Important Happenings at the County Seat briefly chronicled—Personal Notes

AUBURN, Aug. 8—State Com-mitteeman Charles F. Rattigan has spent the greater part of his time out of town during the past two weeks. Mr. Rattigan is making every effort in his power to prevent the nomination of W. R. Hearst for Governor on the regular Democratic ticket. He professes to be confident that Hearst has not got a "look-in" for the Governorship.

The annual tri-county convention and field day of the Knights of the Maccabees will be held at Auburn, August 15th. The convention is composed of the tents and hives of Onondaga, Cayuga and Seneca counties. Delegates from every tent and hive in three counties have been elected and will be present as well as several hundred visitors. The convention will be called to order at 10 o'clock a. m. in Maccabee temple in Water street. At the close of the session a monster parade will be given, headed by the various divisions of the uniformed rank. General Coakley and staff of Rochester will review the parade. One of the principal features of the day will be an exhibition drill by the Auburn division of the uniform rank. Captain Stupp commanding. This company is one of the best drilled in the United States, having taken the $500 prize at the St. Louis exposition. It is expected that nearly all of the great camp officers will be present. Reduced rate of fare will be made on all railroads.

James Nolan of Wood street was arrested in Rochester Saturday by Detectives McDonald and Bauer on a warrant charging him with failure to provide support for his two children in this city. Superintendent of Charities Lattimore will have an officer sent to Rochester for Nolan.

Coroner O'Neil of this city was called to the home of J. K. Polk Casler, about one mile southeast of Scipio, to investigate as to the cause of Mr. Casler's death early Sunday morning. Casler had worked in a hay field all day Saturday and being 58 years of age he was overcome by the intense heat of the day. While overcoming the effects of the heat he drank some lemonade and ate a bowl of bread and milk. In the evening at 7 o'clock he was taken violently ill and Dr. Thomas of Moravia was called. He was only able to give the man temporary relief and he died a few hours later. The coroner upon investigation gave the cause of death as due to the effect of the heat and ptomaine poisoning as the result of injudicious eating.

Final decree of divorce in favor of the plaintiff in the action brought by Martha W. Pendell against Augustus L. Pendell was filed in the county clerk's office Tuesday morning. The decree was granted by Justice Rich Monday. The parties were married in the town of Ledyard December 26, 1895, by Rev. Mr. Rogers, then pastor of the Methodist church. One child, Harrison Pendell, aged 9 years, was the result of the union and the custody of the child was awarded to the plaintiff.

The Syracuse Carnival.

Out of an effort to create a holiday for Central New York, the Mystique Krewe of Ka-Noo-No—by which title is known the organization that has for its purpose the holding of the annual Ka-Noo-No Carnival—has created what is believed to be destined to become one of the few artistic and distinctly original festivals that this young country of ours has to boast of. It has taken it upon itself to popularize the early Indian history of the country; to present each year, some story of the aboriginal races which held for so long the vast continent that became our heritage and, divorcing its scope as much as possible from the traditions of Old World carnivals, create here in the practical North a romantic drama that shall each year appeal more and more to visitors, in search of the original and bizarre.

The carnival, last year, cost about $50,000, but so successful was it that there has been no hesitation about continuing it and the committees are now hard at work arranging for the carnival of 1906, which will be given during the week of September 10, in connection with the State fair. The subject of this year's carnival will be "The Conquest of Mexico by Cortez."—From "A Northern Mardi Gras" in Four-Track News.

LOST YOUTH LIVES ON SPOILED FISH

WANDERS FOUR DAYS IN WOODS
BEFORE HE IS FOUND.

HIS TERRIBLE EXPERIENCE.

Nearly Dead from Hunger and Exhaustion—Tainted Food Found in Deserted Cabin Helps to Sustain Life.

Chisholm, Minn.—After having been lost in the big woods for four days, John Nihalifsky, a ten-year-old boy, has been restored to his parents. He was found by a woman living near the Kinney mines, three and a half miles northeast of Buhl and nine miles from Chisholm. A posse of 50 men scoured the country, but they had discovered no trace of the missing lad, and all hope of finding him alive had been abandoned.

