her aunt, a patriot. Capt. Worthington meets her on the road. They quarrel because of his night attack on her guests at her home which was led by him. He tells her that Col. Bessemer boasts of his engagement to her.

CHAPTER V.—Capt. Worthington prevents Miss Ellery from falling into a trap set for the British. She accused him of being a party to the wicked plot, and ordered him never to visit her again. Two months later Col. Bessemer and his dragoons, among the officers of which was her brother, again visited her home during the presence of her father and step-mother.

CHAPTER VI.—Col. Bessemer proposes to Miss Ellery and is to have his answer later—possibly when he has returned from a campaign against Col. Sumter.

CHAPTER VII.—Bessemer surprises Sumter's troops and captures a number of them. In the evening he and his troops return to the Ellery plantation where a mysterious prisoner of some rank is lodged in the house for safe keeping. The officers entertain the loyalists of the neighborhood at a ball in the evening. One of the guests tells Bessemer of Worthington's love for Miss Ellery.

CHAPTER VIII.—While Bessemer is accusing Miss Ellery of being in love with a rebel his soldiers bring in another captive whom she recognizes as Capt. Worthington.

CHAPTER IX.—It is then a few minutes past midnight, and Bessemer orders the prisoner to be hung at one o'clock.

CHAPTER X.—Miss Ellery plans means for the escape of this last prisoner, but as but one could escape by her ruse Worthington insisted that Gen. Pierce, captured at the surprise of Sumter's troops, be the one to go.

CHAPTER XI.—Miss Ellery plans another method for the escape of Worthington, and impersonates her brother by dressing in one of her brother's uniforms. She then gives the captain of the guard orders supposedly coming from Bessemer to go at once to a threatened point of attack, she volunteering to guard the prisoner.

CHAPTER XII.—Worthington fails to escape, and Miss Ellery is caught by Bessemer in her brother's uniform. She then purchases the prisoner's life, but not his liberty, by promising to marry Bessemer at any time he wishes to name.

CHAPTER XIII.—Miss Ellery left home at night and went to her aunt's. The British troops left the following morning taking with them Worthington. They were ambushed by Americans and Worthington released by his comrades. Bessemer finds Miss Ellery at her aunt's and demands that she marry him at once. When the ceremony is about to be performed the Americans again attack and the ceremony is interrupted.

CHAPTER XIV.—Capt. Worthington visits Miss Ellery at her home and asks her to marry him. She tells him she is engaged to Bessemer and that she did not save his life because she loved him.

"JANE!" HE CRIED, HOLDING OUT BOTH HANDS.

CHAPTER XIV.

HE DID A-WOOING GO.

It was the second evening after the Americans had so cleverly given the British the slip that Capt. Worthington set forth from his father's house. The captain's continental uniform had been laid aside, and he was attired in the most approved riding costume for gentlemen of that day. His high-top boots so shone that you could have used them for mirrors with the greatest ease; his knee-breeches were of finest broadcloth; the frills of his shirt were beautifully pinked, while the playful evening breeze toyed with his open coat just enough to display its rich crimson lining. Those who had seen him two days before would scarce have thought he could turn out such a fop.

When he reached the Ellery place and dismounted to open the great gates which led to the avenue the sun was just sinking behind the strip of woodland to the west, while such of the west windows of the mansion as were closed blushed brilliant red under the ardor of its good-night kiss.

The low branches of the handsome elms bent towards him with murmurous greeting; a toad hopped from out the bordering grass and looked up at him with beady, friendly eyes; a dog came from around the house and ran towards him with joyously wagging tail and gay bark. All bespoke a gracious welcome. When he reached the front door there was no need to lift the heavy knocker, for Gabriel had caught sight of him from somewhere within and hastened to meet him, while Absalom came to take his horse, a great concession, Godfrey knew.

"Yes, sah, Massa Godfrey, Missy Jane am home, sah," Gabriel declared, too sure of the fact to wait to ask his young mistress about it.

Godfrey, anticipating a better opportunity for private converse with Jane outside, declined the invitation to enter the house and settled himself upon one of the seats which ran along the side of the portico. Lightning-bugs were flashing among the trees of the avenue; a katydid set up a plaint in the wistaria vine beside him; in the dark depths of the woods an owl was hooting. The silence of night was falling, and with it had come the night-sounds.

Gabriel hurried up to Jane's room to announce Godfrey's arrival, and not finding her there hastened with the utmost confidence to Mr. Ellery's sitting room, for at this time in the evening Jane and her stepmother were likely to be with the invalid.

Gabriel did not know, as the older servants of the David Ellery house hold knew, that young Worthington was not in favor with Mrs. Ellery.

