The Outcome of Drink.

The greatest cause of social crime is drink. The great cause of poverty is drink. When I hear of a family broken up I ask the cause—drink. If I go to the gallows, and ask its victim the cause, the answer—drink. Then I ask myself in perfect wonderment, Why do not men put a stop to this thing?—Archbishop Ireland.

Battles to be Fought.

There are yet some great battles to be fought, some great enemies to be encountered by the United Kingdom, but the most pressing enemy is drink. It kills more than all our newest weapons of warfare, and not only destroys the body, but the mind and soul also. Lord Wolsey, Commander-in-Chief.

Drink and Business.

The consumption of liquor promotes business on about the same principle as war does. Lives are lost, wives widowed, children orphaned. There is an enormous material loss, and a crushing debt for future generations to pay. There may be an excuse for war, but not for the consumption of liquor.

Consumption is less deadly than it used to be.

Certain relief and usually complete recovery will result from the following treatment:

Hope, rest, fresh air, and—Scott's

The Scrap Book

Well Suited.
Do you think your daughter and I are suited to each other, madam?" asked the prospective bridegroom.
"Oh, splendidly! Haven't you a very fine loud voice, and isn't Mary dreadfully hard of hearing?"

CONCENTRATION.
The man who seeks one thing in life, and but one.
May hope to achieve it before life is done, but he who seeks all things wherever he goes.
Only reaps from the hopes which around him he sows.
A harvest of barren regrets, and the worm that creeps on in the dust to the definite term.
Of its creeping existence and sees nothing more.
Than the path it pursues till its creeping is o'er.
In its limited vision is happier far.
Than the half sage, whose course, fixed by no friendly star,
Is by each star distracted in turn and who knows
Each will still be as distant wherever he goes.
—Owen Meredith.

Too Much of a Good Thing.
"I've got the very thing you want," said the stableman to a ruralist in search of a horse; "a thoroughgoing road horse. Five years old, sound as a quail, $175 cash down, and he goes ten miles without stopping."
The purchaser threw his hands skyward.
"Not for me," he said; "not for me. I wouldn't give you 5 cents for him. I live eight miles out in the country, and I'd haf to walk back two miles."

His Sense of Justice.
The small grandson of Governor Cummins of Iowa is not permitted to eat doughnuts, but when visiting in the kitchen of a neighboring relative the cook presented him with one of these delicacies, and he ate it with perfect enjoyment.
All would have gone well had not an overpowering sense of his obligations mastered the culprit. Curious investigations were the natural outcome when he said his usual prayer that night and then hesitantly added this brief but incriminating petition:
"And—please bless Aunt Cora's hired girl."—Lippincott's.

Not What He Came For.
A small boy was fishing Sunday and accidentally tumbled into the creek. As an old man on the bank was helping him out he said, "How did you come to fall in the river, my little man?"
"I didn't come to fall in the river. I came to fish."—Ladies' Home Journal.

An Optimistic View.
A farmer was anxious that his son should become a minister, and for this laudable end he sent him to college for four years. To his great disappointment, the youth balked at the ministry and set himself up as a horse trader. The old farmer told his grief to a neighbor, who, however, took a more optimistic view.
"Oh, I wouldn't feel badly about that," he said. "As a horse trader Bill will probably lead more men to repentance than he ever would have as a preacher."

Observing Regulations.
A new national guardsman was on sentry duty one night during his first encampment when a friend brought him a pie from the canteen. As he sat on the grass eating the pie the major sauntered up in undress. The sentry, not recognizing him, did not salute, and the major stopped and said:
"What's that you have there?"
"Pie," said the sentry good naturedly. "Apple pie. Have a bit?"
"Do you know who I am?"
"No," said the sentry, "unless you're the major's groom."
"Guess again."
"The barber from the village?"
"No."
"Maybe—here the sentry laughed—maybe you're the major himself?"
"That's right. I am the major," was the stern reply.
The sentry scrambled to his feet.
"Good gracious!" he exclaimed.
"Hold the pie, will you, while I present arms!"

Hogs and Time.
A northerner riding through West Virginia came up with a mountaineer leisurely driving a herd of pigs.
"Where are you driving the pigs to?" asked the rider.
"Out to pasture to fatten 'em a bit."
"Isn't it pretty slow work to fatten them on grass? Up where I came from we pen them up and feed them on corn. It saves a lot of time."
"Hell! What's time to a hawg?"—Everybody's.

Epigrams by Andrew Carnegie.
Wealth lessens rather than increases human happiness. Millionaires who laugh are rare.
To educate the people is the foundation of all true progress. They'll do the rest themselves.
I never was miserably. I don't see how any man can be if he does what he feels to be right.
"To save and to serve, not to maim and destroy," that will be the text of the hour by and by.
The only sure way to keep "the submerged tenth" from drowning is to teach them to swim for themselves.
Old age should be spent not in "making muckle mair," but in making good use of what has been acquired.
There is no heritage like being born poor. The leaders and teachers of this nation came from the poor.
I would rather be grandson to one who could teach me to make shoes than the descendant of thirty worthless dukes.

I believe in true democracy. When the people are really interested in anything their voice will be heard in the polls.
This republic is immortal. No matter what trouble it goes through, it will weather it without having its foundations shaken.
If you stand near a good thing, plunge well into it. Fear is old womanish; it has kept untold millions from making fortunes.
I think I am the greatest optimist ever born. Were I to choose a motto it should be, "All is well since all grows better."
I object to the term philanthropist when applied to myself. I have always understood it to mean a man with more money than brains.
I do not believe in the socialistic idea of municipal ownership, but a proper municipal ownership is as certain as that I am alive.
Poverty develops us. It makes us work our hardest. It brings out the best in us. But bravery must go hand in hand with adversity else we are doomed.
I never worry about whether or no I am to be forgotten after death. I'll put my wealth to the best use as I see it, and time will tell whether I have exercised a wise discretion.

Had Missed It.
"What are you crying for, my poor little boy?" said a man to a crying boy.
"Pa fell downstairs."
"Don't take on so, my boy. He'll get better soon."
"That isn't it. Sister saw him fall all the way. I never saw nuffen."

His Time Limit.
A girl got on a Cleveland street car carrying one of those huffs the size of an ordinary hassock. She had only one hand in the muff. A young man sitting next to her took advantage of the opportunity to slip his hand into the unoccupied end of the muff.
The girl turned upon him severely. "I could have you arrested for such a familiarity," said she, "but I'm from Boston, and I propose to keep calm. Now, I'll just give you ten minutes to let go of my hand."

In the Game All Right.
While walking along the street a gentleman noticed a group of boys apparently playing a game.
"Well, boys, what are you at today?" he asked.
A bright youngster looked up and said:
"Why, don't you know, sir? This is the latest game out."
"Oh! What do you call it?"
"Automobile, sir."
"Automobile! Why, how do you play it?"
"Well, you see, sir, I'm the driver."
"Yes."
"And this here fellow," pointing to his neighbor, "he's the horn, and this fellow is the tamper, and those two boys over there are the passengers." And so on he described the duties of the happy youngsters.

With a kindly salutation the gentleman passed on. About ten paces away, sitting on the curb, he saw a little chap with a very forlorn countenance, so he stopped and said:
"Well, my little man, why don't you join in the game with those other boys?"
"Please, sir, I am in it; I'm the smell!"