When discovered the boy was gnawing at a crust of bread which he had picked up, and was in a terrible state as a result of hunger and exhaustion. The boy's clothing was torn to tatters by the briars and brambles, and his bare legs were scratched and bleeding. He was desperately hungry, and about to fall from exhaustion and loss of sleep. Mosquitoes had harassed him so continuously day and night that he was able to get but little rest, and his hands, face and legs were blistered and poisoned from the bites of the ravenous insects.

Johnny says that he left home accompanied by his dog, to search for the family cow. He was unable to find the animal, and remained so long in the woods that darkness overtook him and he lost his bearings. He wandered about all night, and when day broke he found himself in a part of the woods with which he was unfamiliar and was unable to determine directions.

About noon, as nearly as he could judge, he lay down to sleep, and when he again awoke it was nearly dark. The dog had curled up by his side, and when he awoke the two again started on their weary march.

On the second day of his aimless wanderings the boy came upon a little shack which apparently had been occupied by fishermen. On the ground were several small, partly cooked fish, and despite the fact that the food was partly spoiled, the boy and dog ate ravenously. They remained in the shack the next day and again set forth. This was the only food the boy had until he found the crust of bread near the Kinney location.

The dog left the boy on the third day and has not yet returned home. The boy says that two or three times he became utterly discouraged and determined to lie down and die, but two or three hours' rest would bring a revival of courage and again he would set out.

The searching party was more than five miles from where the boy was found. They did not suppose that a boy of such tender years could have gone so far in a trackless forest. The boy says that he did not see any wild animals during the time he was lost, but that at night he often heard the howling of timber wolves.

Bath Costs Him Six Months.

Ithaca.—Prevented by the members of his family from taking a bath at home, Michael Flannigan started out to find a swimming pool near the city. His full dress habit, consisting of a light undershirt and no more, attracted attention, and the police were summoned. When they arrived the man was well on his way to Six Mile creek. After a long chase they found him and brought him back in a horse blanket. He was sent up for six months.

Boys Kill Big Black Bear.

Lake Placid, N. Y.—Hubert Stevens, 15, and Paul Stevens, 18, sons of George A. Stevens, of the Stevens house in this place, killed one of the largest black bears that has been taken in the Adirondacks this season. He was caught in a trap they had set. Though held by one foot, the bear was full of fight, and his desire to fight was increased by pain from the self-inflicted wound where he had bitten his foot in an attempt to get away.

"ALL RIGHT ON THE GOOSE"

The Colonel Partook of the Purloined Dainty and Then Paid for It.

In the winter of 1861-2 the brigade consisting of the Thirty-first and Forty-fourth Indiana and the Seventeenth and Twenty-fifth Kentucky regiments, under command of Col. Cruft, of the Thirty-first Indiana, were meandering up and down Green river, Kentucky, most of the winter. While the brigade was lying at South Carrollton some of the Thirty-first boys stole, hooked, confiscated, or otherwise obtained seven geese. Of course they understood that we had to protect confederate property at that time, but goose being very palatable as well as digestible, and not finding goose on the bill of fare laid down in regulations, the boys thought they would try some. So the geese were duly killed, undressed and smuggled into camp. One of the boys, "Quinn," could see farther into a millstone than the rest of us, so he took a fine plump bird, gave it to the colonel's darky cook, and told him to serve it up for the headquarters mess, and say nothing to anybody. The cook did as directed. After dinner, relates the writer in the American Tribune, in came Mr. "Philistine" and demanded either his geese or the pay for them. Col. Cruft inquired about the loss, and soon had a searching party out looking for the wandering birds, himself heading the party. He was a strict disciplinarian and we all feared the result. Soon the party approached the ill-fated tent. Quinn met the party smilingly, and wanted to know what they were looking for. The colonel told him and threatened the direst vengeance upon the poor unlucky soldier who had goose lying around loose.