Jane, who had been reading to her father, let fall the book into her lap at his announcement of Worthington's arrival, while Mrs. Ellery dropped her embroidery. An instant's uneasy silence pervaded the apartment.

"The insolence!" said Mrs. Ellery at last. "How dare he come here in this high-handed manner? And how has he escaped the British? When last we knew of him, he was their captive, only saved by Col. Bessemer's great clemency from being a corpse. No doubt he is now a fugitive, fleeing from them, and relies upon you, Jane, to aid his escape or to hide him here. Was there ever such audactiy? Gabriel, tell the man to be gone; that under no consideration will Miss Jane see him."

Up rose Jane, and laid her book upon the near-by table with an emphatic slap. "You must permit me," she said, looking coldly at her stepmother and for once blind to the nervous frown which had gathered upon her father's brow and to the wistful look which ever came into his eyes at sign of disagreement between her and his wife, "you must permit me to deal with my visitors as I see fit. Gabriel, you may go."

She swept from the room, out into the hall, and half-way down the stairs; and then she stopped—stopped to collect her thoughts; to still the flutter of her heart; to plan her mode of procedure.

Godfrey, sitting upon the portico, gazing into the peaceful night, was thinking of the beauty of the surroundings; of the luxuriousness of Jane's home. It required no little courage, no small amount of self-confidence, to ask her to leave it for him; and that she could think enough of him to do it—ah, that was the wonderful thing.

Yet, if all went well, when this war was over, when American success was assured, as he never doubted it would be, he could offer her a home scarcely less beautiful, for he would accept his grandfather's offer to manage for him his estates in Virginia. Settled in the great white house under the Virginia oaks and walnuts, Jane would miss but little of the luxury of her present abode.

There was a flutter of white upon the staircase, a soft step across the hall. Godfrey sprang to his feet. "Jane!" he cried, holding out both hands; but the one hand Jane gave him was cold—cold despite the fragrant warmth of the night.

"Ah, Jane," cried Worthington, the heat of his own emotions making him impervious for the nonce to the chill of her demeanor, "how I have longed for this moment, for this opportunity to see you, since that blessed night when you saved my life; and did far more than save it—made it worth the living by telling me that you loved me. It seems incredible that but four days have passed since then. They seem rather like four months, so lagging has been each moment until I could again be with you."

With an effort Jane freed her hand from his strong clasp and moved away from him to the edge of the portico.

"Capt. Worthington," she said, without looking at him, "I pray that you will forget that night and all that occurred then. Let us cancel it from our memory."

"Cancel it?" he gasped. "Cancel it? Jane, what do you mean? Is this some joke, some witticism, that I am too dull to see the humor of?"

"Nay," she answered, half turning towards him and speaking in a voice whose sweetness was lost in over-firmness, "when I tell you that I am betrothed to Col. Bessemer you will possibly—understand."

"Betrothed to Col. Bessemer? And since when?" He came closer. "Since when? Were you, perhaps, betrothed to him that night when you risked your life to save mine; when what made that life worth the saving was the belief that you glorified it by your love? Tell me, Jane, were you betrothed to Col. Bessemer then?" He laid his hand upon her arm.

She shrank back. "No—since."

"Since? And with the memory of that night before you? No, I will not believe it. You are playing with me; but seeking to test my love—my faith in you. Know, then, that there is no test you can bring to bear which it will not stand. I believe in you, in your faithfulness, as I believe in God."

The girl threw out her hand in a gesture of despair. How hard, how bitterly hard, he was making it.

He came still closer. "Speak to me, beloved," he said. "Tell me why you thought it necessary to put me to this test?"

She clasped her hands in front of her. Temptation was pressing her close; pressing her to throw herself into his arms; to tell him all; to acquaint him with that wretched bargain she had made; but if she should yield—if she should tell him? What then? It would mean the forfeit of his life or Bessemer's. She knew that he would never rest until one life or the other had paid the penalty.

No, no; honor, duty, everything demanded that she herself, no other, should pay the price. It was she who had done the bargaining; she had bought with her eyes open; and was the price too great to pay for that which she had bought? With the living man beside her, could she regret her purchase? If she had it to do over, would she not again do what she had done? Just to know that he was in the world, was that not enough to pay any price for?

She turned to the figure beside her. "In stress of excitement, Capt. Worthington," she said, "we oft do that which our cooler judgment does not approve. You and I have been friends from childhood. I have long looked upon you as a brother. Your life is nearly as precious to me as my own brother's. That night, when I had devised a way to save it and you were so laggard in availing yourself of the opportunity I——"

"You?" He bent his dark head towards her.

A soft-footed, dusky figure had a minute before lighted the tree of candles which stood upon the carved cabinet within the hall. The light shone through the broad entrance and spread across the portico, but Jane resolutely kept her face turned towards the twilight, which was deepening into night, and the brilliant glow at her back served rather to throw her features into shadow than to betray their emotions.