Qualified for Promotion.
Strolling about his camp in the Philippines one day, the colonel came upon one of his officers fondling a monkey.
"Colonel," said the officer, "this is the most remarkable monkey I ever saw. Why, he can take a stick and go through the manual of arms almost as well as one of the soldiers!"
"Sh!" cautioned the colonel, glancing about in great alarm. "Don't tell anybody. Supporting the war department heard of it! They'd make him a brigadier general!"—Everybody's.

Rash Rogers' Experience.
Poulney Bigelow, author and journalist, has a chicken farm.
"I hope we succeed with the farm. I hope our experience won't too closely resemble that of my old friend, Horatio Rogers," said Mr. Bigelow.
"Rash Rogers lived in the suburbs. On the suburban train one morning he said to me, with a sour laugh:
"I've got something nobody else has got, Mr. Bigelow."
"Have you, Rash?" said I. "What is it?"
"Well," said Rogers, "I bought a fifty dollar incubator last month, put $15 worth of eggs in it and hatched out a bluebottle fly."
"He frowned, then sighed.
"Yes," he said, "I've got the only sixty-five dollar bluebottle fly in the world."

A Literal Result.
A little girl was asked to write a sentence containing the words "bitter and" and after some effort produced the following: "Our neighbor's dog chased my kitty, and as she ran under the porch he bit her end."—Lippincott's.

The Witty Scientist.
"Now, if there is any scientific question that any of my friends would like to ask, I beg of them not to hesitate. I shall be only too happy to answer any inquiry in my power," said the scientist condescendingly at the lecture's end.
An old lady in spectacles that gave her a severe, stern look rose and said:
"Why do wet tea leaves kill roaches?"
"Because, madam, when a roach comes across a wet tea leaf he says, 'Hello, here's a blanket,' and wraps himself up in it, catches cold and dies," said the unflinching professor quickly.

Saturday Night Talks

By F. E. DAVIDSON — RUTLAND Vt

THE LIFE BRINGER.

April 12, '08. (John 11.1-57.)

Of all the words which grate and jar upon the human ear, the word "death" is easily the most appalling. It is the discordant note in every burst of melody, the spectre at every feast, the thorn on every flower. It is in it the scrape of the screw driver, the smell of varnish, and the pallor of marble, the sob of broken hearts.

Death has dug a trench across the continents into which to shovel his victims. He carries a black flag and never surrenders his prisoners. Pestilence and War are his prime ministers, and fire, flood and famine, are his most active allies. The utterance of his name blanches the cheek, moistens the eye, and causes the limbs to tremble. He is dreaded by all men and is welcomed only when the woes of life have become so insupportable that the cold embrace is hailed as a deliverance. For six thousand years the race has moaned and trembled, and wept, and vainly sought to escape, from death.

Modern art and faith and tender love have done much to beautify the city of the dead. Trees cast their grateful shade above the sleepers and birds nest and sing in the branches. Flowers mass themselves above the grassy tents, and swing their censers in the air. All that can be done to hide the horror and mitigate the pang of the living is done, and mourners walk there surrounded by the emblems of faith.

But in the old days it was not so. Everything was dark as midnight in reference to departed spirits. Men wept and grieved, hoped and doubted, hoped against hope that there was a life beyond. But the stone that was rolled up to the door of the tomb crushed the hearts of the living, and there was no response to the cries that pealed the heavens for relief.

But he who stood that day at the tomb of Lazarus had made the prodigious claim of being the Resurrection and the Life; that the power of both resided in him; that he was the dynamical force of all forms of life; that he was the Resurrection for Lazarus and the Life for all men. And in the presence of that great concourse of onlookers he went about to prove it.

He stood before that open tomb and with a loud voice cried, "Lazarus come forth!" Without any parade, mumbling or incantation as if this were the work of a magician, the voice of power penetrated the gloom, and the next moment the awe-struck spectators saw the sheeted dead emerge from the cavern, the flush of health upon his cheek, and the sparkle of joy in his eye. And rushing into the arms of the enraptured sisters the reunited family returned to the Bethany home.

It is significant that the veil is dropped over any revelation of what follows. Even tradition does not venture upon repeating anything that Lazarus may have said of his dying experiences, and his emotion upon the return of the spirit to its seat in his body, and the reattachments of the cords of life which had been snapped. Tradition only tells us that Lazarus asked Jesus if he should die again, and when informed that there still lay before him the inevitable fate of mankind, he never smiled again. But that is the unnatural fancy of some gloomy soul. The probability is, that, having had a proof of the omnipotence of the Messiah, when his final chance came he went to his rest as peacefully as a child upon his mother's breast.

The poet made a slip of the pen when he wrote of a "bourne" from which no traveler returns. Lazarus made a four days' journey into that mysterious realm that lies beyond the portals—and he returned. Others have done the same. It has been abundantly verified that the ferryman plies his boat both ways across the river of death, and Charon has no power to deny return passage when the Life Bringer summons the departed spirit to resume its earthly habitation.

What the Christ did that day on a small scale He will by and by do on a universal scale. For if he could raise to life a man four days dead, not four generations, nor four quadrillions of years would affect His power.

The human race as ordinarily created has been sadly marred and defaced. Centuries of sin and sorrow have left their impress upon God's masterpiece, till man, as originally created, bore little resemblance to the sacred and blasted ruin, which we call man. But when we arise from our sleep in the resurrection morning, we shall have regained all our original beauty and perfectness, and shall shine in glorified life like the stars, forever and ever. Then shall the lame man leap as the hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing. Aching heads no more to throb, bursting hearts no more to grieve, tearful eyes no more to weep! Bent backs no longer upright, crooked limbs all straight, blind eyes all open, deaf ears all unstopped. Youth, vigor, beauty, perfection everywhere! Everyone crying out in ecstasy of joy at the marvelous transformation.

LOYALTY TO IDEALS

THEY ARE NOT DEPENDENT ON CHANGES OF FORTUNE.

They Make Us Independent of Environment, and Have Power to Bring the Calm and Peaceful Country Into the Bustling Town.

Ideals are the true life of man and woman—the way we live by them an index to our character. They are our true possessions for they are our own; created by our brains, warmed by our hearts, breathed into life by our faith and hope. They are not dependent upon the change of fortune, ill-health and adversity. They make us independent of environment, they have the power to bring the calm and peaceful country into the hot, bustling streets of the town, and they have many a time sustained the drooping spirits of a worker who has no communion with one of a like calibre, and whose monotonous or commonplace pursuit carries no joy with it. They contain some grand elements; they have something of the make-believe, and yet of the eternally true and real about them. But whilst the realities do not become ideals, the ideals become realities—they are like souls waiting for bodies; how careful we should be of them, how we should cherish them, how we should prevent them from getting chilled and perishing!

What would work at its best be without ideals? I wonder how many women workers have seen their cherished ideal of home life realized? That ideal might be adapted to some of the exigencies of modern life, for there is no doubt that the position of women is altering so much that the hard-and-fast ideals of our grandmothers are not sufficiently elastic for our needs; monotony of existence and its attendant evils were not much regarded in their days. Women were not encouraged to think for themselves on any subject outside the home, whereas now the modern ideal would certainly embrace the happiness and progress of the race as well as of the family.

A woman may now dream of an atmosphere of exceeding peace which is not stagnation, of discussion conducted with perfect freedom; of that rare delicacy in speech which knows when and how to refrain; of an intimacy that never degenerates into vulgar familiarity; of reserve that never leads to chill indifference; of complete harmony of purpose that yet admits of unimpeded individuality. Such an ideal of home life is not an illusion and can be fully realized in married life.—By Lady Battersea.