"Well," said Quinn, "we have a couple of geese."

"Where did you get them?" sternly demanded the colonel.

"The same place where you got yours."

"What do you mean, sir?" roared the colonel.

"Why you had goose for dinner, and so did we," replied Ed, who had hard work to repress another smile.

The colonel studied over his bill of fare for dinner and replied: "Well, boys, say no more about it; I'll pay for the geese this time; but don't send me any more." For weeks after the brigade would salute the colonel with the war cry, "All right on the goose."

THE "LITTLE MAN."

He Gave the Lady the Coveted Pass and Later She Learned It Was Grant.

A story was told, says T. F. Galway, in the Milwaukee Sunday Telegraph, a year or two ago in the south by a Memphis gentleman, which, as it illustrates Gen. Grant's simplicity of manner, is perhaps worth preserving. The gentleman's mother, a middle-aged lady, during the war was living near Memphis when Gen. Grant was in command there, and she desired to go out beyond the lines and return in order to visit an invalid married daughter. She applied at Gen. Grant's headquarters and was referred to a staff officer, who, after having heard her case, declined with rather a grand manner and to her expostulations merely answered, curtly: "Impossible!" The lady was downhearted under the circumstances, as may be imagined, and probably her countenance betrayed her feelings as she was going out across the piazza of the house that served as headquarters for a plain-looking little man, apparently a hanger-on about the headquarters, as she described him, wearing a private's blouse, accosted her and asked if he could do anything for her. She rebid her errand.

"Wait a moment," said he, as he left her and went into the house.

A moment after he came out and handed her a pass, saying: "Take this. It will pass you through all lines."

She thought it very kind, indeed, of this person to be at so much trouble for her, and she thanked him cordially. It was not until she had reached home, had opened the pass which was signed "U. S. Grant," and shown it to her family and described the "little man," that she learned that it was Grant himself who had befriended her.

BOB CHIGGERS.

He Was New to Business of Picket Duty, and Hence the Following Amusing Incident.

When Breckinridge was marching on Baton Rouge, he one day, unattended by any of his aides, rode up to a solitary pine woods vidette, who had just come in from St. Tammany, and was new to the etiquette of a army life. The general had not the password, and the vidette had no advantage of him in this respect.

"I wish to pass," said the general.

"Well, dod drun you, pass on; who cares a cuss; I ain't stoppin' this here road, are I?"

"You don't know who I am," said the general, smiling.

"No, I don't—that's a pooty horse you're on, anyhow."

"I am Gen. Breckinridge, the commanding officer," continued the general, much amused at the picket's idea of the duty required of him.

"You are, are you; well, I'm Bob Chiggers, an' I'm glad to see you, old fellow; how are you?" replied the picket, extending a hand as large as a frying pan.

The general shook hands and galloped on, to avoid some lengthy inquiries about Mrs. Breckinridge and the family.

DISPLAYED HIS PLUCK.

In the Future He Would Carefully Explain the Relationship.

J. Pierpont Morgan, apropos of pluck, told in the saloon of the Celtic an interesting story about a clergyman who would not be snubbed.

"He was an Englishman," said Mr. Morgan, "and his richest parishioner Lady Blank, used to hector him outrageously. He stood her stupid hectoring for some time. Then he came out flat-footed against her. Thereafter, he declared, she must not interfere. Lady Blank thereafter put nothing in the offertory. As the silver plate was passed about, she would make a stately inclination over it, and put nothing in."

"Well, after this had been going on for a month or two, the elder in charge of the plate lost his temper one morning, and said bitterly to the lady: 'We could do with less o' yer manners and more o' yer silver, ma'am.'"

"This audible remark made a great success and a great scandal in the church."

"The clergyman, dining at a lord's house repeated the story, and did not spare Lady Blank. A roar went up and down the table, but the lord frowning black as a thunder cloud, said:

"'Are you aware, sir, that Lady Blank is a relative of mine?'"