"And you—what, Jane?" Godfrey prodded gently.

She clasped and unclasped her hands nervously. The task she had set herself was a lacerating one, but she went on with it bravely, if falteringly. "And it may be that I—in my anxiety that my old-time friend, that Mary's brother, should not recklessly throw the chance of saving his life away, it may be that in the flurry of the moment, in the press of crowding events, I—led you to believe—my feelings"—she stopped, and then she gathered her determination and continued—"were of a different—character——"

"Jane!" The cry was that of a wounded animal.

There was a heavy silence, weighed upon her side with rising fear, with the strangling of loving impulses; upon his, with a gathering torrent of anger that was sweeping away the daze the blow had caused him. When next he spoke his voice was harsh. There was in it none of the gentleness of appeal, none of the sweetness of that faith of which he had boasted.

"And so," he said at last, "Miss Ellery had resort that night to her well-known talent for acting—one of her many gifts—to deceive me into the belief that the life she offered was really of value. Now that I am acquainted with its true worth, you may be sure I shall guard it well."

He strode down the steps, across the gravel, into the gloomy interior of the avenue. He had forgotten that his horse was in the Ellery stables. Out through the wide gates he went, into the dusty road, over the miles that lay between his home and Jane's; and Jane still leaned, a white and broken figure, against the pillar of the portico.

is daily enacted, in thousands of homes, as Death claims, in each one, another victim of Consumption or Pneumonia. But when Coughs and Colds are properly treated, the tragedy is averted. F. G. Finally she took Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, which cured her, and today she is well and strong." It kills the germs of all diseases. One dose relieves. Port Arthur.

After a siege which for bitterness, for persistence in the face of every obstacle known to war, and for cost in blood and money, has seldom if ever been surpassed in the history of the world, Port Arthur has fallen. It is again in the hands of the same people who wrested it from the Chinese ten years ago and were forced by what is known as diplomancy to give it up. The second assault upon the fortress, after six years of Russian possession, was ten times as difficult as the first. The fortifications had been built with marvelous skill, and were defended with marvelous heroism. General Stossel emerges from the terrible conflict with honor. He did not lose his life as he said he expected to, but he has carried the defense of Port Arthur to the utmost limit consistent with common sense and mercy. And now will be known of what has been going on inside. The death of men in the fighting line or in battles at sea was but a small part of the suffering of the garison. The food has been scanty, the water supply has been poor, disease has undoubtedly ravished the Russian ranks It has been eight months of misery.

What is the benefit? What has been gained for the world? Many people will answer by saying nothing has been gained, and that the loss of these men by wounds and disease is plain murder, and that the war is senseless and cruel, as all wars are, and that no Christian or civilized person can assent to the idea of war. Tolstoi takes this view. But Japan will not agree. Japan sees gradual national extinction as the result of the loss of this war with Russia. Her only hope for the future is in driving Russia out of Manchuria and becoming mistress of that part of the East which lies about the Yellow Sea. Russia is fighting for the possession of a coast ten thousand miles from home. Japan has no intention of following Poland and Finland and a dozen other small nations into a state of feudal dependance upon Russia. She objects to joining the Russian harem, and fights for the defence of her national virtue and for the possession of herself. What are a thousand dead men, or ten thousand, or a hundred thousand, to a nation that is fighting for its very life and honor? And how they fight! What sacrifices they make to get into the death struggle. A writer in the January McClure's, who has spent twenty-five years in Japan, tells of a widower who wanted to join the army. Trying in vain to find some one to care for his three little children, he killed them, buried them beside the mother, and stepped into the ranks a hero under the customs of his country.

Much has been done. Much remains yet to be done. There is Vladivostok, another Port Arthur perhaps, shielding Russian ships; there is Kuropatkin defying the Japanese armies at Mukden. There is the Baltic fleet, a tremendous armada, approaching to do battle with Togo. But the steadily increasing difficulties of Russia at home, her threatened loss of credit abroad, the great distance from headquarters to the seat of war and the wonderful fighting qualities of the Japanese constitute an obstacle which will be mighty hard to overcome. It is doubtful if Port Arthur again changes hands.

The Boy Who Works.

Do you feel, my son, that you have a hard time? Your hours are long. Your task is hard and the wages rather small. The contents of your Saturday envelope will scarcely carry you over the week. Sometimes you must wear patched trousers or a frayed coat. Your employer expects a great deal from you. Other young fellows dress well and always have money. They have coddling fathers or mothers while you toil six days a week to make a living. Never mind, son.

