SEPT. 24—Prof. Hill, of moving picture fame, gave an entertainment at Mosher's hall last Saturday evening

The Genoa fair attracted quite a crowd from this vicinity last week.

The terrific wind, rain and hail storm which struck the place on Tuesday of last week was the most violent that has been witnessed in this locality for a number of years. Hail stones the size of hickory nuts fell so abundantly that enough were found in a sheltered spot two days afterward to freeze ice cream.

One evening last week James Chase, a young man who resides west of Sherwood, came to Poplar Ridge to make some purchases at the hardware store. In the course of his shopping he was taken to the second floor to look at some goods there. Mr. Chase became so deeply interested in the display of goods that he stepped into a stairway, falling to the bottom, a distance of eight feet. A keg of large spikes fell after him, but luckily did not hit him.. Mr. Chase was unconscious for some time. Dr. Swayze was called, but only found a few slight bruises. We do not know whether "Jimmie" carries a horseshoe for a pocketpiece or not.

Between the hail storm and the frost, the corn crop looks pretty much 'on the hog" and consequently will be of little use in putting fat on the hogs. Some apple crops have also suffered considerable damage

Drowned in Cayuga Lake.

Lewis Luce, a blacksmith living in Ludlowville, was drowned in Cayuga lake about 11 o'clock Sunday night, about three miles south of Cayuga. Luce received permission of Captain Sperry, of the steamer Hiawatha, to ride down to Cayuga where the steamer was bound, to tow some freight boats with cargoes up the lake. When Luce got aboard the Hiawatha, the crew observed that he was somewhat under the influence of liquor. He went to the engine room. About three miles from Cayuga he started up from the engine room to the deck where he stumbled and fell overboard. The engine of the steamer was promptly reversed and the crew made every effort to locate Luce. Life-buoys were thrown overboard, but despite a diligent search of the vicinity where he went down, no sign of him was discovered although it was moonlight. It is believed that he went directly to the bottom of the lake and did not come up again. The water is said to be about 12 to 15 feet deep at the place where he went down.

Luce was a blacksmith by occupation and is survived by a wife and four children in Ludlowville.

William Luce of Ludlowville, a brother of the drowned man, and Frank N. Howell, a well known boatman of the same place, recovered the body Tuesday afternoon, at the place where he sank. No marks were discoverable and it is thought that he did not strike anything in falling from the boat. The remains were taken to Ludlowville and a brief service was held Wednesday afternoon at the cemetery and interment was made.

Says the Syracuse Herald: "Chief Engineer T. H. Mather, of the Rochester, Syracuse & Eastern railroad, said this morning that the bridge on the line of that road over the Montezuma marshes will be one of the longest bridges in the world used exclusively for an electric railroad. It will be 1,400 feet long. The abutments, as in all the culvert and bridge work on the road, will be of concrete. The archers and girders will be of steel. The bridge will cost upwards of $125,000. A 700-foot bridge is to bebuilt at Brighton. The Utica & Mohawk Valley rail road has a concrete bridge at Herkimer more than a thousand feet long with its approaches. It stood the floods of the West Canada creek last Spring very well. Engineer Mather admits that concrete bridges have not entirely passed the experimental stage, but he has great confidence in their stability and durability for railroads."

Republican enthusiasm was bubbling over last night at the mass meeting at the Burtis Opera house when the first gun of the campaign in this city was fired. The house was crowded and the forceful and entertaining speeches were given strict attention. A patriotic effect was given to the occasion by a generous display of American flags and pictures of Roosevelt and Fairbanks were conspicuously arranged on either side of the stage. The speakers of the evening were M. Linn Bruce, the candidate for lieutenant governor, and Job Hedges, both of New York, and they were escorted to the hall by the Auburn City band and the marching corps of the Theodore Roosevelt club, 60 in number, including officers, who made a neat appearance in their Rough Rider uniforms and hats. Most of the corps occupied seats in the orchestra circle while the others were seated on the stage. The speakers, led by George W. Benham, chairman of the Republican General committee, and accompanied by Representative Sereno E. Payne, were heartily received as they appeared on the platform, but the applause of the evening was twice given to Charles W. Brister, the Republican candidate for mayor, first when he appeared on the platform and again toward the close of the meeting when after repeated calls he made a few remarks defining his position in the local campaign and promising, if elected, to be the mayor of the city and not of any party or faction. Mr. Brister was to have presided at the meeting, but at his request Mr. Payne was substituted. After a selection by the band Mr. Benham started the proceedings by introducing Mr. Payne as chairman. He was heartily received and he spoke in part as follows: "I thank you for this reception especially as the papers announced that another was to preside. But his honor (Brister) concluded that he wouldn't preside until he presided in the mayor's chair, and he will fulfill it if you do your duty on election day as I know you will. I was sent as a delegate from this county to the recent State convention and I saw the whole thing there. I don't hesitate at times to buck the organization. Sometimes I get the worst of it and sometimes the organization gets the worst of it, but after it is all over I quit fighting on the day of the primaries and fight the Democratic party on election day.

Accidentally Shot.

Harold Metcalf, son of Charles Metcalf, a prominent resident of Groton, accidentally shot himself in the stomach at 6 o'clock last Friday afternoon and died of shock and loss of blood at 12 o'clock that night. An Ithaca surgeon, with an assistant, was called to attend him, but was unable to save the boy's life.

The 17 year-old boy had been hunting in the vicinity of Groton all day and was on his way home when he was offered a ride. He started to shove his double-barreled shotgun into the back of the buggy, when it exploded. It is thought that the hammer of the gun, of which only one barrel was exploded, caught on the woodwork of the buggy. The charge entered the pit of his stomach and spent its energy among the muscles and intestines, lodging just above the pelvis. The large shot passed into the boy's body diagonally and tore the flesh in a horrible manner. Over two feet of intestines were cut in piece, and an unusually severe hemorrhage immediately ensued. The carriage, the boy's clothing and everything with which he came in contact, were gory with blood. The injured boy was driven to his home immediately. He remained conscious for four hours until the Ithaca surgeons arrived, although he had lost nearly three quarts of blood. The surgeon applied every known method to save the young man's life, but the shock proved too severe.

Metcalf had always been fond of guns and had spent much of his time hunting. His father, who at the time of the accident was in the Adirondacks on a hunting expedition for his health, was notified immediately.

The lad is survived by his parents and a sister. The funeral was held on Tuesday at 2:30 p. m., in the M. E. church, Rev. H I. Andrews assisted by Rev. C. E. Burr and Rev. E. E. Smiley conducting the services. The Sunday school class of which the young man was a member, attended the funeral in a body, accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. D. L. Bradley. Floral offerings were given by this class, the church, pupils of the High school and many other friends of the deceased. Interment was made in Groton Rural cemetery.

Race Deterioration.

Premier Balfour has joined the ranks of the pessimists who have for some time made "race deterioration" in England their pet topic for discussion and investigation. Coming right on the heels of the report made by the interdepartmental committee on physical deterioration, the premier's remarks before the British association have created an unusual degree of surprise. The prime minister assumes the broad ground that the physical strength of the English people lies in its lower classes and that the race deteriorates in proportion to the progress of individuals from the lower to the higher classes of society. And it seemed to him that as the state so contrived its educational system as to allow this rising from the lowest to the upper class, by so much it did something to diminish the actual quality of the breed. The premier hastened to add that this was no argument against the state's attitude on education, and he concluded his direful forebodings by expressing the belief that no legislation was likely to modify the permanent causes which concern the actual quality of the race. The report of the interdepartmental committee enters a verdict of "non-proven" upon the whole question of "progressive physical deterioration." It does not find any reliable evidence one way or the other upon changes in bodily development and efficiency in any class of society. It dismisses as of little scientific value statistics of rejection for recruiting which have occasioned a transient panic in Great Britain. The committee finds that at the root of most of the vile conditions of English society lies overcrowding and that most other evils can be traced to it. And the most valuable part of the committee's conclusions are suggestions for educating all classes to an understanding of the evils by which they are surrounded, and the means by which they may be removed or reduced to a minimum.

Trade Deception.