The clergyman smiled slightly.

"'No,' he said, 'I wasn't; but in future, when I tell the story, I'll always be careful to mention the relationship.'"

Why He Didn't Prosper.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., in an address on the subject of success, said:

"I will illustrate my meaning with an incident that happened in a western mill.

"A huge, brawny chap applied to the foreman of the mill for work. Though there were no vacancies, the foreman took him on—he told so piteous a tale of woe—and set him to shoveling coal in the mill yard.

"In the afternoon the foreman went to see how the new hand was doing. He found him, in company with an old hand—a lean veteran of 60—shoveling coal into a cart. But the old hand worked faster than the new one, shoveling in two shovelfuls of coal to the new hand's one.

"'Look here,' said the foreman to the brawny stranger, 'this is hardly fair. Pete is throwing two shovelfuls into the cart to your one.'

"'Yes, boss,' replied the new hand, 'and I told the fool about it, too.'"

What He Meant.

An Irishman was walking along a road beside a golf links when he was suddenly struck between the shoulders by a golf ball. The force of the blow almost knocked him down.

When he recovered he observed a golfer running toward him.

"'Are you hurt?'" asked the player.

"'Why didn't you get out of the way?'"

"'An' why should I get out of the way?'" asked Pat. "I didn't know there were any assassins round here."

"'But I called 'fore,'" said the player, "and when I say 'fore,' that is a sign for you to get out of the way."

"'Oh, it is, is it?'" said Pat. "Well, thin, when I say 'foive,' it is a sign that you are going to get hit on the nose. 'Foive.'"

And the answer was just as brief and pointed: "Unmarried—four times," said the tender young thing.

A Woman's Vote.

By Peers Hervy.

"Is Mr.—er—Sydney Forrest at home?" he asked, shuffling some cards in his hand upon which were written uncomplimentary notes relating to the voters whose names and addresses appeared upon them. "Doubtful" described some. "Against" others, while several bore such remarks as "He will support no candidate who does not promise to legislate against fogs."

To his somewhat inarticulate question the young parliamentary candidate received an answer in the affirmative, and was shown by a pretty housemaid across the hall into a delightful drawing room with French windows opening upon a shady veranda hung with Virginia creeper.

"Who shall I say, sir?" inquired the girl.
"Lord Edmund Quinton," he answered, and was glad to note the look of pleased intelligence in her eyes.

At election times even a waiting maid's approval must not be despised, especially if she is pretty, for then she may have more than one admirer with the needful vote.

Left alone, Lord Edmund looked approvingly round the room. The morning was hot, and his canvass had not been very successful among the "doubtfuls" and "againsts." This voter was described as the latter, but the drawing room had anything but an antagonistic air about it.

He sat down in a great chintz-covered chair and wondered what the next week would bring forth. He was the sixth son of the Duke of Carolyn and a distant cousin of the noble earl who had just appealed to the country on a momentous question, and it was a cause of much interest to Lord Edmund's family whether or not he should be returned for the borough of Sandford, as his only chance of office in his cousin's government should Lord Hotham again be given a majority in the House depended on his having a seat in Parliament. Each side in the division declared that they were sure of victory, and both sides were horribly afraid of the other carrying the day.

Although there was not much fear that the Earl of Hotham would not get his majority in the country, yet in this particular instance personality counted for much in that Mr. Rayner, Lord Edmund's opponent, had been nursing the constituency for years, had a house in the district, and was locally popular, while Lord Edmund was comparatively unknown and was only sent down by his party a few weeks previously when the first rumors of a general election began to disturb the surface of official calm and the member for Sandford announced his intention of retiring from parliamentary life.

"If I get in I must take a house in the place," mused Lord Edmund, "and if the owner will sell it I will have this one," and he idly watched a little fountain on the smooth lawn sparkling in the sunshine.
He was not kept waiting long when the door opened and a pretty girl came in. She was about twenty-three, but her assured carriage gave a suggestion of more years, perhaps. She came forward smiling and shook hands.