You are way ahead of the boy who has every luxury at home. You are getting experience that he must get somehow later on, because sooner or later he must fight the real battle of life for himself. And you have the advantage. While life has been made easy for him, he lacks the drill and discipline which every life soldier must go through. You are preparing yourself, while he may go in without preparation and fail. Work, my son, is a great blessing. You cannot see it now, but some day you will say that you were fortunate in your boyhood because you were compelled to work, because you cannot acquire the power to do things except by school, that is your work, and the better you do it the better will you be prepared for the future life, both of labor and pleasure. Work makes men. Luck usually fails; except in rare instances it is a phantom; it cannot be depended upon. Pluck, asssisted by ability and character, always wins. To succeed you must overcome obstacles. Force and fibre are built up by hardships, but hardships are not necessarilly handicaps. Often they are aids. You will understand this better twenty years later. Learn a point in persistence from the Jnpanese. Eight months ago they besieged Port Arthur, which was supposed to be impregnable and had for ten years been strengthened by the Russians to defy assault. Monday the Russians surrendered and Tuesday the victorious Japanese marched in.

Hang onto your job until you are sure of a better one. Dependable boys are in demand, and no boy can be depended upon who does not finish well whatever task he sets himself to do. Whatever be your task do it thoroughly; do it better that the average boy would, and in that way you will come to be known as a dependable boy. And mind you this: Men everywhere are looking for honest, capable, gritty, dependable boys, and the sooner you prove that you are that kind of a lad the sooner will you get a better job, and you will never hold a very good job unless you are that kind of a lad. Don't envy the boy who is having an easy time. Some day he will have to "make good."

Lawson's Attitude.

Thomas W. Lawson seems to be an expert in the manufacture of panics. He assests that some of the famous financiers of the country are no better than common robbers. His enemies call him a fakir and a liar. Be that as it may he is certainly a star in his particular role, and has been able to scare numerous speculators out of their very boots by his stentorius cries of "Stop Thief." His articles on "Frenzied Finance" appear in Everybody's Magazine, and that the people everywhere are reading what he writes is evidenced by the increase in the circulation of that periodical from 150,000 to 700,000 and a copy of the January issue is not now to be had. Without doubt Lawson's attacks have worked hardship for many a man who invested in stocks without the idea of speculation. Not all who hold stock in Amalgamated Copper are speculators. Those who have bought the stock on margins are gamblers and are entitled to all they're getting from Lawson. However, if all that Lawson says is true, then the crash was sooner or later bound to come, and for all we know now is as good a time as any.

Grange Notes.

The meeting of the State Grange at Ogdensburg next month promises to be an unusually interesting and profitable meeting. Some little criticism was made upon the action of the executive committee in locating the annual meeting in the northern end of the State, but we believe that no one, when the session closes, will regret the choice of location. First, the great growth of the order in this State the past three years has been north of the New York Central railroad. Second, the people of Ogdensburg will give to all visitors so hearty a greeting that the Ice King will not be felt for the genial warmth of the greeting which this beautiful northern city will extend to the people of the entire State. Major W. H. Daniels, than whom there is no more enthusiastic Granger in the State, and a man who is without a rival in arranging the local details of such a meeting, is giving this State Grange his personsl attention. He has arranged for the appearance at the public meeting of several of the best musical artists of the country. Among them are Harold Jarvis, tenor, Alice Calder-Leonard, soprano, Miss Grace Merry, elocutionist, and E. H. Bissett, baritone. A first-class orchestra has been engaged for each evening session. Prof. Bailey of Cornell, Governor Bell of Vermont, Governor Bachelder of New Hampshire, and Hon. BIG PROFIT OF LOAN SHARK

Rudolph Spreckels, Sugar King, Tells of Big Sum Asked For in One Case.

"Talking about Rudolph Spreckles the other day," a San Francisco man said, "he told me many interesting things about finance. He cited a number of examples of the incredible profit in usury. The practice of usury, however, he heartily condemned. He told of a young man who had answered a usurer's advertisement to lend money without any other security than the borrower's salary. The young man arranged the details for a loan of $500. It took a week or more to settle these details, and then the young man called for his money.

"'We are ready for you, sir, at last,' the usurer said, politely. 'You want 500. Here it is. We charge you five per cent a month, and you want the money for a year. Thus there is just this $200 coming to you.'

"'If I wanted it for two years,' said the young man, 'there'd be something coming to you, wouldn't there?'

"He needed the loan, but he was man enough, nevertheless, to spurn these terms and depart.

The Other Way About.

Willie Strutt was playing with the Timbs boys. His mother called him.

"Willie, don't you know they are bad boys for you to play with?"

"Yes, mother," said Willie, "I know that, but then I am a good boy for them to play with."—Smith's Weekly.

"What made you tell me Martin was the carver of his own fortune, when he got every penny he has by marrying an heiress?"