"Made in Germany" had an ominous sound to British ears not long ago. The phrase had possibly something to do with converting the member from Birmingham to protection. But to-day the words "English make" are creating as much disturbance. When a German or Italian cravat maker aspires to a foothold in the Paris market, he never thinks to label his goods "Made in Germany." If he really wants to do business, he stamps them "London style," etc. Some, says our consul at Birmingham, have gone so far as to use a barefaced imitation of an English rival's trademark. The sly foreigners do not stop at Paris, but send their products right across the channel, and introduce them even into Birmingham as "English make." It is hard to discover their motive. A thoughtless person might suppose it was to take advantage of the superior selling character of English goods, says the New York Post. But that can hardly be, for British trade, according to the Birmingham school, is on the decline. Anyhow, such deception is trying, says our consul, because the people of Great Britain "very generally, and for patriotic reasons, purchase, as far as possible, goods of English manufacture."

A library erected at a cost of $750,000 will adorn the campus of the Leland Stanford, Jr., university at Palo Alto, Cal., this fall. It is the expenditure of money on a grand scale like this which has brought into prominence the most richly endowed university in America. If the great California seat of learning shall rise to appreciation of its responsibility and educate with the same liberality with which it provides for the comfort and artistic satisfaction of the student, the Pacific slope will soon be known for the golden fruits of culture as well as for the gold and fruits of the soil.

The czar of Russia has issued a manifesto saying that in the event of his dying before the czarowitz attains his majority the emperor's brother, Grand Duke Michael, is to become regent, the empress assuming the guardianship of the czarowitz. Poor little Alexis! He will never have a chance to play hookey, nor go barefooted before the frost is out of the ground, nor eat his fill of green apples, nor do anything else the average boy has to do before he becomes a man.

This season's drowning accidents revive the old question whether persons who know how to swim are really safer than those who are without that accomplishment. The answer is simple. With an equal amount of prudence the swimmer is far more secure, and learning to swim should not result in unlearning any of the older precepts of caution.

Now that the dowager empress has determined to suppress graft in Chinese office holding, reformers on this side of the water will doubtless have the benefit of strenuous example in the treatment of grafters. Like the duchess whom Alice met in Wonderland the dowager empress has a certain directness of method.

Japanese soldiers who are not killed complain of their luck and it may be the same way with Russian soldiers who are not murdered.

Protecting the Flag.

Massachusetts has a law providing a fine for those who display "words, figures, advertisements or designs" on the national flag. Under this law the sale of two magazines was recently interfered with in that state because the flag appeared as part of the decoration on the cover. The New York penal code makes it a misdemeanor publicly to mutilate or defile the flag or to use it in connection with a trade label, trademark or advertisement of merchandise. The highest court of the state has recently decided that the use of the flag in a trade label or trademark is not a defilement of it, and that the law which so forbids its use violates the national constitution, as it does not apply uniformly to all citizens of the state. But the court holds that it is constitutional to forbid the printing of an advertisement on the flag. In Colorado, where the law is similar to that of Massachusetts, an officer of the Western Federation of Miners was arrested last winter because he issued a strike proclamation printed on a representation of the flag. The object of this arrest was not so much the protection of the flag from desecration as interference with the activities of a leader in the unfortunate labor dispute in the state. There is no national law for the protection of the flag; but the American Flag association, organized in 1898, has been urging the passage of such a law, says the Youth's Companion. In the meantime the sentiment against the degradation of the flag for advertising purposes is growing in all the states. Little objection is raised to the use of the flag or a representation of it in an ornamental design, but it is generally admitted that it is as unfitting to print advertisements upon it as upon the dome of the national capitol.

Catering to Vanity.

One of the many unfortunate results of this straining for wealth and the appearance of it is to make extremely selfish the young women for whom such superhuman efforts are made. When a girl knows that all in her family make sacrifices to give her that which they cannot afford, and when she knows that others go without necessities in order that she may have luxuries, she begins to think, after awhile, that she must be somebody of great importance, and that everything must point toward her and all the family arrangements be made with reference to her comfort and convenience. Too often she becomes dissatisfied with her humble surroundings, and thinks her home a bore, a place to be avoided as much as possible. Not long ago I heard a young woman of this kind actually say that she was ashamed of her home, although her mother had made untold sacrifices for her, and had robbed herself and her home of many things they should have had, in order to enable her daughter to make a fine appearance, says O. S. Marden, in Success. This catering to their vanity is what ruins many girls, and makes selfish wives of those who, under different training, would be thrifty and industrious.

Whether or not a cat is personal property within the meaning of the criminal statute is a question which a Boston judge has decided in the negative, reports the Youth's Companion. His decision will interest many persons outside the jurisdiction of his court. Dogs, being licensed, are raised to the level of domestic animals in which property rights may exist; but cats, since the state makes no mention of them, have not attained the same level. The case lately under consideration involved the loss and the alleged theft of an Angora cat which had a recognized trade value of $50. If this princess among cats could not succeed in establishing her rights at law, the legal status of her humble relatives, the "Maltee" and the "tortyshell," seems to be altogether hopeless.

A certain western farmer has seen the light. For years he has been accustomed to shoot quail, because, as he believed, they destroyed his grain. Recently, in dressing some quail, he noticed the distended appearance of their crops. He opened them, and found that they were filled, not with grain, but with chinch-bugs, which, out of curiosity, he counted. In two birds he found 550 bugs. "I cleaned my gun," says the farmer, "and put it away, and no one on my farm shall ever point it at a quail again."

Since Mr. Carnegie established the fund to pension heroes in civil life a good many changes have been played on the definition of a hero. One of the best humorous definitions comes from a correspondent in a remote corner of a western state: "Please notify Mr. Carnegie we have a hero out here. He is running for sheriff on the socialist ticket without a ghost of a chance."

In their first meeting since the war of the middle ages English and French archers took part in a tournament at Le Touquet, in France, recently, the French being the victors in the international match.

Proper treatment to the Black Hand would be administered by the mailed fist.

Business Marriages of Russia.

One of the items that counts against Russia and other half civilized nations is the small part that human affection is allowed to play in the relations of husbands and wives. The higher classes, who have received the benefits of education, love and woo much as do Americans. The mating of the rest is barbaric. In a Russian marriage market all the girls who want husbands are mustered in a long row on the principal street of a town during the week of Epiphany. They are decked out in their pitiful finery and make the best appearance they can. There they are scrutinized by the young men, perhaps for hours. Next comes a trip to church to perform at a shrine of some saint. The young men are permitted to talk to the women, but sentiment is not considered. The questions deal with their dowries, their parents' possessions and their ability to labor, explains the Cincinnati Post. When selections are made the intended grooms make formal visits to the parents, the business end of matrimony is discussed, every item of the girls' possessions is scanned and valued, and, finally, the match is made and marriage follows. The young couples are said to get along very well, and many of them make devoted husbands and wives. It is only a step ahead of the Australian method, where the native bats his lady over the head with a club and then carries her to his hut. With the love of lovers practically left out of human affairs in Russia, one wonders that despair does not seize the nation. Take love out of the lives of Americans and joy would become a forgotten word. Here the average woman is a queen. Men have made her so, and delight in doing her honor. In Europe, taken as a whole, she is still a chattel, a necessary creature; endured, but not loved, as she deserves to be.

The Shorter Work Day.

An interesting contribution to the question of the shorter working day is supplied by the August number of the Monthly Review, published by the National Civic Federation. The basis of the article is an analysis of replies returned to a query addressed to a large number of employers. The question read as follows: "Do you regard it a practical proposition to gradually reduce hours by voluntary uniform agreement through a given industry, provided the employes agree to abandon any arbitrary restriction upon the output?" There were 927 answers returned; and of these 607 were in the affirmative, though various reservations and qualifications accompanied many replies. There is a quite general belief that shorter hours would result in better social conditions. In other words, there is little fear that the laborer would not advantageously use his increased leisure. The fear of enhanced cost of production involved in the scheme is a stumbling block to many. The necessity for continuous operation involving the two-shift system is another very serious obstacle in some industries. This is true, incidentally, of hospital work, where the two-shift system means a 12-hour day for the nurse, and the three-shift system often means serious detriment to the patients. There are some employers who take the position that an intentional restriction of output which a proposal of this kind, if made to the laborers, would imply and tacitly sanction, makes the bargain essentially immoral in character. Other employers express doubt of the agreement's being kept by the unions. It is an encouraging fact that in general the labor-day in this country in the last few decades has declined, but the speeding of machinery and the increased nervous pace of work are counter-considerations that cannot be overlooked.