"It is very courageous of you to go about bearding lions in their dens in this fashion, but I am sure a little rest from canvassing will do you no harm. At the last election this house was the center of the opposition, and your life would not have been safe," she said laughing, "but I will promise to protect you if danger should arise. I was just going to lunch. Won't you join me? I am all alone to-day. Manly has gone to London for the day."

"Really you are too kind," Lord Edmund said smiling, "but I should not have presumed within your hospitable door if your servant had not told me the voter was at home, yet I am so famished I really think I will accept your kind invitation."
"That's all right. I told Edith to lay your place, but I would like to know who the voter is," and her white row of teeth flashed out as she laughed.

"Why, why," the name on the card had slipped his memory, "the gentleman you just now said had gone to town."
Again the girl laughed.
"She is not a man, but the most womanly woman or old maid ever created. She is really Miss Manly, my companion, but I call her Manly because it is so incongruous."

"But surely," gasped Lord Edmund, hauling out his canvassing cards in sheer desperation at the situation, "surely—yes, let me see. Sydney Forrest lives here."
"Yes," she said with another scream of laughter, "I am Sydney Forrest; you don't mean to say that woman's suffrage has become law and that I really have a vote?"
The young man looked dubiously at the piece of pasteboard he held in his hand as if there was something uncanny about it.

"You have certainly got on the register in some mysterious way," he said, looking up at her whimsically and they both laughed in unison.
"Oh, what fun!" she cried; "can I really vote? How shocked Manly will be."
"I am afraid that the vote will be disallowed if the other party object," he said doubtfully.
"Would you object?" she said with just the faintest touch of coyness in the question.

"How could my hostess ask such a thing?" he replied, politics sinking out of view for the first time for weeks.

"Well, the other side won't, of course," she said, "for you see my father was one of the strongest supporters they had, but he died three years ago and so I got a companion to live with me here, as I was so fond of the house."

"But surely my opponent's agent must have known who you were? Our agent is a new man, I think, since the last election."
"Perhaps he did know. Men always believe women inherit their politics from their fathers."
"And don't they?" the young candidate asked, with just a degree more interest in his tone than the question seemed to demand.

"Let me see," she replied, going to a table piled with papers, "now I know why I have been inundated with party literature during the last few weeks. I think your opponent's portrait is here," and she pulled out two cards with the pictures of the candidates upon them. "Yours does not do you justice," she said seriously, examining the original with mock severity, "but Mr. Rayner's is decidedly flattering. You can't see that his hair is red and his figure rotund. I don't like him," she went on thoughtfully; "he called me 'little misset' at the last election."

Lord Edmund laughed again; "I really think I must support woman's suffrage if I am returned."
"I should," she replied, "we would have the handsomest house of representatives in the world if women had votes, for you know in England we outnumber the men."

"But you would not give the wives votes surely? That would be putting too much into their hands."
"Do you think a wife so very powerful?"
"A politician's wife can make or mar his career."

"But a poor spinster is of small account whether she has a vote or not." Her eyes were a challenge as she held his opponent's picture face toward him under her pretty chin.

"Madam," he said, making a low bow, "I have already lost so much since I entered this house that it will not surprise me if I should also lose your support at the poll."
"Lost indeed," she said with a somewhat heightened color, "what have you lost? Time, I suppose."

"Fatigue," he answered gallantly, "if you must have an answer."
"I think lunch must be ready," she said hastily, putting down the picture. "I will lead the way."

The pleasant meal must come to an end, but it was with much reluctance that Lord Edmund at length rose to take his departure.

"May I call again?" he asked as he shook his hostess's hand.
"Yes, the day after the poll," she answered.
"Not until then? It's a whole week off."

"No, not till then," and again she laughed as she waved him an adieu.
But although Lord Edmund found many excuses for passing and re-passing Acacia Lodge during the next seven days he saw no more of his fair entertainer. She came to none of his meetings as he had dared to hope she might, but somehow the knowledge that beneath the red tiles of her house he had sat and talked with her gave the coming contest a zest which it had before lacked. His speeches grew in eloquence; his supporters felt the power of his enthusiasm and worked with renewed vigor as the day of polling drew near.