"Humph! He had to cut out half-a-dozen fellows to get her, didn't he?"—Smith's Weekly.

Proud of It.

"What was Scorchem arrested for?"

"Fast driving."

—At the semi-annual meeting of Genoa Star Lodge, 483, I. O. O. F., held December 28, the following officers were elected: J. Leon Mack, N. G.; S. Weaver, V. G.; W. D. Norman, secretary; C. J. Leonard, treasurer. The new officers will be installed next Wednesday evening. Every member should be present.

—Settlement has been made in the case of George Erb against the town of Locke which was to have been tried at the January term of court. The suit was brought to recover $1,400 damages for injuries which the plaintiff alleged were sustained because of the negligence of the defendant in not properly guarding a certain sluiceway into which the plaintiff drove. The town paid $500 to settle the case.

—At the annual meeting of the Genoa Agricultural Society the following officers were elected: D. W. Smith, president; Fay Teeter, vice-president; L. B. Norman, secretary; C. A. Ames, treasurer; Lee B. Parker and Thos. Tyrrell directors for three years. The dates for the 1905 fair are September 5, 6 and 7. The society is in good condition and the coming season ought to be more successful than ever.

—They say awful things against delinquent newspaper subscribers, some of which should touch the hearts and pockets of those who neglect to pay the printer. Says an exchange: "A subscriber about seven years in arrears to a paper, was dying. The editor dropped in to see him. 'How do you feel?' said the pusher of the pencil. 'All looks bright beyond,' gasped the subscriber. 'Yes, indeed,' remarked the editor, 'You will surely see the blaze in about ten minutes.' "

See the display of Neckwear at 20c at the Genoa Clothing Store selling out sale.

—As town meeting time approaches the signs of a lively campaign appear. Three or perhaps four candidates for highway commissioner are in the field for the Republican nomination, while those not on the "inside" are wondering who will head the ticket. In Venice, we are told that the old railroad boom, which has been through so many campaigns that it must be sadly frayed around the edges, has been again dragged forth from its musty hiding place and bolstered up that all who run may see. Two years under a Democrat supervisor and no railroad ought to convince some people, eh!

POULTRY AND BEES

THE BEST NEST BOX.

It Should Be Movable So as to Be Easily Taken Out for Fumigating Purposes.

I have tried various kinds of nesting accommodations from the improvised soap box nailed up in the corner to the more elaborate tier of compartments where the hen goes into a semi-dark alley and retires to a private booth to do her day's duty. I had seen somewhere that the hen did not like to lay in public and that this kind of an arrangement would increase the egg yield. Considerable experience since then has taught me that all nest boxes should be arranged so as to be movable, and now, I have torn down the last of the fixed rows and have movable boxes for all laying and hatching purposes.

I do not use incubators, and when a hen becomes broody and I wish to set her, I place the eggs under her, and that evening move her, box and all, to the brooder house, where three setting hens are given the use of one compartment. They are then no trouble to look after. There are no interlopers to lay by them and break the eggs. They can get off whenever they feel like it for food and drink, which are kept in all the apartments.

All nests ought to be taken out at least twice a year and given an overhauling. They should be sprayed inside and out with some disinfecting and lice-killing liquid and receive new nesting material. Boxes where hens lay and hatch and which are not moved for a long time, sometimes become infested with a species of small louse different from both the mites that are found under the roosting poles and the common poultry lice, writes G. Davis, in Ohio Farmer. When this happens the best use that can be made of them is to build a bonfire. These little pests are exceedingly hard to exterminate unless the boxes can be placed where they can be fumigated with sulphur. The occasional moving and spraying of the nest receptacle referred to above is done as a preventive measure, so that one will not be troubled with this kind of lice, the presence of which in a henhouse is evidence of gross carelessness on the part of the poultryman

Any kind of boxes are used that are of suitable size. They can be obtained at any store for five cents apiece, or perhaps for nothing. Two cleats are nailed to the back of the box and a hole bored in each cleat, by means of which the box is hung on two stout nails driven in the side of the building. It is well to have these nails all the same distance apart so that boxes are interchangeable and can be placed any where. The nails should be ten-penny and driven with the heads projecting one and a half inches and sloping upward, so as to hold the boxes firmly.

PIN FEATHERS.

Hardiness is the first of all qualities to seek in a breed.

In raising broilers for market earliness is quite an item.

Boil and mash potatoes and mix with milk before feeding.

There is a growing preference in many markets for brown shelled eggs.

The larger the number of fowls kept the smaller the expense proportionately.

Nearly 100 manufacturers of incubators and brooders are putting sitting hens out of business.

A variety of food will not cost any more than one article all the time, but it pays a good deal better.