The Loves of Famous Men.

David Livingstone wrote to a friend in 1843: "There's no outlet for me when I begin to think of marriage but that of sending home an advertisement to the Evangelical Magazine, and, if I get very old, it must be for some decent sort of widow. In the meantime I am too busy to think of anything of the kind."

He was not, however, reduced to such straits; for on his next visit to England he lost his heart to Mary Moffat, and found that he had both ample time and inclination to woo and wed her—"the best wife a man ever had."

Before John Wesley's tragic marriage to the "Widow Vazelle," he had experienced the raptures of absorbing love. Of the first lady to whom he gave his heart he used to speak in such words of mingled fervor and regret as these, recalling a happiness that had fled: "Along this path she walked"; "on this spot she sat"; "here she showed that lovely instance of condescension, which gave new beauty to the charming arbor and meadows"; while his second love Grace Murray, a widow of thirty, inspired in him a still deeper if less romantic affection.

How to Scent Clothing.

The use of perfume is one which every woman should understand. If too much is put on the odor becomes noxious and cloying, and only the faintest suggestion is desirable.

More subtle, and in every way the most delicate method, is through the use of powders that scent the garments. I do not know precisely why it should be so, but with these rather than with liquids there is never a harshness of perfume.

With very little trouble and not much expense, a woman may have not only all her clothing thus sweetened, but house linen as well.

One of these delicate scents to keep among sheets and pillow cases is a mixture of seven parts of powdered cedarwood, the same of dried lavender flowers, one part of powdered gum benzoin, one part of powdered cloves and two parts of powdered cinnamon. It cannot be exceeded. It must be well mixed, sifted and put into flat bags among the sheets, or else flat pads the size of the shelves or drawers may be used. Any thin material is suitable for the pads, the kind being governed only by expense.

A Third Generation

By Muriel Wiatt

The old lord of Hartley Chase had been dead two years, and a new Lord Wallace, Arthur by name, reigned in his stead.

The dinner was faultless, and the mistress, a slender figure in black, with a rope of wonderful pearls, did the honors with her accustomed grace.

Mary found much in the spectacle to interest her. She and Arthur had one of the small boxes to themselves, the friends who had accompanied the excursion, being near at hand.

The great moment came and many flourishes and tricks of swordsmanship, and the matador stood bowing to receive the deafening applause of a delighted audience.

steps that shone in them now. As she leaned against the open casement the clock in the hall struck the half hour, and she glanced anxiously at the jeweled watch she wore.

"I tell you Jenner, I don't care a hang who it belongs to; I'll have it shot. I hate the brute growling about the grounds."

The dinner was faultless, and the mistress, a slender figure in black, with a rope of wonderful pearls, did the honors with her accustomed grace.

Just then Arthur's voice rang out clearly down the long table. He was speaking to a man sitting near Mary, whose estates joined his.

"You can't have seen my dog, Wallace," he said quietly, "because I don't keep any. My wife can't bear them, and I don't risk frightening her by having one about the place."

"A beastly little white cur—a sort of mongrel otter hound," replied Arthur, who seemed thoroughly annoyed.

"The conversation seemed likely to degenerate into an embarrassing quarrel, and the men looked at their hosts glass. It had not been used at all, so evidently the flush of wine was not agreeable to his vehemence.

"Oh, shoot it old chap," said two or three of the men. "Shoot the cur and get it off your mind."

"I've tried," he said. "I can't hit the thing."

"The best shot in England can't hit a white dog!" cried several voices. "Oh, my dear chap, you must be—"

A sudden exclamation at the foot of the table cut the mirth short. Lady Wallace had fainted. It was Arthur who hurried to her side, who carried her tenderly from the room and with a face nearly as white as her own, watched in an agony of fear for her to return to consciousness.

Save for a tired look in her eyes, Mary was her own calm self the next morning, and she rose with a smile to meet Sir Marcus Brent as he entered her pretty boudoir.

Her eyes searched his face anxiously as she spoke, as if she dreaded what she might read there, but he only patted the hand he held gently, and led her to the sofa.

"Sit down," he said, quietly. "You don't look fit for much yet. The room was full of lively things. Many photographs of Arthur stood about in silver frames, and in a heart-shaped one on the mantelpiece, was the picture of a little baby. It caught the doctor's eye, and he crossed the room to look.

"Where is your husband this morning?" he asked after a pause. The question was in his usual quiet tones.

Mary looked at him as he stood with his back to her, then rose, and crossing the room, slipped her hand through his arm.

"Perhaps I have a vague idea, Mary." She looked at him with wild eyes, like one who dreaded to have the secret fears of months confirmed.

"What do you mean?" she gasped. "I only heard this morning," he answered quietly. "His grandfather was insane—"

"It is Arthur," she said in a queer, toneless voice. "Do you see? He's dead!"

"The men bore their gruesome burden into the wide hall and laid it down. Save for the blood that soaked his fair hair near the base of the skull Arthur might have been sleeping. Sir Marcus saw at a glance that death had been instantaneous, and, spreading a sheet that some one had fetched over the quiet form, he gently drew Mary away.

"Ask if any one saw the— the accident," she said to him, "and bring the man to my room."

She went slowly across the hall, amid a subdued murmur of sympathy. One man, who looked like a groom, stepped forward in response to Sir Marcus's inquiry, and followed him to the boudoir. Mary was standing in front of one of Arthur's portraits. She turned as the man entered.

"Will you tell me what happened to my husband?" she said quietly to the man who stood twisting his cap in his hands.

"It was high the bottom of the pig hill on the road to Ashley, my lady," he began hesitatingly. "I've been to one of the cottages, and I see his lordship comin' down the road at a great pace, swervin' to this side and the other, and shoutin' at something to get out of the way. He fair scared, he were that wild and then all of a moment the machine seemed to catch something and flung him right on the stones that's 'lyn' beside the fence down there. I went to 'im my lady. I done all I could, but I knew it weren't any use."

Mary's face was set and white still. "What was it that he wanted to get out of the way," she asked. The man hesitated and looked puzzled.

"I thought it was a dog at first, my lady. His lordship called it a white cur, but I couldn't see anything in the road at all myself."

"There was a pause, then Mary spoke to the man again: "Thank you very much for all you you have done," she said, and he went quietly from the room.

"Sir Marcus took a step forward. "When did you first know?" he asked, and Mary turned away as she answered.

"On our honeymoon. He saw— he thought he saw—it then." She lifted the heart-shaped silver frame from the mantelpiece, and after a long look pressed the baby face passionately to her lips. She still held the portrait when she turned again to Sir Marcus, and for the first time that day her eyes were wet.

"Unto the third and fourth generation," she murmured sadly, and the man bowed his head before the woman who had lost all.

"Pneumonia's Deadly Work" had so seriously affected my right lung," writes Mrs. Fannie Connor, of Rural Route 1, Georgetown, Tenn. "that I coughed continuously night and day and the neighbors' prediction—consumption—seemed inevitable, until my husband brought home a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery, which in my case proved to be the only real cure and restorer of weak, sore lungs."

"Why do women insist on going to matins for the sake of crying?" he inquired impatiently. "Haven't they enough trouble of their own?"