I do not think the world can offer a more interesting sight than a fine family where the sons and daughters have loyally preserved the spirit of relationship, says Charles Wagner, in By the Fireside. As the children one after another gain in cultivation and power, the narrow horizon of childhood recedes. From his labor, from his studies, from his contact with those without, each is constantly bringing in new treasures, and together they share it all, carry on one another's education. The family table becomes a rendezvous where all take delight in bringing their impressions and echoes of the great world outside.

Sir Thomas Lipton has more perseverance than good luck. He will challenge America again for the cup with Shamrock IV. It is claimed that he is negotiating with yacht builders on the Clyde to put him up a racer that will beat the Yankees. There is only one way in which Sir Thomas can lift the cup, and that is to have his boat built on this side and manned by American sailors.

After the high-handed way in which Russia, in Manchuria, has broken every canon of international good manners, it is refreshing to hear her protests against Japanese violations of the same code.

"Kruger's millions" will soon have a record equal to the vanished treasure of Capt. Kidd himself. Four or five expeditions have already come to grief off the South African coast in quest of them.

"Something for Nothing."

If you want a practical illustration of low giving something for nothing works, pick out one of your old college friends who's too strong to work, or a sixteenth cousin who's missed connections with the express to Fortune, and say: "You're a pretty good fellow, and I want to help you. After this I'm going to send you a hundred dollars the first of every month until you've made a new start." He'll fairly sicken you with thanks for that first hundred; he'll call you his generous benefactor over three or four pages for the second; he'll send you a nice half-page note of thanks for the third; he'll write: "Yours of the first with inclosure to hand—thanks," for the fourth; he'll forget to acknowledge the fifth; and when the sixth doesn't come promptly he'll wire collect: "Why this delay in sending my check? Mail at once." And all the time he won't have stirred a step in the direction of work, because he'll have reasoned, either consciously or unconsciously: "I can't get a job that will pay me more than $100 a month to start with; but I'm already drawing $100 without working; so what's the use?" writes "Old Gorgan" Graham, in the Saturday Evening Post. But when a fellow can't get a free pass, and he has any sort of stuff in him, except what hobos are made of, he'll usually hustle for his carfare rather than ride through life on the bumpers of a freight.

Hats and Hair.

The mass of hair that covers the top of the head is a feature of the human race in both sexes, and appears to be one of its most stable physical characteristics. Nevertheless, long observation is unnecessary to prove that this characteristic is weakening, and that the vigor of the hair is decreasing in man, says Cosmos. Now a question presents itself: Is this due to a transformation of the species or must we attribute the fact to man's habits? This second solution appears to be correct, which is consoling, since it allows us to hope that the evil may be checked. This loss of hair, that has become more striking from one generation to another by heredity, is due, according to some scientists, to the habit of covering the head.

Automobiles are more numerous in the east than in the west because, as a rule, the roads are better. They are destined to result in a better road system here, but it takes time and patience to work out a problem like this, says the Chicago Sun. Farmers are more convinced every year that it would be economy to build better roads, but it is a difficult matter to get them together and to agree to raise the funds necessary to do the work. Where proper construction has been done patrons of the roads are well pleased, for traveling is more pleasant and heavier loads can be hauled. It also adds greatly to the value and salability of abutting property.

Secretary Wilson has inaugurated a system of fire alarms in the forests of the west that will do much toward saving the timber on government reserves from destruction by the devouring element. The plan is to have mercurial alarms scattered through the forest, which, when subjected to heat, will send in an alarm automatically after the system now in vogue in most of the big stores. Mr. Wilson is confident that this plan will prevent the loss of much timber, because there will be a chance to check the fire in its incipiency. The scheme is certainly a novel one, and there is no reason why it should not be effective.

Efforts to publish a newspaper on board an ocean liner have been made in the past and proved a failure. This was because there was no means to get news except what occurred on shipboard. One could easily fill a page with the sick list, but this is not very cheerful reading. Now that wireless telegraphy has passed the experimental state, it is possible to get the latest news on shipboard, and so there is a new field for the daily paper. Passengers at sea are always hungry for news from home, and on the big ships there is no reason why a live journal would not pay.

Not many years ago one heard much about the dead-line of 50; but there has really never been any age beyond which a man might not aspire to further activities. The democratic candidate for the vice presidency was born in 1823, and is still vigorous. Gladstone was a great power in England long after he had passed the age of fourscore.

The solution of the servant girl problem will hardly be advanced by the statement of one of our contemporaries that serving maids deplore the period when they are out of service in summer because they are then deprived of the private bath to which they are ordinarily accustomed.

A HAY-STACKING DERRICK.

Contrivance Like the One Here Described Saves Lots of Time and Lessens Labor.

Many farmers, whose barn capacity is somewhat limited, stack the larger portion of their hay crop until after threshing, and then haul it into the barn later for winter feeding. Under such circumstances this method seems advisable, for then, if the weather should happen to be like what we have had the past two seasons, there is not the danger of losing the entire grain crops. Of course during some seasons there is a greater bulk of roughage to be stored than during other seasons, nevertheless, the majority of farmers know just about the producing capacity of their land, and can quite accurately estimate amount of barn room that will be required to store their crops and from year to year be able,

as soon as a crop is ready to be harvested, to secure it by storing under shelter. There is but little doubt that if the loss sustained from stacking crops were accurately figured out, there would be enough loss upon the majority of farms in five years to pay the cost of building a barn sufficiently large to store all the crops raised upon the farm.

The past two rainy seasons have, I think, demonstrated that capital in barns is a good investment. There are, however, a great many farmers who are abundantly able to have convenient barns for storing their crops who have not, simply because they do not believe the above statement. Upon my own farm I have plenty of storing room for all the hay and grain. If I had not, I would not hesitate a moment to invest in more barn room.

But where the barn room is limited, and it is necessary to stack hay, a derrick similar to the one illustrated in the cut can be erected that will greatly lessen the labor involved in stacking. The derrick shown in cut requires three poles, two 40 feet long and one 37 feet. The two longest poles should be arranged in the shape of an inverted V by bolting the ends together with a three-quarter-inch bolt. The poles should be set into the ground at least four feet in order to help stay the derrick. The derrick can be raised by the use of a rope and tackle, and thus greatly lessen the heavy lifting. It will be necessary to stay the poles by running a No. 10 wire from the top to the single pole over the top of the other poles, and then down to the ground about 30 feet from the foot of the derrick. It will also be necessary to stay the derrick in other directions. The manner in which the fork is arranged is very clearly shown in the cut. This derrick has now been in use five seasons, and has proved very satisfactory.—Leo C. Reynolds, in Ohio Farmer.

RAISING HOGS ON SHARES.

A Practice Quite Popular in Iowa and One That Yields Big Profits to Investors.

Iowa farmers in many cases are renting lands on which hogs are grown on shares, having stocked the farm on shares to tenants. A telegram from Iowa City says that the problem now is, on what basis shall the increase of brood sows and other animals supplied on shares be divided at the end of the season?

The owner of the animals placed out on shares has usually expected at the time of divisions half of the increase of such animals, or if the animals are not sold, an equitable division of them has usually been made. This plan has been carried out many times in this county with both sides of the bargain well pleased, despite the fact that the first owner of the sows gets all the best of the bargain.

The way in which a careful farmer of the county figured it out this spring, and it is on his figures that the most of the present contracts are based, is to take a herd of ten sows, and placing the usual value upon them, about $150, credit that to the owner. He credits also ten acres of pasture land, rented for about $50, to the same side of the book, bringing his investment up to about $200. He then takes the average production, of about six pigs to the sow, and values them at $72, or $720 for the whole herd.

Up to this time it has been the custom for the investor to take half of this sum, or $360, as his share of the increase, and since money has been tight during the past few years, he has had no trouble in getting it. It gives him, however, about 180 per cent. on his invested capital for the risk involved.

DISEASE IN SWILL BARREL.

Carelessness Which Is the Direct Cause of Immense Loss Among Hogs on the Farm.

The more closely swine diseases of the ordinary character are investigated the more clearly it appears that they result almost exclusively from improper feeding and care. It has been discovered that the ordinary swill barrel is a breeder of germs that carry diseases of varying character to the animals that consume the swill. It should surprise no one that this is true, when the contents of the average swill barrel are inventoried. In contributing to that receptacle no thought is given to anything but the disposition of some waste of the house in a quick and easy manner.