Gather up the charcoal from that old brush pile and throw it into the poultry yard or into the scratching shed.

A padlock costs little and may help to save much. Poultry meat is worth money now. Lock the doors or unchain the dog.

There should be no more "smells" about a fowl house than about our own dwelling house; smells are proof of uncleanliness, and of need of a house cleaning!

The Prevention of Lice.

To keep chickens free from lice and diseases, wash the roosts with coal oil and whitewash the house inside and out every month. Sweep the droppings from under the roost every morning, and sprinkle slaked lime over the ground. Always keep a piece of red cedar under the nests to keep vermin away from setting hens. Have the nests so you can clean them well Never have straw for [illegible] fill

FARM AND GARDEN

A PROLIFIC WEED.

Something About the Galinsoga Parviflora and How It Has Spread Westward.

About one year ago I mentioned the advent of a weed which very suddenly occupied the whole of the eastern south and already, within a year or very little more, had to some extent shared a large tract not only of uncultivated grass and clover fields, but of waste lands. It is known as Galinsoga parviflora, and is not wholly to be considered as a cumberer of the land, along with other weeds, but as a useful forage plant, far more valuable than the majority of plants classed as weeds. The present appearance of this weed in the west, in nearly all the large cities, in which it occupies the roadsides and a large part of the cultivated land, as well as the gardens of the cities, is an interesting fact in connection with the subject of weeds, and the several ways in which they spread far and wide; in this instance thousands of miles in as few as five years from its first appearance near Charleston, S. C.

I am reminded of the circumstance by a note from a subscriber to this paper, asking for seed of the plant for the purpose of sowing (mixed with grass seeds) for making a pasture. I am rather disinclined to aid in spreading such a hardy and prolific weed as this for obvious reasons; but in this instance would do so were it not that the plant is abundant all over the neighborhood where the applicant lives, writes a correspondent in the Country Gentleman. The plant is easily recognized by its low growth, much similar to that of clover, and by its small white flowers.

This Galinsoga is an interesting example of the amazingly rapid spread of weeds, and of the carefulness which should be exercised in regard to the introduction of similar plants, which may bring inconvenience—to say the least—to thousands of persons. My mention of the plant and its history was not given as any recommendation of it for a fodder plant, but merely in the interest of general knowledge. Considering how many of our worst weeds were introduced in very simple, but thoughtless ways, and how justly the public execrates the memory of the persons implicated in the mischief, all concerned should, I think, be slow to spread any plant, out of mere curiosity the injurious character of which may in after years make his name disagreeably notorious. Still, while this Galinsoga may cause waste of labor and some apprehension by its prolific habit, it is not so bad as the large majority of weeds, and in some circumstances may be turned to profitable uses. But it is a weed and hence not to be made a friend and companion of.

FARM NOTES.

Note the changes you intended to make for next winter.

Have all the live stock ready for market before you market it.

The appearance of things about the house is the first that attracts attention, good or bad.

See that all necessary repairs are made, not only upon the home buildings, but upon the outbuildings also. Winter is coming.

A cheery, comfortable family room and plenty of good things to read robs winter of about all of its terrors, cements family ties and lays a foundation for pleasant memories in after life.

If those March and April pigs had clover and peas to run through the summer they are now just about ready for a corn diet.—American Tribune.

Estimating the Profits.

The profits of a farm are usually more than the actual cash received for produce. The farmer takes his living expenses, as well as the cost of production, before he decides upon the amount of profit. The merchant takes only the difference between the buying and the selling price, less the cost of the transaction, then lives on the profit. The question of "Does the farm pay?" depends largely upon what is taken from it other than the cash received.—Midland Farmer.

QUIT BURNING STRAW.

A More Economical Way of Disposing of This Waste on the Farm.

The old wasteful habit of burning all the straw on the farm is still followed on those farms that do not have a good deal of stock. Even where it is possible to utilize the straw by hauling it to the barnyard it is still burned, because the owner does not figure out that the fertility in the straw is worth hauling the straw to the barnyard for. He says that anyway the ash is left and there is some fertility in that. Taking all in all he is under the impression that he is getting about as much out of his straw by burning it as in any other way, unless he can sell it or feed it to stock.

But all investigations go to show that humus plays a much larger part in the matter of soil value than we thought. Every pound of straw should be brought back onto the land in some form. A number of cattle will trample up a good deal of it if it is thrown into the barnyard from time to time. This would be especially the case with some barnyards we have seen and it would at the same time greatly improve the condition of the barnyards.

Get the straw and the manure mixed together in the shortest possible time. When the straw is mixed with the manure it is surprising how quickly it will go to pieces, says the Farmers' Review. One farmer has a barnyard that does not cover more than half an acre, yet into that every year he puts the cornstalks from 40 acres of land. The stalks become quickly pulverized under the feet of the farm animals and in the course of months one fails to recognize in the manure any cornstalks.