"I don't know," replied she. "Why do men insist on getting into a poker game for the sake of experiencing a new kind of financial worry?"

Let the Hens Keep on Laying.
Recent reports as to the source of supply for the English egg market seem to indicate that imports of this product from the United States have dwindled from something considerable to almost nothing within a few years. The imports from France have also dropped off heavily. England's home supply has increased rapidly within the past decade, and her imports of eggs are chiefly from countries which in various ways are able to guarantee approximate freshness. Perhaps this last is the very reason why the home supply is increasing every year. English farmers can furnish fresh eggs and find it profitable to do so.

With nourishing meat supplies scarce and dear and likely to remain scarce and dear, there is little prospect that a glut in eggs will take place here even though the demand for export falls away. One thing that prevents a more general use of eggs directly as an article of diet is the uncertainty of the supply of fresh eggs. In so far as this indispensable feature can be guarded for the interest of the consumer, the demand must grow, and a few cents more per dozen is a secondary matter. Farmers are often advised to look to their breeds and put more dependence upon the egg crop as a source of profit. But the attitude of the middlemen is also important. To receive fresh eggs from the farmer is not the whole of it. They should be passed in as fresh a condition as possible to the table of the consumer with a regularity that can be depended upon day after day. London consumes 800,000,000 eggs annually and pays an average of 2½ cents apiece for them. Half of them are drawn from regions not over ten hours' distant by rail.

Small Schoolhouses.
The "little red schoolhouse" of our fathers' days can never take its old place in the training of American youth. But the big schoolhouse, at least the mammoth structure which has been the ideal of some educators for many years, seems to be falling into discredit. The added peril for crowds of little ones in the case of fire or fire scare and panic in a big schoolhouse is only one of the objections being brought against the modern school building.

Numerous disadvantages are being pointed out where great numbers are gathered under one roof and let loose in one yard for play. Danger from contagious and infectious diseases is vastly increased. The "little red schoolhouse" enjoyed a bad reputation as a spreader of measles, mumps and scarlet fever. Long vacations from studies are forced upon hundreds and perhaps thousands of children in order to allow some disease which has appeared in a large school to run its course. The big school may cost less per capita of attendance to maintain than the smaller one, but with the smaller school the teachers are brought into closer relations with all the pupils, and the children are kept within their home neighborhoods and among their own kind. Results are the thing in school matters, and good results which cost much may prove cheaper in the end than median results gained at reduced rates.

When in 1898 the Oregon traveled from San Francisco down through the strait of Magellan and up to the Caribbean to participate in the conflict against Spain, the world was surprised. A 13,000 mile voyage had never previously been traveled by any warship in such a short time. But the voyage of Evans' fleet has been far more notable. It traveled more miles, and as an accident to any one of the sixteen battleships would have delayed the whole squadron the exploit has been many times more remarkable than was the Oregon's trip. And the squadron arrived at Magdalena bay two days ahead of its schedule time.

As an available half way anchorage between the west coast and the Panama canal, the harbor of Magdalena bay could probably be made serviceable to the fleets of the United States, especially in event of war. Perhaps this country can get the rights from Mexico without annexing the arid peninsula of Lower California.

Of course there is not much use of trying to deny that the world in general would be better off if more attention were paid to what mothers said.

The man who limited his wife to six kisses a day may be a brute, but it is only fair to get some testimony anent the kiss before passing judgment.

The clamor of the knockers of the canal is drowned in the chatter and the clatter of the shovelers, who are right on the job.

Huge Battleships in Theory.
All nations which are ambitious of great sea power want ships as large as those of any other nation; hence the contest for size makes ever newer and larger creations necessary. The way the contest stands at present among naval experts is explained by the Scientific American. Modern tactics, this paper says, call for "line ahead formation"—that is, with each ship of a fleet steaming in the wake of the one ahead, with a wide interval between them. Thus a line of four eight-gun ships will be but half as long as a line of eight four-gun ships. The line of four eight-gun ships will attack the four four-gun ships at the head of the line of smaller vessels and overcome them by mere preponderance of metal, then attack and dispose of the other four smaller ships.

It is assumed that the fifth and sixth ship in the line of four-gun ships will do a little execution while the eight gun ships are smashing the four leading ships, but that the seventh and eighth can do nothing, owing to the long range. Upon the theory that naval battles of the future must be fought out just this way, the authorities of the rival powers are proceeding when they put millions into mammoth ships. But perhaps some future Nelson or Paul Jones will happen into a fight and apply the big "D" to tactics. It all seems to be a question of what thirty-two twelve-inch guns on one side can do to thirty-two twelve-inch guns on the other side. A Jones or a Nelson might not be disposed to keep a dozen, more or less, of his guns out of the scrimmage and let four big ships have their own way with the four little ships at the head of his line. Torpedoes seem to be left out of calculation in this theory of naval warfare. Even then there may arise some daring commander, not sound on approved tactics, who is himself as good as a whole arsenal of torpedoes. Once a small ship does the trick for a big one, the small and lively "terror of the ocean" will again be in fashion.

Carrying American Cash to Europe.
The returning immigrants from the United States who passed through the port of Hamburg in one day recently exchanged $18,000 for the currency of their native countries, to be used in railroad fares and pocket money for their journey home. The most of them had on their persons drafts and gold which represents savings to live on or to invest at home. The communities where these returning adventurers settle will find them very desirable acquisitions if they put their money and their practical knowledge to use.

It is assumed abroad, and to a certain extent here, that the departing emigrants from our shores are going home for a visit, because there is a prospect of a long period of idleness in this country. This may be true, but it is noticeable that the bulk of the emigrants who return through Bremen are natives of countries which have recently invited and even urged their exiled people to come back to the fatherland. If they are wanted at home it is most probable that the rulers will contrive some means of keeping them now that they are on the spot comfortably supplied with money earned in America.

Japan, insisting that China shall apologize and indemnify her for the seizure of a Japanese steamship, will, of course, have her own way. Either tutelage or terror must be the condition of China in her relations with Japan until she learns how to free herself or until some combination of powers stronger than Japan does the freeing for her.

The battleship cruise may prove to have an educational value. The sailors have been permitted to see a bullfight at Lima, and as many of them are familiar with football mixups and with ring contests they are now qualified to give an expert opinion as to which is the most brutal.

It is estimated that Mark Twain during his lifetime has made $700,000 by his writings and lectures. At 30 cents a word it looks as if Mark has succeeded in financing the whole dictionary.

Somehow when a man dies from the effects of handling dirty money he gets more space in the newspapers than one who dies of starvation.

Proclamations to abolish the czar of Russia will probably amount to just as much as the czar's proclamations against discontent and no more.

With Russia penniless and Turkey without cash, the war is much more likely to be of the typewriter variety than anything else.

The general opinion seems to be that while the United States navy is a little "off" in spots, it would be exceedingly hard to whip.

If, as an army officer declares, "Germany could capture New York easily," war isn't such a terrible thing after all.

Nominated for Mayor.