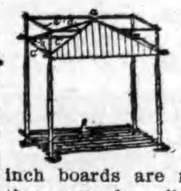
The swill barrel is located to tempt deposits of everything that no other use can be made of, regardless of its character as food of health or nutrition. So into it go meat scraps, partially decayed fruits, vegetables cooked and uncooked, all the table scraps, greasy, sour and sweet combined, coffee and tea grounds, milk in all stages of acidity; soapy and unclean dishwater, the vilest ingredient of all; and not infrequently a drowned chicken spices the conglomeration. The combination is, as a rule, in a state of fermentation, and too often putridity, adding enormously to the unhealthful character of the nauseating mass.

The pigs may get it, for the hungry pig is not fastidious, and he is not well enough up in hygienic lore to know that the stuff is unhealthy. But the feeder should know that it is not proper food, and should not prepare that sort of a banquet for his porcine guests. Rheumatism, swollen joints, skin diseases, sore eyes and diarrhoea are some of the ailments that have been traced directly to the alleged food just described. Swill is all right, and much of the offal of the house table may be used in it without danger. But it should be fed when fresh, or in the first stages of fermentation; and greasy, soapy, decayed and putrid articles should be kept out of it. Here is a place to prevent disease that is always difficult and sometimes impossible to cure.—Indiana State Sentinel.

GRAIN AND HAY BARRACK.

It Can Be Built by Any Farmer at an Outlay for Roofing Boards and Nails Only.

The cut shows a cheap and most serviceable structure for storing hay or grain. Any farmer with a woodlot can build this barrack himself at an outlay for the roofing boards and nails only. As only 250 feet of one-half-inch boards are needed, and two or three pounds nails, the cost is small. Cut and peel four poles about five inches in diameter at small end and 17 feet long. Cut eight small saplings 14 feet long and three or four inches in diameter, and four small pieces, 12 feet long, to nail on top of the posts. Dig four post holes 12 feet apart and three feet square.



Before putting down the posts, bore one and one-half-inch holes, 18 inches apart, beginning at small end. These holes are for pins for roof to rest on. Put down the 17-foot posts, set perfectly plumb, and nail on the 12-foot stringers, c, at or near top. To put on the roof take four of the 14-foot pieces, made smooth. Halve them at the corners, allowing frame of roof, of which these pieces are the sills, to come outside the posts one and one-half inches on all sides. This gives room for the roof to be raised easily from any corner.

Take four small pieces for rafters. Place a small block at apex, a, and a small crosspiece at each corner, inside posts, b, for foot of rafter to rest on. The roof may be three feet higher at apex, a, than at sills, c. The roof boards should come down six inches below sills. A foundation of hay rails, f, keeps the grain or hay off the ground. This barrack will hold 200 stooks of oats or wheat, or four to five tons settled hay. For bins to hold the roof use iron bolts, or good wooden pins of oak or birch. The roof is raised as filled. When the barrack is emptied, the roof may be let down.—J. A. Macdonald, in Farm and Home.

WHEN FARM ANIMALS DIE.

There's Money in Their Hides If They Are Taken Off Properly and Promptly Salted.

Each year there are many thousands of cows, horses and sheep that die by sickness or accident whose hides will bring good prices if taken off properly and promptly salted and sent to market. It is more important to salt hides taken from dead animals than those that are slaughtered, for the sticking draws out most of the blood from the hides as well as the meat of such. Not so with the animal that dies without being bled; hence the necessity of prompt and well salting. To do this, it requires a bucket of salt to a good-sized hide; smaller ones in proportion. Such hides if well taken off and not cut with holes will bring full value. The wool from dead sheep, when the hide is spoiled, is worth saving also. If farmers will carry out our suggestions, they will thank us for telling them of it. Take them off right, follow instructions on salting and they will get number one price if sent to a good firm. They should not be deceived by buyers at home, who tell them that hides and skins from dead animals are not worth half the price of those from slaughtered animals.—Midland Farmer.

Several of the idle American war correspondents in Tokio are learning Japanese. Opinion is divided as to why they are doing so. Some say it may be because they hope to make their way to the front disguised as Japs, and others think it may be that they wish to thank the military censor in his own language for his many attentions to them, their own language not being expressive enough.

A long time ago, at the entrance to one of the old English taverns, there was placed a box with a slit in it bearing the initials "T. I. P." These little letters, spelling "Tip," were meant to stand for the words, "To Insure Promptness." It is a far cry to the time when this little word was coined, and the visitors at the coffee house began to drop in their coins to secure greater alacrity on the part of the aproned Ganymedes, who served meat pies and small beer.

MR. H. W. BABCOCK, Auburn, N. Y.,
Dear Sir:—I think duty requires me to let you see what Babcock's Rheumatism Cure has done for me. I have been troubled for over two years with muscular rheumatism and a very severe heart trouble. During that time I was as helpless as a child. I saw your advertisement in the paper, and although my age is against me, as I am 74 years old, I determined to give it a trial. While I was using my second bottle I could see my rheumatism was disappearing and my heart trouble was greatly improved. I can walk now and do my own work, while before I had to be lifted from my chair and steadied if moved at all. Your medicine has certainly worked wonders with me. You may use this letter in any way you see fit, for I feel it my duty to God and to let my fellow sufferers know what this medicine has done for me. Yours truly,

The Fair.

The second annual Genoa fair has come and gone, and it was a success, financially and otherwise. The first day dawned mild and warm but cloudy. The people commenced to arrive early from all quarters, and the attendance that day is said to have exceeded that of any first day of any fair ever held here. But during the afternoon a heavy storm arose and the sky looked so black and threatening that many started at once for home, and many others sought places of shelter while the rain came down.

The second day was cloudy and a chilling wind blew from the north, but the people came just the same, and the attendance was perhaps five thousand. The inclement weather prevented the exhibit of stock and cut down all other exhibits, but the trotting was first-class in every respect. All sorts of fakirs were on hand and some of them did a thriving business. The merry-go-round went all the time, and a couple of shows drew good crowds. The music by the Orpheus Jubilee Singers was fine, but the heavy wind prevented many from enjoying their songs. The Interlaken band did excellent work, both on the grounds and about the village. The ladies' driving contest was won by Miss Rena Case, 1st prize; Mrs. Fred Wilcox, 2nd; Mrs. Chas. Lane, 3rd.

The Wegman Piano Co. had an excellent exhibit of their instruments in the large tent, while the business interests of the village were represented by exhibits from the stores of F. C. Hagin, D. W. Smith, Mrs D. E. Singer and Miss Lena Goodelle. W. P. Parker of Moravia had a fine line of carriages, etc., on the ground, as did W. Harvey Kelley of Auburn.

The Van Buren carriage was on the grounds each day and attracted much attention, as did also the old cookstove purchased by Chas. D. Strong in 1857 and used on his canal boat, "Horace Greeley."

On Wednesday Senator Thurston spoke from the judges' stand. His address was excellent and thorough but he was somewhat annoyed by a few men who preferred to see the trotting races. Hon. John M. Crosby also gave a first class address on Thursday.

A summary of the races follows:

Geo. B. (W. E. Howell)	1	1	1
J. B. S. (J. Keefe)	2	2	2
Hattie S. (P. M. Smith)	3	3	3

Time 2:27¼.

Time was when the people spent a good portion of the day looking at the fine stock and the great display of farm products, but by most people these things are given but a glance now. The hand of twentieth century progress has touched the country fair, and the audience in the grandstand is given a running entertainment which is as good as anything which can be bought elsewhere for twice the price of admission to the grounds; the horse race is but one of the variety of pleasing acts. A platform at one side of the judges' stand affords opportunity for the various attractions which are different each year. And then some people will go home from the fair, where for 25 cents they have seen a dozen entertainments in one and say the fair was pretty slim and didn't amount to anything! Much pleasure and profit can be gained by looking over the exhibits at the country fair, and some avail themselves of the opportunity offered. One can meet old friends by the score, renew acquaintances of years gone by, and secure new and valuable ideas regarding his business which will enable him to turn more dollars into the bank and more comforts into the home.