"By the way," he said to his agent the day before the poll, "I understand Miss Sydney Forrest's name has got on the register."
"Yes; we must object to her vote if she appears. Her father was one of our opponent's chief supporters at the last election."

"And for that reason I wish no objection whatever to be taken to her recording her vote. It is easy to strike her name off at the next registration."
His agent was about to remonstrate, but Lord Edmund cut him short.

"I know it will be a close shave either way, but see that no objection is taken to Miss Forrest's vote."
For a moment their eyes met.

"Very well, my lord," the agent replied.
So it happened that when Miss Forrest's smart dogcart drew up at the polling booth with the horrified Manly sitting primly beside the fair driver Mr. Rayner's agent came gallantly forward and helped the young lady to alight. He paid her a few silly little compliments which she smilingly endured as he described to her the procedure in recording a vote.

Lord Edmund's representative smiled gallantly at so fair a voter, and the little boys wearing Mr. Rayner's colors cheered lustily as she remounted the dogcart and drove away.

At last it was over. Canvassing, meetings, posters, colors, had done their work, and the last ballot box had been carried into the town hall, where the counting was busily proceeding.

Outside in the market square stood a crowd of expectant men and women waiting for the declaration of the poll, and inside in one of the rooms the candidates and their friends anxiously awaited the result.

Rumors of how the numbers were adding up on both sides floated in and out as the different ballot boxes surrendered their secrets, and it was clear to all that the contest was about as close as it could be, and that only the final result would reveal the elected member.

After what seemed an unreasonable time to the waiting crowd, the mayor, the candidates and their friends appeared on the balcony of the hall. A breathless silence ensued as some one held a lamp in the still air for the mayor to read the figures:

Lord Edmund Quinton.....3,462
Mr. Charles Rayner.....3,461

Majority..... 1
For a moment the result seemed to stun those collected, and then yells of triumph, mingled with shouts of "Recount!" "Recount!" echoed through the square. Colored lights flared here and there and a flash of yellow fell for a moment on a woman's smiling face as the hood which covered it slipped back.

Lord Edmund standing on the balcony waiting to speak, saw it like an angel's face shining a moment in a golden radiance while the next face and figure had vanished in the night, but it seemed to inspire the words he spoke. Sandford shouted itself hoarse in approval of its new member, and Mr. Rayner gracefully acknowledged that the fight had been fairly fought.

Lord Edmund called next day at Acacia Lodge, and Miss Forrest received him under the tree in the garden which gave the house its name.

She looked delightfully cool in her green linen frock, and this time Lord Edmund not only wished for the house but its owner as well.

"I met Mr. Rayner this morning," she said smiling, "and he thanked me for saving him from the disgrace of a majority of two."
"I have more to thank you for than that," Lord Edmund replied gravely, "I have to thank you for my whole political career."

"I thought it was only wives who made or marred such things," she answered mischievously.
"If a woman can make a man's career as a spinster, how much more can she help him as a wife?" he said boldly.

"Really," she murmured, looking away from him, "I don't think I—I quite understand."
"Well, when I see what post my cousin allots to me in his new government I will come down and try and make my meaning a little more clear."

At this juncture tea and Miss Manly arrived together, and when the latter discovered that Lord Edmund only approved of woman's suffrage in rare instances she consented to take him into favor.

Some three months later, when the engagement of Miss Sydney Forrest with the member for Sandford was announced, Mr. Rayner's agent began to have some misgivings about the majority of one which had lost his party the election.

Importance of Co-Education.
Co-educational institutions exhibit one important tendency which all woman's colleges would do well to note. It is the disposition to discourage the overserious, the eccentric or the unconventional, which is the healthiest influence for the college woman in her work.