Concerning the nomination of our former townsman, P. C. Storm, for mayor of Owosso, Mich., the Owosso Times says: "While not as well known as his opponents, Perry C. Storm, the nominee for mayor, has many warm friends in the city. Coming here six years ago as the western manager for the Groton Bridge Co., Mr. Storm at once identified himself as a citizen of Owosso by the purchase of a home, mingling in the business activities and the fraternal and social affairs of the city so far as his duties would permit. That he is not better known is due solely to the fact that his time has been devoted to the interests of the firm which he represents and which he has so successfully pushed throughout the state that each year has seen a large increase in sales. As a business man he is enterprising, straightforward and energetic. Not a word has or can be said against him personally. The nomination went to him unsought but he had declined to be nominated a year ago and when approached this year at first stated that he did not wish to become a candidate, finally yielding as far as to say he would accept if nominated but would not seek support at the primary. This fact together with his qualifications should give him a strong party support at the polls. He has been conducting an active canvass this week, making the acquaintance of many citizens and leaving a very favorable impression with all whom he has met.

LURED AWAY

Through the long brilliantly lighted ball room the music of Monsieur Reve floated sweetly. The dancers danced and the moments flew, and I, standing in the embrasure of a window, watched Guy Winfield waltzing with Clarice Dalmar.

How beautiful she was! A golden-haired divinity, with eyes like blue velvet, and a complexion of rose and snow. A bewitchingly beautiful woman was Miss Dalmar—queen of the ballroom and favorite belle of the season—although she was poor.

And there was Guy Winfield, my bosom friend (my name is John Lancaster, and Guy and I had been college mates together), waltzing away with the siren and so wrapped up in her that he had evidently forgotten all about Alice Leighton, who sat watching the pair with a very pale face, her brown eyes full of a grieved surprise, which she was not woman of the world enough to control. For she was betrothed to Guy Winfield and had a right to disapprove the very marked flirtation going on under her eyes between Guy and Miss Dalmar.

And as I watched Alice I could not help saying to myself: "She is worth a hundred such butterflies as the beautiful Circe upon Guy's arm!"

The waltz was ended now and the two had started away together, quite like a pair of lovers. I saw the look of sorrow and a hint of tear-drops in a pair of brown eyes not far away and I made my way to her side, and began to converse with sweet Alice Leighton. It always did me good to

Sat watching the pair have a nice, with a very pale face quiet talk with her, she was so sweet and womanly and withal highly cultured.

Guy and Miss Dalmar were seen no more for an hour; all at once I observed the lady promenading with old Stapleton—the millionaire—and I could not fail to observe the look of eager interest with which she listened to his platitudes, as though she were both entertained and edified. Or could she be playing a part?

There was a rumor that old Stapleton had sworn to win Miss Dalmar for his wife; but Guy would never believe it possible that the golden-haired divinity would ever listen to the old man's suit. I said nothing to Alice in regard to the conduct of her betrothed husband, but I could see the sweet face grow paler and paler, and at last she seemed so overcome that I proposed to take her home. She started with a perceptible shudder.

"Oh! no, no!" she cried. "I am not ill! Indeed, I am not, Mr. Lancaster! And then Guy would think it very strange if I were to go away!"

Once more Miss Dalmar was missing, but old Stapleton sat alone in a corner, glancing comfortably in the direction of the conservatory. Alice I shrewdly guessed Clarice Dalmar had gone. The reception was at Mrs. Winston's elegant house, and the conservatory was situated in a wing of the building.

It took but a few minutes for me to make my way through the crowd, and at last I entered the dimly-lighted perfume conservatory, where a silvery fountain splashed odoriferous sprays in glistening perfumed showers; and beside a huge date palm I caught a glimpse of Clarice Dalmar and Guy Winfield. I made my way to where the pair were standing, so engrossed with each other that they did not hear my footsteps.

"One could never forget you, having once seen you, Clarice!" I heard my friend's voice say.

She lifted her beautiful eyes to his face, with a soft seductive smile.

"But, Miss Leighton is—"

I stepped forward. I am always outspoken, blunt and abrupt.

"Miss Leighton is not well!" I interposed. "I beg your pardon a thousand times, Miss Dalmar, but I am looking for Guy." Then turning to him I added sweetly: "Alice is not well, Guy, and I think you ought to take her home!"

He stared, like one suddenly aroused from a dream.

"I am sorry," he stammered; then turning to the charmer at his side he added: "I will see you tomorrow at 5, with your permission, Clarice."

And as I turned hastily away I heard him add softly:

"When I see you again I shall be free!"

I hastened from the spot faint at heart. I only wanted to see Guy join Alice, and soon after they left, Mrs. Winston's, and then I, too, to my departure. My heart was full of sadness; I could see trouble ahead—for poor Alice.

I called upon her the following day; and then because we have been like brother and sister all our lives she told me that she had broken her engagement with Guy Winfield, and understood. He was free now to Clarice Dalmar.

I went straight to Miss Dalmar's house—a plain old house in the middle of large grounds, whither I made my way at once, as the servant informed me I would find Miss Dalmar there.

My heart was full of a mad resolution to lay the whole truth before her, and beg her, in mercy to

Alice, to give up her hold upon the man whom she had lured from duty and honor. But as I approached a small rustic summer house I heard the sound of voices and saw Guy in the building with Clarice Dalmar. He had her hand in his and was pleading in low, lover-like tones. I came to a halt in dismay, just as these words reached me:

"You know, you must know, that I love you, Clarice! For your sake, with the hope of winning you, I have freed myself from my engagement with Miss Leighton. My love for her, as compared with this adoration of you, was like moonlight unto sunlight, like water unto wine!" Oh, Clarice, my queen! say that you are not indifferent to me. I love you, Clarice, with all my heart; I am desperate, maddened for your sake! If you do not give me some hope, I shall die or go mad!"

A low laugh floated across the silence. She withdrew her white hand from his fierce grip with a little shiver.

"Oh, you have hurt my hand! See, Mr. Winfield, you foolish, impetuous boy. Love you? Ha, ha! Why, you must be daft. I have flirted a little with you, to be sure; one must have some diversion, you know. But I'm engaged to Mr. Stapleton. My God!" falling back with a groan, "what would you do?"

For the gleam of the silver barrels of a revolver flashed in the sunlight; a moment more and Guy Winfield would have fallen to her feet a corpse—a suicide; but with a stifled cry I dashed into the summer house and, with sudden gesture, I knocked the revolver from his hand and led him away.

Knocked the revolver from his grasp from his grasp and glanced into Clarice Dalmar's face.

"But for the mercy of God you would have been a murderer!" I said in a tone of scorn; "but you have slain neither his life nor his soul, Clarice Dalmar. He shall be saved—I swear to that!"

One day a month afterward I was astonished at the apparition of Clarice Dalmar in my dingy office. She extended her hand but I merely bowed.

"You wished to see me, Miss Dalmar?" I asked frigidly. I distrusted the woman and dreaded her as one dreads a painted snake. She glided over to where I stood and grasped my arm, while her pale face and soft blue eyes full of tears were uplifted to my own.

"You can help me if you will," she sobbed. "Mr. Lancaster, save me from myself. I love Guy Winfield, and he is—"

"Going to marry his own first love; for after all, 'first love is best.'" I quoted with a grim smile. "You are too late, Miss Dalmar. Guy was for a time lured away by your beauty and wicked wiles, but he has returned to reason and his first and only love, and only wonders now that he had ever strayed. He loves Alice dearly, and I think prizes her more for the contrast between her purity and you. They are to be married tomorrow. Good morning, Miss Dalmar."

I bowed her out. A week later, Guy, Alice and myself were recipients of the elegant wedding cards of Clarice and Rufus Stapleton. They reside now in a distant city. She is a leader of fashion, a thoroughly heartless and avaricious woman; wealthy, flattered and admired. Let us hope that she is happy.