The receipts were as follows: Gate, $888 60; grandstand, $76.85; privileges, $330.75; race entries, etc., $130.82. It is expected that the society will have some money left for a start next year.

NOTES ON THE FAIR.

The various booths apparently did a good business.

The officers labored hard to make the fair a success, but they could not make the weather.

The way the people turned out the second day, in the face of a cold, sour day, was a glad surprise to the society.

Everybody enjoyed the Miller band. This is one of the best organizations in this part of the country.

The society was not to the expense of running a street sprinkler after the first day. So much gained anyway.

What can the society put up next year to entertain the folks? That is the question. Who can arrange a program that will be original and taking?

Why did not more of our local poultrymen come out with their stock? There are plenty of fine birds in this section. This department ought to be well filled.

It is reported that intoxicating drink was sold on the grounds. The officers of the society will be glad to be furnished with good and sufficient evidence of this, if it be true.

The Panama Canal.

The announcement that the Panama canal will, in all probability, be completed at a much earlier date than was at first deemed possible will be cheering news to everybody except the opponents of the Republican administration and those who didn't want the canal anyway, for the whole commercial world is interested in the success of this great work. Furthermore, thanks to American genius and superior executive ability, it will cost less than the original estimate, partly because of the decreased time of completion, and partly because the use of improved labor-saving machinery will obviate the necessity of employing such large gangs of men as would otherwise have been imperatively required.

Colonel R. M. Harrod, one of the commissioners, now in Washington, is responsible for the statement that the great waterway will be open for business in five years' time, and that not over 5,000 men will be required at one time on the work. Seven hundred native Panamans and Jamaica negroes are now engaged on the most difficult part of the route, the Culebra cut, clearing the way and getting ready for the time when the plans for the entire canal shall be completed, when work will be pushed. New machinery of American make has been ordered, but even with the old French machinery more work is accomplished, and at less cost, than under the old engineers.

This is an era of accomplishment of everything that is to benefit the world on a grand scale, and America is certainly leading in it, partly because Americans have a natural inclination for large enterprises, and partly because they have the genius or the executive ability to carry out such work. While Europe may still excel us in the esthetic, America certainly takes the lead in the practical—not, however, that we are lacking utterly in the more finished and ornamental characteristics of modern life, but the practical predominates in the average American make-up.—The Brooklyn Standard Union.

Obituary.

Mrs. Mary Mosher, widow of the late Nelson Mosher, died Sunday evening, Sept. 18, 1904, after suffering for nearly 28 years with rheumatism and being almost helpless for the past 13 years. She bore her sufferings with Christian patience and fortitude, as she had always accepted the misfortunes that came to her. Her death occurred on the same day and month and nearly the same hour as that of her husband who died very suddenly two years before. When our loved ones have crossed the river we are somehow still bound to them by the cords of deathless love; we can never realize that they are gone. But we have much to comfort us in the thought that the dead whose memory we so fondly cherish still live beyond the grave.

As morning ushered in the hour of prayer,
God took mother to his bosom—
Freed her from all toil and care,
She has left her earthly body and to God her soul has fled.

Round her bed we stood and watched her
Through that dark and dreary night,
Waiting for her Savior's coming,
And for her spirit's flight.

Many years she toiled and suffered
Always trusting in God's love,
Waiting for that last glad moment
When he'd take her up above.

She has joined the heavenly chorus,
There to chant celestial lays,
There among the white robed angels
She shall have her feet again.

Perfect peace be with the mother,
Peace in which no sorrow blends,
Christ shall keep her from all sorrow
Peace and joy supreme shall reign.

Be with us, O heavenly Father,
Guard and guide us in thy love,
And when we lay down life's burden
May we meet dear mother above.

Society's New Game.

"Trail" has taken society by storm. It is something new, something different.

"Trail" as the name implies, is founded on a popular hunting sport, is played with fifty-three fine cards in four colors, representing a fox to be chased and caught, and four packs of hounds of thirteen each.

"Trail" has a constantly recurring interest for players as they perfect their playing from evening to evening, in marked contrast to certain recent boisterous games that bore the players at the end of an hour.

With the one pack six other splendid, new, copyright games can be played. Two educational games and two games of fun, making it suitable for all members of a family.

"Trail" can be had of dealers or sent postpaid, gilt edge, 75c, plain 50c. Rules for the seven games free.

SUNDAY.

'Tis Sunday now,
The day is still,
And on the brow
Of yonder hill
A lonely tree
Stands as if it
Might simply be
A painted bit
Against the dawn;
As still it stands
As if 'twere drawn
With human hands.

And birds that sang
On yesterday,
Whose glad notes rang
A roundelay,
So shrill and sweet
It seemed it might
In rhythm beat
Throughout the night,
Now sit as still,
Or softly croon
From yonder hill
A gospel tune.

And over there
Across the street,
With plaited hair
And faces sweet,
The children go
Sedately down,
Some fair as snow,
Some almost brown,
To Sunday school
And take their seat
'Mi[illegible]s cool,

Got
Just [illegible]
I heard them cla[illegible]
The same old way,
And lilt and laugh
And dance and run
As bits of chaff
Float in the sun;
God bless each lad
And girlish mite;
They'll all be glad
And grimed ere night.

Sally Tigg of the Tutti-Frutti's

By WILLIAM HEYLIGER

(Copyright, 1904, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

IF THE many schmes to separate the public from its money," said Major Ike Gleason, "commend me to the idea of fraternity. If ever I have a dollar that I desire to see disappear, either wholly or in part, steer me for a lodge room. And if the day should ever come when I forget the hard truths I learned across the knee of a benevolent Sunday school superintendent, make me president of the Sons of Beelzebub, or something else.

"It's a queer game, with more mystery to the square inch than a plate of boarding house hash. The cards are all marked and stacked, and grim Fate has decreed that ladies shall make the best dealers. A man has a slim, forlorn chance when he sits in a game with a fellow man who wears a plug hat and sports a diamond in his tie; but when a woman throws in her chips, he wants to bring along an extra suit, or he'll go home without even the protecting embrace of his own very shirt.

"Sally Tigg was a case in point, and said point was sharp. Sally was 39 and unmarried, which may account for many things. Take a spoonful of tobasco sauce, sprinkle it with pepper and swallow it, and you'll have a life-sized portrait of Sally. Take a Wall street gentleman, with an eagle eye on his neighbor's wealth, and you'll have Sally again. Then take any ordinary old gentleman who makes a practice of minding his own business and paying his rent, and you'll have what Sally was not.

"Sally Tigg joined the Tutti-Frutti Ladies just when they needed her most. Money was as scarce as billy-goat whiskers, and the treasurer had nothing to do but look wise. For a couple of meetings there was nothing doing. Then somebody said that Sally, poor thing, was beginning to show her age and was getting too old for active work, and rolling up her sleeves, Sally spat on her hands and sparred for an opening.

"Her first offering was a dark horse. It was concealed in a bag, and the members were to pay five cents a chance, and the winner was to bring a dark horse for the next meeting, and then they were to take chances all over again. 'The more dark horses, the more money,' said Sally, and they went at the constitution with a bowie knife and cut out such a scandalous thing as a monthly meeting, and changed it to a gathering every week. Soon the Tutti-Frutti's money was on speaking terms with some of the swellest accounts in the bank, and at the end of six months the society decided to give a ball.

"Sally was the whole show. One little girl was engaged to Perkins, a printer, and Sally appointed her a committee of one to see to the press-work. 'How much?' said the little girl to Perkins, and Perkins said 'Nothing,' and went to the back of the shop and asked somebody to kick him. Then Sally called on some of the merchants. They were looking for contributions to raffle, she said, sweetly, and the first man she tried to hold up showed her the door, and asked her did she think he was running a hock shop. After that she used tact. Of course, if a store-keeper could afford to lose the Tutti-Frutti Ladies' trade he needn't give anything, but—— The merchants took the hint. First came a morris chair, then a bottle of hair oil, then a bunch of junk that would have done credit to an iron foundry, and lastly a cheap wedding ring. 'You can give it to some one of the old maid ladies,' said the clerk in the jewelry store. Sally never spoke to him again.

"The society called on the editor of the 'Weekly Howler' in a body, and that divinity nearly fell out of his sanctum when they asked for free space. It was unheard of, he sputtered and then they sat down to argue it out, and from that moment he wasn't even an also-ran. At five o'clock the printer's devil carried him out limp as a rag. 'We'll come again tomorrow,' said Sally. 'Don't,' implored the editor; 'I'll give you half a column.'