Of course this means work, but it means also the keeping up of the producing capacity of the land. It also means the keeping up of the ability of the land to resist drouth. Get the straw into the manure and then get the manure into the field as quickly as possible after it is fit to go there.

MAIL BOX POST.

How an Old Wheel May Be Utilized to Advantage of the Carrier and Farmers.

I am very much interested in the devices in your paper and I now send you a sketch of a mail-box post device used by myself. In many instances it is necessary for two or three neighbors to have boxes at the same crossing. By fixing the post as I have described it will make same very convenient for the carrier. Take an old wheel of any kind and set it on the post, as shown in the illustration. Several boxes can be attached to the spokes and rim of this wheel. It is quite handy for the carrier, as the wheel can be revolved and he can get at all the boxes at one stopping. The rim of the wheel extends out so that it will be impossible for him to run against the post and break it down. Try it and see how handy and convenient it will be for you and your carrier. —Meritte S. Atkins, in Agricultural Epitomist.

POINTERS.

Readiness begets steadiness.
Grit is more valuable that wit.
Modern machinery makes money.
Dilute sentiment with common sense.
Temperance is a good enough fountain of youth.
Many a lame man who does not limp is crippled only under his hat.
A farmer can't know too much about his business, and his women folks cannot find enough ways to lighten their labor.
Do not nail or staple wire fence to trees. The tree will grow around the staple, so that the wire will have to be cut to remove it.

A Railway Porter.

One-armed Tramp (at kitchen door)—Please, sir, could you assist a poor man? I was a railway porter, and lost my arm on the line.

Man of the House—Just come in and shut the door behind you. (Tramp obeys.)

Man of the House—Now you get out again. You ain't no railway porter. If you had been you would have shut that door with a bang that would have broken half the dishes on the kitchen shelves.—Ally Sloper.

Silenced Him.

"What was that disturbance in our kitchen?" demanded Mr. Stubb.

"Oh, your mother and myself had a little spat," replied Mrs. Stubbs.

"Oh, you did, eh? How often have I told you both to stop quarreling over trifles?"

"I am glad you consider it a trifle, John."

"Why so?"

"We were quarreling over you."—Chicago News.

Circumstances Alter Cases.

Inspector—How fast does sound travel?

Young Sharpshins—It depends.

Inspector—What does it depend on?

Young Sharpshins—Why, when mother calls upstairs that it's time to get up, it travels about a yard a minute; but when teacher says "Close books, it's 12 o'clock," it runs about five miles a second.—Ally Sloper.

Good Advice.

Tailor—I really must ask you to pay my account, sir.

Swellington—Awfully sorry, don't you know, but haven't got any money just now.

Tailor—But I must have it. I can't afford to give such long credit.

Swellington—Then, my good fellow, you'd better sell your business to some one who can.—Ally Sloper.

Insulting Man!

"Julia! Julia!" called the lady from her dressing room.

"What do you want, dear?" answered her husband, from his smoking room.

"Why, I want Julia to come to me. I was to have my hair washed to-day."

"Well, I guess Julia's attending to it. I just saw her going down to the laundry and she had a bundle in her hands."—Yonkers Statesman.

Effects.

"Was your baby sick last night?" asked the man who lives in the next flat. "It cried so that it made my flesh creep."

"He had a little tummy-ache," replied the fond father. "But it produced a different effect on me. He cried until my flesh got up and walked."—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

How He Liked Them.

"How will you have your eggs cooked?" asked the waiter.

"Make any difference in the cost of 'em?" inquired the cautious customer with the brimless hat and ragged beard.

"No."

"Then cook them on the top of a slice of ham," said the customer, greatly relieved.—Smith's Weekly.

Time to Move.

"I was moved once by the notes of a little bird," said the romantic young man.

"So was I," spoke his friend.

"Canary bird?"

"No, cuckoo. I was calling on my girl and when the cuckoo called 11 times I knew it was my move."—Chicago News.

Impromptu.

Impromptu speeches all defy
Attempts to analyze them,
And make a fellow wonder why
He cannot improvise them.
—Judge.

EASY TO PLEASE.

Hostess—What part of the chicken will you have, Willie?

Willie—Either half. I'm not particular.—Detroit Free Press.

Not Too Bare.

The day was raw; but patiently
He stayed till set of sun,
And then he liked it better, for
At last the day was done.
—Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune.

Silly!

Samson—Why do you call your boy Jope?

Tomson—Why? Because it's his name, of course.—Ally Sloper.

Lordly Treatment.