African Snails are Musical.

African snails are as big as a man's fist and their eggs are as large as pigeon eggs and have the same color and texture. When travelling together they produce a musical, apparently by the movement of the shell over the bark of the trees as they travel in search of food. Large as they are, the eggs of this remarkable snail, those of a nearly ally, known to oval, scientists as Borus Maximus, are still larger, approaching the size of a bantam fowl's egg. Because of the big egg, there is no larva stage. When the snail emerges at the time of hatching it is like the adult in everything except size.

Carlisle's "Grand Evening."

Who that has wandered through the Carlisle house Embankment can forget it—the story which the old Scotch keeper rehearses so punctiliously day by day, and yet ever with fresh gusto? says a writer in Harper's Weekly. "In this room it was, sir, that Mr. Carlisle and Mr. Tennyson spent a long evening, each smoking his pipe, and neither of them speaking a word. And after three hours when Mr. Tennyson rose to go, Mr. Carlisle said to him: 'It's a grand evening we've spent, Alfred, a grand evening.' And Mr. Tennyson he just said, too, 'A grand evening,' and went out."

Celaloid.

Evidence is not wanting that celaloid is a very dangerous material, and its increasing use in the arts and manufactures suggests that the storage of this extremely inflammable substance should be placed under stricter conditions of control than are apparently required at present.

A GIRL'S CHARITY VAUDEVILLE.

Accidentally They Had a Great Deal of Fun.

Recently a coterie of girls, hearing of a poor family left destitute on the death of the father, determined to help them in some way, finally deciding to have an evening of variety entertainment. One girl was asked to give some imitations, which she did very cleverly; another sang, and two or three of the boys and girls did a very clever take off from one of the comic operas which was not at all hard and afforded a great deal of enjoyment. At the end they had a series of tableaux which they called "The American Girl." The first was an Indian. A very dark girl was chosen for this, and her costume was made from an old potato bag. The edges were all frayed and it was tied loosely around the waist. Under this she had put a white shirt waist, with the neck turned in and the sleeves turned up. She left her hair loose and tied a band of ribbon, on which she had glued some turkey feathers, around her forehead, and with the aid of many beads and bracelets the effect was most realistic. The next tableau was "The Puritan Maid." This was very simply done. The girl had a gray dress, which she turned in at the neck, and pinned on a kerchief. She made a poke cap of white lawn and she made a most attractive little Puritan. This was followed by the girl of the Revolutionary times, and after that came the twentieth century girl, with a tennis racket in one hand and a golf stick in the other, and at the end they made one tableau of all grouped together. The entertainment proved most successful and the girls were delighted to find, on adding up the money, that they had made ninety dollars, although they had only charged fifty cents admission, and incidentally they had had a good deal more than ninety dollars' worth of fun.

Silk and Satin for Garnitures.

It is not surprising to find many handsome dresses embellished with stitched bands of soft satin and silk, since these fabrics are scheduled among the leading garnitures for the season. Black and white combinations have always an appealing charm and a splendid effect is gained in this gown of white French challis, stitched with bands of Cluny lace and black satin. The skirt is laid in plaits all around the figure and the lace and satin arranged at the bottom in simple, though fetching fashion. At the waist is a suggestion of the Empire modes, which are gradually dying out, except for girdles, vests, etc. The short-waisted girdle is of black satin touched with cords of the palest pink satin.

Falling over the girdles the blouse is trimmed with Cluny lace, applied at the front and forming the yoke. Flit is mixed with the Cluny in the bretelle effect and is stitched on either side with three rows of black satin.

The newest house gowns of soft, silky fabrics have all of the skirts falling in clinging folds under slightly abbreviated waists. With this are worn bodices softly plaited and trimmed sparsely, though effectively with the laces of fashion. A stitched trimming about the bottom of a skirt lends it weight, and weight is an important need of the thin, semi-transparent skirt.

Bridal Finery.

The bridesmaids' dresses for coming wedding are wonderful picturesque.

They are of soft yellow crepe de chine, with Watteau overdresses in chiffon, fleecy, diaphanous, strewn over with yellow roses. These look like sun-brightened gossamer over the well-hung skirts, each bordered with a band of fringed pompadour silk, with touches of pink roses, a fine artistic touch.

The manner in which the folds at the back pass through a large Louis XIII silver motif is admirable, and a silver trelle of the same period forms vest and sleeves, both draped with the chiffon in very graceful folds. The two child bridesmaids' gowns are cleverly adapted to their age and are perfect pictures.

PAPER BAG WITH HANDLE.

Twelve Bags Can Be Carried With One Hand.

In the near future the up-to-date grocer, baker, etc., will be handing goods to his customers in the novel paper bag shown below, the recent invention of a Missouri man. This bag is similar in shape and size to the usual paper bag, except that the sides and the bottom are foldable. The sides of the bag are perforated near the top. When the bag is flat the perforation will form two holes adapted to receive a loop of string having the ends tied. When

HANDLE ON BAG.

The bag is filled the string forms a handle by which the bag can be carried. The length of the string forming the handle is sufficient to permit the bag to be fully opened for the insertion or removal of the contents. The bag is, of course, reinforced and strengthened at the perforations for the purpose of preventing tearing of the sides of the bag by the flexible handle. It will be obvious that one person could readily carry a dozen such bags filled with articles with one hand, whereas with the ordinary bag the carrying capacity would be limited.

HOME COOKING.

Potato Apples.

Three ways to serve potatoes—Two cups of hot mashed potato, two tablespoons of butter, one-third cup of grated cheese, one-half teaspoon salt, a dash of cayenne, nutmeg, two tablespoons cream, two yolks eggs. Mix in order given. Heat and shape like small apples. Roll in flour, egg, and crumbs. Brown in deep fat, insert clove at each end.

Spiced Beets.

Boil beets in salted water until tender. Take vinegar enough to cover them, a small piece stick cinnamon, a few whole cloves, and same number allspice. Bring vinegar and spices to a boil, pour over the beets and when they are cold they will be fine.

Baked Brown Potatoes.

Roll, peel and mash 8 or 10 potatoes. Beat into them while hot salt and pepper to taste, a spoonful onion juice, half cup milk and tablespoon butter.

Have them smooth and creamy. Butter a long, shallow cake tin and fill evenly with the potato, bake brown in a hot oven, cut like Johnny cake and serve very hot.

Hashed Brown Potatoes.

For a family of four or five take 6 good sized potatoes, cold boiled. Chop fine with a little parsley, season with salt and pepper. Into this stir 1-2 cup of sweet cream. Have ready a hot griddle, greased well with lard or butter, spread the potatoes evenly on the griddle and cook slowly.

When they are finely browned, run a broad bladed knife under to lift them from the griddle, fold over like an omelet and press edges together. Leave a few minutes, then turn on to a hot plate. Butter well and garnish with parsley.

Wined for Marrying.

The Board of Education has issued a new declaration as to term of service for teachers to sign when they are appointed to primary schools. The women teachers must undertake to serve for five years and the men teachers for seven years. At present women teachers undertake to serve only two years.

The rule at first sight seems unexceptionable, for the cost to the State of passing teachers through the training colleges is considerable and it is not fair that the teachers should use their advantages at the expense of the taxpayer by accepting other appointments after a brier service in the primary schools.

Many education authorities have a rule that the marriage of women teachers shall be equivalent to resignation. In that case a woman teacher who marries within her five years must under the new rule pay a penalty up to a maximum of $25 ($125).