"I think they paid for the hall, but I'd have to see the bills to believe it. Each and every Tutti-Frutti Lady was expected to sell ten tickets, and soon the town and the male inhabitants thereof began to wear a haunted look. You couldn't go to the corner grocery without being held up for a quarter, and it meant financial ruin to go out for a prolonged walk. One lady camped on my trail for three days, and then I tipped a policeman a dollar to lock her up as a suspicious character. That quieted things down a bit.

"The day of the ball breakfast and dinner were unknown quantities. The tickets read 'including supper,' and we were preparing to settle old scores. 'We'll eat even the dishes,' said Perkins, the printer, and I invited all hands to have one on me. 'Strike at the oppressors,' said I, and every man promised to do his duty. It was a solemn moment, a very solemn moment.

"The ball was a grand success. The jewelry clerk wore a white vest and patent leather shoes, and Perkins, the printer, sported a red tie. The band was an amateur cornetist. He knew only 'Marching Through Georgia,' and he played that over and over again until midnight. Then we took up a collection and begged him to stop, and while he was packing away his instrument, I went down stairs and scouted around.

"The boys were buckling their belts tighter and winking at one another in anticipation. 'There's many a slip,' said I, and I put my eye to a keyhole and peeked into the dining-room. A long table stood in the center of the floor, and on each plate was one lone, solitary sandwich.

"I went back to the dining-room with all the modesty of one who has made a great discovery. They were pairing off for the supper march, and, getting my hat, I slid out to the street. Pretty soon I heard a yell, and after that came sounds as though somebody was trying to stand the dining-room on its festive head. 'Sweet land of liberty,' said I, and I started thoughtfully homeward. As I entered my boarding house the police patrol dashed past the door, and as I rolled into bed I heard the fire engines go up a side street. Then I sank into the sleep of the just.

"Next morning I met Perkins, the printer. His eyes were blackened, his head was done up in bandages, and, taking him all in all, he looked like a hospital out for a walk.

"'See Sally Tigg?' said he.

"'Looking for her?' said I, surprised.

"'I am,' said he, making a noble effort to see straight. 'If you come across her send her around to the shop, will you?'

"'Sure,' said I.

"'And Ike,' said he.

"'Yes,' said I.

"'Send the coroner with her,' said he, and he walked down the street."

Major Ike buttoned his coat and stared dismally across the room. I lit a cigar. After awhile Major Ike rose to his feet and sighed.

"Some things," said he, impressively, "are necessary evils, like mothers-in-law and politicians. I always bow to the inevitable. Guess I'll go down and pay my dues in the Sons of Opportunity."

BEATS TYPEWRITER RECORD.

Boy of Eighteen Reels off Nearly 29,000 Words in Seven Hours —Uses Old System.

A notable typewriting feat was performed in St. Louis by S. F. Cole, aged 18, of Catskill, N. Y. He broke the world's record for the greatest number of words in seven hours of continuous writing. At the end of five hours the previous record of 22,000 words was broken and Mr. Cole decreased his speed, finishing the seven hours with a total of 28,944 words, an average of 67 11-12 words per minute. The previous record was made by Mattie F. Pretty, in the United States senate office on the 29th of last July.

Cole received his training in a law office. In speed writing he uses the first finger of each hand and in his recent test he wrote a 54 word sentence from memory.

Dr. Chiles, the well-known osteopath of Auburn, announces that he now has with him, Dr. Kathryne Severson, one of the first women graduates of the original school of osteopathy at Kirksville, Mo. Both of these doctors enjoyed exceptional advantages, being educated directly under the founder of the system. Osteopathy has within the past few years made wonderful strides in public favor. This progress is based solely on the remarkable results skilled osteopaths have been able to get in cases that have not yielded to other methods of treatment. Write Dr. Chiles, Metcalf Bldg, Auburn, about your case, or better call on him when in Auburn. Literature sent on application.

NEW COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

Gen. Blackmar, of Massachusetts, Now Is at the Head of the Grand Army Veterans.

The new commander in chief, Gen. Wilmon W. Blackmar, is regarded as a man who will highly honor the office to which he has been chosen. It is a rare thing for the encampment to give the highest office to the state in which the gathering is held, it usually having to content itself with the senior vice commander in chief, but Gen. Blackmar was so popular and strong a candidate that Gen. John Shotts, of New York, who was his only competitor, withdrew his name, at the request of Corporal James Tanner, of U. S. Grant post, of Brooklyn, as Shotts had once before done, and Gen. Blackmar was elected by acclamation, Shotts heading the committee appointed to conduct the new commander in chief to the chair. Both were applauded to the echo. It is thought that nothing can keep Gen. Shotts out of the office in 1905.

Gen. Blackmar has had an interesting career and has an excellent civil war record. He was born in Pennsylvania in 1841 and was fitting for college when the civil war broke out. He relinquished his studies to enlist in the Fifteenth Pennsylvania cavalry, serving with that command at Antietam, Stone River, Chattanooga, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge. He was promoted through the noncommissioned grades, then commissioned second lieutenant and transferred to the First West Virginia veteran cavalry, one of Gen. Custer's famous regiments. It was while holding this position and when only 24 years of age that he performed the act which has made him known as a gallant soldier the country over. Near Five Forks, April 1, 1865, Blackmar was ordered to form a new line at a critical stage of action, while the men were being pressed back. He carried out this instruction, and then, without orders, advanced the line, calling upon the color-bearer to follow. The call was repeated and the line advanced, the charge was made and the enemy routed.

This audacious and brave action was witnessed by Custer, who promoted him on the field to a captaincy, and since the war an order has been issued by the war department granting a medal of honor to Gen. Blackmar for gallantry in action. Participating in upward of 30 battles of the war, he remained at the front until Lee's surrender at Appomattox, being then provost marshal of the third division of Sheridan's famous cavalry corps.

UNCLE QUOTED SCRIPTURE

Reminder to the Soldier Was, "It Is More Blessed to Give Than to Receive."

"At the second battle of Bull Run," remarked a member of one of the New York posts, "the famous Thirty-fifth regiment, from Jefferson county, N. Y., suffered terribly, and efforts were immediately made by the friends at home to fill its thinned ranks. Among the first to spring to its rescue was one Augustus Buel, who was famous as a hunter in John Brown's tract, and distinguished for being a capital fellow and an excellent marksman. His uncle, Deacon Weatherby, met Gus a day or two after he had enlisted, and said:

"'Well, Augustus, I understand you have enlisted in the Thirty-fifth?"

"'Yes, uncle, I have,' was the reply, 'and I am to start for the regiment tomorrow morning.'

"'That's right my boy; that's right,' continued the deacon, 'I am very glad you have enlisted, and you have my prayers and blessings. And now, Augustus, boy, let me give you a little advice. When the order is given to advance on the confederates, I want you, my dear boy, to remember the Scriptural injunction, 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.'"

Fatal Oversight.

"Young Watkins and his bride have already quarreled," remarked the society reporter, "although they have only been married two weeks."

"What's the trouble?" asked the sporting editor.

"It seems," explained the pencil shover, "that the wedding presents were at the bottom of it. He wanted to take two or three of them to his office and she objected."

"Serves 'em right," growled the sporting editor. "They should have signed an agreement as to the division of the gate receipts before the match was pulled off."—Chicago Daily News.

His Interpretation.

THRICE-A-WEEK EDITION.

Read Wherever the English Language Is Spoken.

The tickets are now made up and the most interesting Presidential campaign the United States has known since 1860 has begun. And it is the most important, too.

Which will it be, Parker and Davis or Roosevelt and Fairbanks? Nobody knows yet, but the Thrice-a-Week World will tell you promptly, fully and truthfully every movement of a hot and thrilling campaign. The real newspaper now prints facts rather than hopes, and it has always been the effort of the Thrice-a-Week World to tell the thing that has happened exactly as it happened. Thus you can judge for yourself and form your opinion.

There is also a great war going on in the East, where the World has a brilliant staff of correspondents in the field, and their reports are found regularly in the columns of the Thrice-a-Week World.