—What do you mean by say-

Yes, It is Quite True

That nervous trouble, if neglected, leads straight to bodily and mental collapse. But a wise man does not neglect it. The Weather Man Warns Us

That we are going to have a hard, cold winter—much more severe than we thought from the samples of weather received during the past few weeks. Now we have learned that a good many people have neglected to make their purchases of winter clothes, dress goods, suits, underwear, blankets, whatnot. Some of these people have made up their minds that it is so late now that they will try to get along without the things they really need. It is to help just such persons that will dispose of their entire winter stock at reduced prices—prices so low that purchasers will more than get their money's worth out of the goods during the balance of the winter. Of course we mean to help ourselves at the same time that we help you, for we have simply got to clear our shelves before the first of February to make room for the big consignments of spring goods that will begin to arrive then. Hence this mutual benefit arrangement in the form of our third annual Auctioneering.

TODD BLACKMER & CO.

I have had 20 years' experience at the business, but I am not a mind reader or mesmerist. I cannot tell who is going to buy or what he is willing to pay until after the sale is made, but I can tell pretty near what the property I am selling is worth and try to sell it just a little below actual value to a responsible party. That pleases the buyer with me and he comes to my next sale. That satisfies the man I sell for and he employs me again. You see I have pleased both parties and will please YOU when you have that sale. But remember YOU must pay me for my services, as I do not take fees from bidders for slipping them a bargain on the side.

His Luck.

"Do you believe in luck?"

Anxious Wife—Mr. Dunner has called again for that money you owe. I wish you'd see about it, or something dreadful will happen. He says he won't wait—any—longer—as—time—is—money.

Absolutely Necessary.

"But, my dear," said Mrs. Fosdick in surprise, "you said you were very hard up. If that is the case we can't afford to give the swell reception you suggest."

Tact.

The lovely girl hesitated.

"Tell me, Mr. Throgson," she said, "am I the first girl you ever loved?"

The rest was easy.—Chicago Tribune.

Sultry.

"Darling," said she, "do you love me as much as ever?"

"Yes, dearie,' 'said he, with his nose buried in his newspaper.

That ought to have satisfied her, but she had to ask "Why?"

"Oh, I dunno. Habit, I suppose."—Smith's Weekly.

Treat Him Like a Dog.

"You shouldn't growl like that dear," said the wife.

"And why not, pray?" asked the husband.

"Because if the authorities know you're growling all the time they'll make you take out a dog license."—Yonkers Statesman.

More Behind.

She—And are you really so much better since you returned from your trip abroad?

He—Yes, indeed! I'm quite another man, I assure you.

She—Well, I'm sure all your friends will be delighted to hear it.—Cassell's.

As Explained.

"Yes, my son."

"Why, the public servant tries to hold his job longer than the other kind, my son."—Yonkers Statesman.

A Natural Question.

Boy—I want a tuppenny tin of rat poison, please.

Shopkeeper—Rat poison? Is it for your mother?

Boy—For mother? Not much! It's for the rats.—Ally Sloper.

Promptly Answered.

Professor Quiz—My dear Mrs. Angloom, why do you serve English breakfast tea at dinner?

Mrs. Angloom—Why, don't you know, professor, it's now morning in England?—Judge.

Quite Different.

She—Did you ever take your automobile apart to see how it worked?

He—Well, not exactly. I have taken it apart to see how it didn't work.—Yonkers Statesman.

Speed Limit.

Autoist—Why, this is an outrage! What do you want to arrest me for? I was hardly moving.

Constable Greens—Thet's it, young feller—thet's it. Yew see, all th' other autermobiles went so consarned fast I couldn't stop nary a one, an' I had tew arrest somebody tew-day. Come along, young feller!—Judge.

Not Disposed to Criticise.

"Don't you think," asked Mrs. Oldcastle, "that our minister is becoming somewhat recondite?"

"Oh, I don't know," replied her hostess. "Josiah thinks so, but it don't seem to me that he weighs a pound more than he ought to for a man as tall as him."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Backwoods Impressions.

"Mammy" said the little Georgia pickaninny, "Ah's heahd tell ob dese autymobiles so much. What do dey look lak?"

"De goodness only knows!" responded his mother, "but Ah specs dey looks lak de ol' Nick. Ah've heahd dey all hab horns."—Chicago News.

UNREASONABLE.

Mrs. Puzzle—I really don't know what to do. It is very difficult to please the world.

Mr. Puzzle—What is the difficulty?

Mrs. Puzzle—People are so unreasonable in their comments. If you tell all you hear they say you are a gossip, and if you don't, they say you are stupid and commonplace.—Chicago Journal.

Getting Next.

"I'm getting onto you, old man,"
Thus in triumphant note,
On that bleak November day,
Sang the winter overcoat.
—Chicago News