In other words it might often happen that a woman would be fined for marrying at the very marriageable age of, say, twenty-two to twenty-seven.—London Spectator.

ROADS AND ROAD MAKING

HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT.

Facts About the Public Roads of the United States.

While it is known in a general way that some parts of the country have made greater progress than others in the improvement of the public roads, and that enormous sums are expended annually on road construction and repairs, there has been no information compiled up to the present time showing just what has been accomplished and how much is expended annually for this purpose in the United States. A Law of the States have published reports giving some information upon these subjects, but only in rare cases have they shown the mileage of improved roads or the road expenditures by local authorities.

The office of public roads in the Agricultural Department has just completed the collection, compilation, and publication of information from every county of the United States in regard to the mileage of improved and unimproved country roads in the year 1904, and the expenditures on roads and bridges from property and poll taxes, bond issues and State funds under the State-aid laws, and the amount of value of the labor expended under the statute labor laws.

In 1904 there were 2,151,570 miles of public road in the United States. Of this mileage, 108,232.9 miles were surfaced and gravel; 33,621.7 miles were stone, and 6,809.7 miles were special materials, such as shells, sand-clay, oil and brick, making in all 158,664.3 miles of improved road. From this it follows that 7.14 per cent. of all the roads in this country have been improved.

By comparing the total road mileage with the area of all the States and Territories it appears that there was 0.73 of a mile of road per square mile of territory. A comparison of road mileage with population shows that there was one mile of road to every thirty-five inhabitants, and one mile of improved road to every 492 inhabitants.

The 2,151,570 miles of public roads in the United States do not include roads in Indian Territory, Alaska, and the island possessions. Indian Territory and Alaska were not organized by counties in 1904, and it was impossible to secure complete information from Porto Rico, Hawaii, the Philippines, and Guam. The mileage of roads given in the tables does not include streets or boulevards in incorporated cities and villages.

The majority of all the roads in this country were originally laid out along the boundary lines of farms, with little regard for drainage, topography, and alignment. In the Eastern States the boundary lines of farms were very irregular and consequently many of the roads are crooked and badly located with reference to grades. In the Middle West, where the land was laid out by the Government, the roads follow the section lines, and in thickly settled communities, the quarter-section lines. In compiling these figures, the aim has been to include only the mileage of roads actually open and in use.

Only four States have more than 100,000 miles of roads. Texas stands first, with 121,409 miles; Missouri second, with 108,133; Iowa third, with 102,448; and Kansas fourth, with 101,196. The District of Columbia has only 191 miles of road, Rhode Island has 2,361 miles, which is the smallest mileage of any State. Delaware has only 3,000, and Arizona only 5,987 miles.

By comparing the road mileage with the areas in square miles, the District of Columbia is found to stand first, with 3.18 miles of road per square mile of area, while Connecticut is highest among the States with 2.90 miles. Rhode Island has 2.34 miles, and Pennsylvania 2.21 miles per square mile of area. Arizona has only 0.05 of a mile, the smallest mileage per square mile; Utah has 0.08 and Wyoming 0.10 of a mile per square mile.

Assuming the average width of the rights of way of country roads in the United States to be 40 feet, the area of such rights of way in 1904 amounted to 10,431,727 acres. Estimating the value of this land on a basis of the valuation of farm lands in each State, the approximate value of the rights of way of all the public roads would be $341,899,306. A much higher valuation would be amply justified by the fact that in sections where the mileage of roads is greatest the land is considerably above the average in value. A much higher estimated value would also result from assuming that rights of way of roads are as valuable as the contiguous farm lands. The value of the rights of way, however, constitutes a very small part of the value of the roads when we take into consideration the amount that is expended in material and labor in improving and maintaining them.

It was generally believed at the time when railroad building was first undertaken in this country that the railroad would supplant the wagon road, and this line of reasoning accounts in a large measure for the neglect of the common roads from about 1835 until about 1890.

TEMPERANCE TOPICS.

Encouragement for Temperance.

It is a significant and gratifying sign of the times that the organs and leaders of the liquor trade are proclaiming a necessity for a reform of the saloon. They are getting their eyes wide open to the fact that the temperance cause is making great progress, especially in the South. They would reform the saloon to stay the rising tide of prohibition sentiment and legislation. After noting the fact that more than half of our territory is under laws prohibiting the sale of alcoholic beverages and that some of the most drastic of recent temperance legislation, the Wine and Spirit Circular plainly says: "If there is one thing that seems settled beyond question it is that the retail liquor trade of this country must either amend its ways or be prohibited in all places save the business or temperance precincts of our larger cities." It also declares that it looks as if the Anti-Saloon League, if it can maintain its present organization, "will certainly destroy the legalized saloon in all of the Southern States, excepting perhaps, in Missouri," while it is making strong headway in many other States. The National Wholesale Liquor Dealers Association has issued an appeal for the purification of the saloon, and similar signs of alarm were strongly in evidence at the recent meeting of the Kentucky Distillers' Association. When the liquor trade itself preaches that the saloon must be reformed, those who are fighting for its destruction, have reason to be greatly encouraged. "When the devil was sick, the devil a monk would be," etc.—Leslie's Weekly.

Favors High License.

Cardinal Gibbons while visiting in New Orleans in an interview said: "I am persuaded that it is practically impossible to put prohibition into effect in any large community, and the best means, therefore, to promote temperance, is to limit the number of saloons by high license. I would be in favor of inflicting severe punishment on the proprietors of the saloons who violate the law in the first instance, and in the second instance of violation I would withdraw the license altogether."

In the country places I would suggest local option as an excellent means for the repression of intemperance. In the judgment of the majority of the voters, the sale of liquor should be entirely eliminated.

"Laws like prohibition that are certain to be violated had best not be made, for incessant violation draws upon them disrespect."

Oranges His Cure for Drink.

A traveling man tells of his cure of the drink habit by the use of oranges. He had reached the stage where his physician told him that he could continue to drink and die or that he might quit and live.

His physician advised the use of oranges and the trial began with the patient eating one orange before breakfast and one everytime thereafter that he thirsted for the stimulants he had been using. Gradually the desire succumbed to the treatment and now for more than a year the patient has felt no inclination whatever to return to the use of intoxicants. Eleven of his friends similarly afflicted with the drinking habit have profited by this man's experience.

No Credit to Our Civilization.

The existing methods of dealing with victims of intemperance are no credit to our boasted civilization. They recall the days when victims of insanity were treated for demoniacal possession and were imprisoned, flogged and tortured, that the evil spirit might be driven out of them. We shudder now as we read the long and heroic struggle by medical science against the theory of demoniacal possession, and we wonder how our forefathers could have been so blind and so cruel; yet, so far as the treatment of drunkards is concerned, we are still in the dark ages.

A Small Boy's Reasoning.

A bright boy who had been taught the nature of strong drink and promised to shun it, one day visited a rich uncle, who was not a teetotaler. The uncle offered the boy a glass of wine, which he declined. Wishing to see how far he could be tempted, he urged the boy to drink, and finally offered him the gift of a watch if he would drink. The boy declined, saying: "Please don't tempt me; if I keep a teetotaler I can some day buy a watch of my own, but if I drink and take your watch I may have to pawn it to get bread."—Bluestone Messenger.

Drinking Railroad Men Discharged.