The Thrice-a-Week World's regular subscription price is only $1.00 per year, and this pays for 156 papers. We offer this unequalled newspaper and the GENOA TRIBUNE together one year for $1 65. The regular subscription price of the two papers is $2 00.

The first woman painter to receive an order from the German government is said to be Fraeulein Grete Waldan, who decorated the hall of the German building at the Paris exposition and who was also commissioned to furnish paintings for the St. Louis exposition. These last are four in number in the hall of mines and metallurgy, two representing the mines of Koenigshuette in Silesia, and two views of the Krupp plant. Another painting in the educational building shows the famous Berlin thoroughfare "Unter den Linden."

Miss Cole first met the prince and princess of Wales when visiting Melbourne, at a luncheon given by Lady Tennyson. Being an authority on jonquil culture and likewise an accomplished artist in water color, in both of which the princess of Wales is proficient, Miss Cole made a particularly favorable impression on the royal guest, who expressed her pleasure in meeting a young woman interested in her hobbies.

WITH HUMOROUS TURN.

Robert B. Armstrong, assistant secretary of the treasury, relates that a newly appointed collector in one of the interior ports had occasion recently to pass upon the appraisement of a statue of Venus de Milo imported for a local magnate. The collector ordered the case opened, found the statue was without arms, and entered upon his returns "of no commercial value; damaged in importation."

Sir Conan Doyle recently told a story of an English officer who was badly wounded in South Africa, and the military surgeon had to shave off that portion of his brains which protruded from his skull. The officer got well, and later in London the surgeon asked whether he knew that a portion of his brains was in a glass bottle in a laboratory. "Oh, that does not matter now," replied the soldier; "I've got a permanent position in the war office."

The beautiful Baroness Hayashi, wife of the Japanese ambassador to London, recently attended a dinner party where a Frenchman held the table spellbound for an hour by an extraordinary dissertation on Japan. He described the Japanese mode of bathing, the Japanese dress, the Japanese religion and form of marriage proposal, the geisha's manner of making up her lips and eyes and nails—in a word, the most intimate secrets of Japan were exposed and minutely described by the Frenchman. He departed early. He had made a great success. After he was gone a young stock broker said in a reverent tone: "What a wonderful man! He seems to know something about everything." "Except Japan," commented Baroness Hayashi, quietly.

In the astronomical periodical Sirius, Dr. H. Voigt expresses the opinion that the so-called craters in the moon are nothing but coral structures. If the sea were dry, the earth, he declares, would present a similar appearance.

Prof. Assmann, one of the German government meteorological experts, has risen to explain that lightning seldom strikes in a forest where the trees are dense and of about the same height. Danger exists only where isolated trees rise above their surroundings.

The most remarkable photographs of lightning on record have been made by a Hamburger named Walter, and are reproduced in the Annalen der Physik. They show that a flash lasting eight ten-thousandths of a second is preceded by at least five smaller flashes separated by four ten-thousandths of a second.

It is announced in a scientific journal that Prince Albert of Monaco has taken the lead in the movement for another north pole expedition on a plan suggested by Ensign Charles Benard, late of the French navy. The cost of the expedition is set down at $300,000, two ships to be employed.

The French physiologist Fere has made experiments which show that the process of digestion diminishes the capacity for muscular work fully one-half. As regards the effects of stimulants like tobacco and alcohol, he has found that while they diminish fatigue, the effect never lasts more than ten minutes, and is followed by a greater degree of fatigue than would have existed if they had not been indulged in.

PERSONAL PARTICULARS

The longer Sir Henry Irving lives, the more kind he is to the artists of the profession which he so adorns, and by whom he is so much beloved and respected.

Gen. Kuropatkin, the Russian commander, is one of the most devout of Russians. When at home he never misses a service and has a chapel in his own home.

Sir Chentung Liang Cheng, Chinese minister to the United States, is also accredited to Mexico, and he is now in the City of Mexico to establish the Chinese legation. During all the history of Mexico known to modern times there has probably been no Chinese visitor of the rank of the minister who has ever visited that country.

Few explorers have gained great wealth; some of them have either forfeited life in the pursuit of their ambitious projects or been satisfied with small pensions. Sir Henry Stanley was an exception. He left an estate of more than $750,000, amassed largely from the sale of his books. Livingstone's fortune did not amount to a tenth of this. Du Chaillu passed away almost penniless.

President Kruger is said to have expressed a hope on his deathbed that certain of his personal effects might find a resting place in a national museum at Pretoria, should it ever be possible to establish one there. His wishes applied particularly to copies of the several constitutions of the republic and to a number of relics which might be presumed to possess a national interest for the Boer people.

Henry G. Davis, Judge Parker's venerable running mate, was 14 years old when Arkansas was admitted to the union. Since that time he has witnessed the admission of Michigan, Florida, Texas, Iowa, Wisconsin, California, Minnesota, Oregon, Kansas, West Virginia, Nevada, Nebraska, Colorado, North and South Dakota, Montana, Washington, Idaho, Wyoming and Utah. Since the revolution 32 states have been admitted, and Mr. Davis has witnessed the admission of 21.

WORK OF THE JOKESMITHS.

Junior Partner—Young Jones has overstayed his vacation five days. Shall we fire him? "No promote him, that shows he ain't afraid of hard work."

She—Is it really true that the blind can determine color by the sense of touch?

He—Sure, I once knew a blind man who was able to tell a red-hot stove by merely putting his fingers on it.

"Your husband," said Mrs. Oldcastle, "seems to be so altruistic."

"Yes, I know it. But Josiah always was a great hand to overeat, and I think that must be what gives it to him."

She—And are you really so much better since you returned from your trip abroad?

He—Yes, indeed! I'm quite another man. I assure you.

"Well I'm sure all your friends will be delighted to hear it."

Hostess—Won't you sing something for us, Miss Screecher?

Miss Screecher—Why, er, most of the guests have gone home, have they not?

"Yes; but some of them seem inclined to stay here all night."

Mrs. Newbride—See here! when I gave you that pie you promised to saw some wood.

Hungry Hank—Well, you oughtn't to've gave the pie first, lady. I just ruined the saw tryin' to cut de pie.

In Time of Peace.

When the sword is rusty, the plow bright, the prisons empty, the granaries full, the steps of the temple worn down and those of the law courts grass-grown; when doctors go a-foot, the bakers on horseback, and the men of letters drive in their own carriages, then the empire is well governed.—Chinese Saying.

Neat Packing Helps Sales.

Appearances count for much in marketing produce. Neatness plays no little part in selling the small things off of the farm. We have seen good butter, fruit and poultry go begging for customers, when placed on sale in a slipshod fashion alongside of an attractive package of the above-named produce. A little time spent in getting things in shape is time saved—not lost. The grocery man and merchant, in displaying goods for sale, recognize this principle in exhibiting their wares. Why should not the farmer profit by their experience?—Midland Farmer.

RESULTS IN PIG FEEDING.

The accompanying cut almost tells the story of results secured in a comparative feeding trial with two lots of shoats. One lot, represented by No. 1, was fed on corn meal and water, and one lot, as shown by No. 2, corn meal and skim milk. Lot No. 1 gained 118 pounds and No. 2 309 pounds. The cost of lot No. 1, purchase price of shoats, outlay for feed and labor in caring for same during feeding period, was $19.56; selling for $20.64, netting a profit of only $1.05. Lot No. 2 cost a total of $26.87, allowing 20 cents per hundred pounds of skim milk, sold for $34.83, giving a profit of $7.96. The slop for No. 2 was made of corn meal one part and skimmed milk three parts.—Farm and Home.

CLOVER AS FOOD FOR PIGS

Some Feeding Hints Whose Value Is So Apparent That They Should Be Given a Trial.

Clover and a little corn or other grain make a much cheaper growing ration for pigs and shoats during the grass feeding period than the grass alone. If pigs and shoats are fed with a little grain while running on grass at the age of five months they may be made to weigh all the way from 150 to 175 pounds.

On the other hand, where they were compelled to live on grass alone, it will bother them to weigh more than 125 pounds. The increase in weight during the first five months of the young shoat's life can be made at a less cost than any gain that will be made later.

At the same time, to keep the young shoat in good condition from the time he is weaned until the fattening period in no sense interferes with making just as rapid gains during the fattening period, so that one is just ahead the extra gain for a given amount of grain fed in this way that a young shoat will make over an older one.