The Philadelphia and Reading railroad are suspending all employees for drinking intoxicating liquor. The road has been given out that the rule which requires total abstinence on the part of all employees of the road will hereafter be rigidly enforced. Most of the railroads are now following the rule inaugurated by the Pennsylvania. The risks to property and life from drunken employees are too great for the railroads to incur.

FRENCH HUSBANDS.

How They Are Made—Their Wonderful Consideration.

Near Biarritz, in his splendid up-to-date Basque villa, lives the poet Rostand, a recluse.

To Rostand came two relatives a youth and his father, for advice. The young man desired to marry a poor girl for love.

The sun was setting in the vale of Cambo. From his high perched terrace the great soul of Rostand swam out to where the golden light turtled rose; and back: and he spoke.

"A serious family question. The boy has not enough for himself. To marry a poor girl he must earn for both; and, preoccupied by work he will not be able to cultivate the lovely parasite. But when a girl brings money to the partnership, she has an exalting sense of adding her protector; where springs enduring married love. No, no. France is full of lovely girls with money."

The young relative of Rostand acquiesced—he had been trained for marriage as a profession; they are going to wed him to a pretty maiden with $4,000 a year and a widowed mother in her Biarritz villa, glad to enter the distinguished poet's distinguished family, but do not imagine that any snoozer without his boy's training would have been acceptable; among the French bourgeois youths are prepared for matrimony instead of for work, as carefully as are girls in other lands!

Physically, they are not football players. The mass of these smart young fellows still limit themselves to horseback riding and fencing.

Horseback riding and fencing, however, obligatory and daily from childhood up, produce a type of young men, healthy, lively, graceful, satisfying to the ideal of the French girl and her mother—by whom she is guided in technical matters.

I emphasize physical vivacity, quickness, readiness and grace. For instance, these Frenchmen all dance beautifully—and like it. I have known three French girls who chose their husbands for their dancing taste and stamina—dancers through life; and they actually dance their wives to this day.

Do you think that a working business man who has been killing himself at the office all day is coming home to change and dance? No, he will eat dinner, digest and grow fat.

Hat of Purple Crinoline.

The cables say that purple is the color of the hour in Paris and echoes of the report are found in the new season's hats which are making their appearance in the shops. Quite a charming bit of millinery is this purple crinoline with the brim turned up at the front a la Napoleon. The crown is wreathed with pale mauve harebells and pansies which droop over the brim at the back together with quantities of soft, feathery foliage. Asparagus and maiden hair ferns are excellent for the new trimmings because they come in exquisite color effects and suggest the feathery decorations that are so a la mode.

Poised on the edge of the brim at the front is a smart bow of purple panne velvet secured in the centre with a dull gold and purple enamelled buckle. It takes Paris to go mad over a difficult color, and nothing could be more exacting than the new shade of purple. Fortunately it is susceptible to reliefs of white or soft color tones, and it can be made becoming with smart color schemes.

One of the newest trimmings for hats is a scarf hemmed with passementerie balls. These balls have also captures of the dressy little coats and frills of fashion. They edge everything that has an edge, and are so indispensable that they will form a conspicuous part of the new season's decorative schemes.

Sensible Eighteenth Century Dames.

As wits, theologians, politicians and writers, the women of a hundred and fifty or sixty years ago were certainly in advance of those of to-day; yet apparently they had no wish to push man from his proper place. They held no anti-matrimonial views. They made good mothers, they were excellent housewives, they were socially charming, they managed to be personally attractive. In many directions they had the advantage of us.—Lady's Pictorial.

New York leads all other States in water power, representing, in 1905, 446,135 horse power.

FARM AND GARDEN

HANDY BLACKSMITH'S FORGE.
Can Be Constructed at Home by a Practical Man.

The forge illustrated in the accompanying cuts taken from the Prairie Farmer may be constructed from material which may be found on any farm. The frame and fire-box should be made of 2x4 stuff, securely nailed and bolted together.

FIG. 1.
GENERAL PLAN OF FORGE.

The fire-box should be 26 inches square. The fan should be 12 inches in diameter and 8 inches across.

The fan is made of two pieces of 1 inch lumber, 8x11 inches, beveled towards the ends to a thickness of three-eighths of an inch, as shown in the detailed drawing at B. These are dovetailed together as in C and 3/4 inch rod run through them for a shaft on which the fan is to turn. A two inch wooden pulley is placed on the end of this shaft for the belt.

Two pieces like A are cut from a 1x12 inch board for the sides of the fan. These are placed 8 inches apart with the fan between them, and a piece of tin 10 inches wide is nailed around commencing at D and finishing at E.

The fan is driven by a belt from the large wheel to the pulley on the

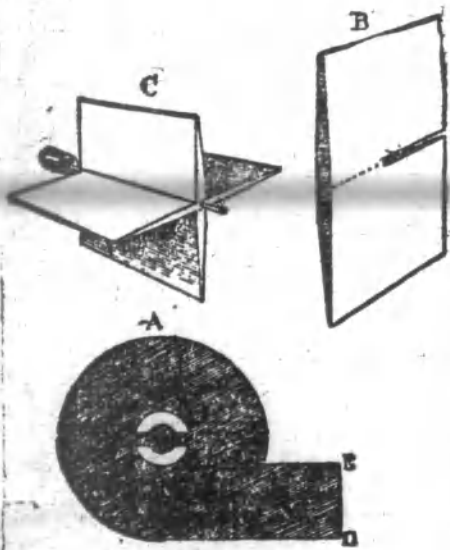

FIG. 2.
WING FAN AND ENCLOSURE.

I used an old bicycle wheel for the large belt wheel.

The air is carried from the fan to the fire-box through a 2 1/2 inch pipe (a piece of old conductor pipe and an elbow will do). The pipe should extend about 2 inches into the fire-box and a piece of perforated iron placed over the end to prevent ashes from falling into and clogging up the pipe. The fire-box should now be lined with clay so the fire will not come in contact with the wood, and you are ready to start your fire.

If properly constructed you should be able to get a welding heat on almost any iron with this forge.

Effects of Automobile Dust.

Farmers living along highways much traveled by automobiles report some interesting effects of the dust raised from the dry roads by the machines and scattered by the breezes over their farms. Some report that the dust has driven the potato beetle from their vines. Others say that the tent caterpillars found the dust intolerable and packed their tents like the Arab and as silently stole away. Still others tell of the cleaning of rosebushes and other growths of the pests of lice. One gardener whose premises are literally covered with dust says that it has kept his cabbage, tomato and beet patches free from all the usual pests. An orchardist, whose cherry trees were infested with slugs, reports that the nuisance has abated. Still we do not believe there is a man in the country who would be willing to trade off the old conditions for the new.—Field and Farm.

Shrinkage in Potatoes.

Some varieties of potatoes lose more in weight while in storage than others. These losses are influenced by the temperature and amount of moisture in the air. The higher temperature increases the loss, while the higher moisture content diminishes it. About seventy-five per cent of the loss of weight in storage is due to the escape of moisture and to overcome this I used to put tubs in the dugout and kept them filled with water but the seep around the place is now doing this for me. I find it advisable to store potatoes in a dark dugout because light tends to increase the sweating of the tubers and to stimulate certain changes in composition.—Field and Farm.

It never pays to let sheep begin the winter thin. When the pasture gets short, begin on the grain ration and keep it up till the sheep are in good order. They will winter better and have better lambs by and by.