When it comes to selling the grown-up shoats that have been fed with a little corn or other grain while at pasture, they will outsell the quickly fattened hog.

This is because the butcher who has to cut up the carcass has learned that the hams, shoulders and other parts of the hog that has been fed well and kept growing are thicker and of better quality than of one that is first allowed to grow the frame and afterwards fatten in a few months.

In the latter case there is too apt to be an excess of internal fat. In the former case there is an intermingling of the fat and lean, especially that of the hams and shoulders, which pelases the ham epicure, thus making the carcass one that will cut up more profitably and give better satisfaction to the consumer.—St. Louis Republic.

SUNSHINE IN THE STABLE.

Light Is Essential to the Welfare of Horses and Other Animals Confined Within Walls.

Sunshine is just as essential to horses and other farm animals as it is to human beings. Do not lose sight of this fact when building stables and pens. This is too often done, and stables for both horses and cattle are too dark. The eyes of horses are not infrequently injured by being kept in dark stables. Our houses, as a rule, are much better lighted than our stables, yet we all know how uncomfortable it is to go out of a well lighted house into the glare of sunshine, especially if there is snow on the ground. The effect is even worse on horses and cows. Aside from any special effect on the eyes, light and sunshine [illegible] importance to the general health and thrift of farm stock, and they should always be constructed with a view to admitting as much as possible of both. In old barns and stables where the stock quarters are dark, and, as a necessary consequence, damp, it would be a good idea to put in some windows to admit light and sunshine into them. The present is a good time to attend to this, and the considerate person will do it.—Thomas W. Lloyd, in N. Y. Tribune Farmer.

SOME FACTS FOR BREEDERS

Why Close Attention Should Be Paid to the Individual Merits of Farm Animals.

The breeder of cattle sooner or later comes to realize the fact that individual merit must be the chief thing considered in an animal. At first he is inclined to stake everything on pedigree, but after a time he comes to realize that pedigrees are indicative only of certain facts in the past history of the breed, but are not enough to use as a foundation in building up a herd. A remote ancestor of his animals may have been a wonder in his ability to make meat, but it will be seen, after a little figuring, that a very small part indeed of the blood of that animal can be in the animals he owns. If in-breeding is not practiced, the tenth generation after an animal each of his progeny will have in him less than one-thousandth part of the blood of that sire or dam and the rest will be from the blood of animals not particularly noted.

Therefore individual merit must receive a large amount of attention. Some one has said that a pedigree running back 15 generations would contain over 32,000 names, which will show how little of the blood of any remote ancestor any one animal can have. Pedigrees are of value, but sometimes they are a positive injury to the breeder, who keeps an animal with a pedigree when he would have killed the animal before breeding it if it had no pedigree.

But for all this the buyer of cattle, if they are to be used for breeding purposes, puts great weight on the pedigree, though there may be little in it. There is always a chance that something unusual may come out of it, and the ordinary buyer is ready to take the chance. In many cases pedigrees are profitable only in the sale of an animal, and that only because of the sentiment of the buyer. We believe there is more danger of losing sight of the individuality of an animal than of losing sight of a pedigree. Therefore we say, pay close attention to the individuality of the animal that is to be used for a breeder, and if he does not, in conformation and other qualities, come up to the type desired, fatten him or her for the shambles.—Farmers' Review.

A CHEAP HOUSE FOR HOGS

The Structure Here Described Will Pay for Itself in the Course of a Single Season.

Every farmer who raises a dozen or more hogs through the season should have a suitable place for them to sleep and eat. A neat and comfortable house can be built from native lumber, the cost of which can be made perhaps in one season by the number of pigs saved during farrowing time, and by economy of feed. Besides, the hogs will be more healthy in having a clean feeding floor and dry sleeping quarters.

The accompanying plan suggests a simple hoghouse, which can be built very cheap. This is a shed-roof building facing south, which has several windows to let in plenty of sunshine. The height from floor to plate is nine feet in front and six in the rear. The feedroom is 12x12, the sleeping-room 8x12, and the alley four feet wide. Farrowing pens are 6x8 feet each. The dotted lines mark movable partitions. Each pen and room should be well lighted. Small doors in front open into lots. If desired, a feeding crib or grain bin may be built on the end of the house adjacent to the feed room.—Orange Judd Farmer.

Changing the Sheep Pasture.

The sheep pasture must be sometimes given a rest from sheep on account of the deposit of the eggs of intestinal worms of sheep. In some old pastures these eggs are said to be spread by the millions. This is particularly dangerous ground to be fed over by young lambs. The man that has more than one pasture will find himself in an advantageous position in case of trouble with intestinal worms arising. He can then simply change his sheep run from one pasture to the other. Such a change is not necessary unless there are signs of the presence of such worms among the sheep.—Farmers' Review.

Mix Brains with Feeding.

It has been a common idea that all the hog was good for was to consume concentrated feeds; but now we find in the hog a new and profitable way to market roughage. Our hogs will do better if kept on grass and given cheaper grains. Our experiment stations have been experimenting with clover and alfalfa hay. Don't think that a hog is only fit to eat corn, and at the same time eat up profit; it is so sometimes, but if managed carefully it will seldom turn out that way. Mix brains with all your work, if you want more dollars mixed in your profit.—Midland Farmer.

Wheat Produces Cheap Pork.

If pork or bacon produced by wheat will be as marketable as that produced by corn the latter will take second place in the pork-growing process. At the Oregon experiment station 3.70 pounds of wheat a day produced one pound of hog meat daily, whereas it took 3.58 pounds of corn to produce the same result. The period of the test was 21 days. Another fact disclosed was that the hogs fatten almost half as fast again the first half of the fattening period as they do during the second half. The heavy lard hogs take more feed than the younger smaller bacon hogs.

FOOD AND SIZE OF COWS.

Some Valuable Thoughts on an Important Subject Furnished by a British Dairyman.

Good and persistent milking produces milkers and the development of milking qualities, whereas on the contrary if irregularity and neglect is practiced the talents which would develop with use will naturally disappear, even what there is. It is a great mistake to suppose that dairy cows all belong to one breed, says Robert Pethridge. They vary from the Small Kerry of Ireland, the Jersey and Guernsey of the Channel islands, the hardy Ayrshire of Scotland, the dual-purpose Shorthorn and Devon of the west of England, to the Red Polled Norfolk of the east of England and others, all of which with selection and development produce magnificent dairy cows. It is the character of the food more than anything else that determines the size. As we know, in those districts which do not produce rich and abundant grasses you will not find large cows, and in those districts which do produce the necessary constituents for growth and milk producing, in a few years a small bred animal will become the parent of a large type, and with continuous milking will furnish many good milkers. Select and test your cows and use a bull from a family which has a milk record, and remember that your bull is half your herd.

CALVES MUST HAVE SHADE.

Where Trees Are Not Accessible a Shelter Like the One Here Described Should Be Erected.

It is all very well to tie a calf out of doors where he can have a bite of green grass, but a shady spot to lie down in is imperative. The sun beating down upon an unprotected calf greatly retards growth. If there is no natural shade at hand, use the device shown in the cut. Two stakes, driven on a slant, support a square frame of wood that is covered with burlap, or any cheap cloth. Tie the calf so he can just reach the shade, but cannot tangle the rope about the stakes. The stakes can be shifted to new ground in a moment when it is necessary to move the calf.—Orange Judd Farmer.

The Scientific Milk Seller.

"That milk looks as if it were half water," protested the woman at the kitchen door. "It is much more than that, ma'am," replied the milkman, a college graduate in reduced circumstances. "I guarantee it to be 86 per cent. water, four per cent. butter fat, three and one-half per cent. casein, and six and one-half per cent. sugar and various salts, the combination resulting in the liquid commonly known as milk. Chemical analysis of the same cheerfully furnished whenever desired. Good morning, ma'am."—Chicago Tribune.

Oleo Law Is Constitutional.

The United States supreme court has confirmed the decision of the lower courts declaring constitutional the national oleo law which taxes oleo colored like butter. The vote was decisive, being six to three. This puts an end to the long-drawn-out fight, and dairymen are to be congratulated. Oleo manufacturers have made every possible attempt to evade the law, carrying it from court to court, hoping to find some flaw. Farmers can now turn their attention to other needed national legislation. — Orange Judd Farmer.