On all sides the co-educated girl is in the fire of masculine criticism. From professors and from students alike she hears the protest, she sees it in the campus witty paper, she finds it on the bulletin board, she scents it in the glance of her fellow worker—that gay, and not always gentle raillery against the blue-stocking.

She avoids the queer and the ugly as she would a pest. She takes greater pains with her dress, she smiles a sweeter smile, and she even dreams a gentle dream of the future—all on account of that mighty, that ridiculous arbiter of feminine fate, the masculine heart.—Good Housekeeping.

Roulette Invented by Monk.
Strange as it may seem, the roulette wheel, that alluring machine by which so many fortunes have been won and lost (mostly lost), was devised by a monk, Pascal, during a six months' "retreat" for meditation and prayer. He probably little realized the gigantic popularity as a gambling device his simple invention would in later years attain.

In Monte Carlo, the greatest gambling resort in the world, more than five million dollars are lost by players every year. The Casino at Monte Carlo is controlled by a firm which styles itself "The Sea Bathing and Strangers' Club Company. Though no one was ever known to dip a toe in the surf at Monte Carlo during the winter season, the profits of this company in the season of 1904-5 amounted to $7,204,000.—Appleton's Magazine.

Rugs, Modern and Antique.
Because many antiques are admirable is no reason for denying the merit of modern rugs. There are more rugs of high quality being woven to-day than ever before, and this is due principally to the fact that there is a better market for them than ever before. The United States alone imports $4,000,000 worth a year—about $2,500,000 before the duty is paid. No wonder that the Shah of Persia nurtures the rug-weaving industry, tenderly bestowing orders and honorable rewards on successful rug merchants and inflicting the most severe penalties for the use of aniline dyes or anything calculated to bring Persian rugs into disrepute, says May Country Life in America.

British Arms in South Africa.
The British government has ordered another brigade of field artillery to South Africa. It has already five brigades there. A brigade consists of three batteries—18 guns. The total number of British troops in South Africa now is about 25,000.

A Tortoise of Sentiment.

Seton Keywood had decided to spend the summer in a little Hampshire cottage. With the egotism of temporary proprietorship he had arrogantly ignored the fact that another cottage lay side by side with his own. But that was before his installation within the rural abode had made it clear that for a neighbor he had a girl who dressed in white and wore ravishingly broad, shady hats. It was then that he discovered that he was living next to a place of importance.

There are times when the presence of a hedge become almost insupportable. The systematic laying of a white cloth upon an afternoon tea table beneath a chestnut tree is a preliminary to poor sport—if it be on the wrong side of the hedge. Keywood's stare grew more hungry each day until the maid servant in impotent resentment was wont to shake out the tablecloth with a violence that sent bees and insects humming frightfully from the scene. There was an elderly lady, too, who came out from the house at rare intervals—happy in the possession of reflected glamor. Beyond that she did not count.

Keywood was walking slowly upon his side of the hedge. He was wondering how long it was to last, this isolation of his. Then he stopped suddenly, his eyes attracted by the sight of a small variegated dome that lay beneath a mass of flowering stock. As he lifted it a snake-like head wagged in protest ere it withdrew within the shell. It was a motionless tortoise that he held.

Such a creature is not wont to travel abroad in wanton recklessness, nor was it sufficiently ethereal to have dropped from the skies. Keywood was lost in idle wonder when a light footstep sounded upon the other side of the hedge. The girl in white was almost abreast of where he stood. He moved hastily forward, his hat in one hand, the tortoise outstretched in the other.

"I beg your pardon," he began, "but—I think this is yours."
The gray eyes upon the other side of the hedge opened wide.

"Oh, no," protested the girl. "I have never kept a tortoise in my life."
"Neither have I," retorted Keywood.

There was an awkward pause.
"Might it not have arrived from somewhere else?" suggested the girl at length.

Keywood scowled at the thing in his hand.
"I suppose so," he admitted, regretfully. Then for the second time he became inspired.

"Would you like it?" he asked.
It was with intense eagerness that he watched the blush that mantled upon the girl's embarrassed face. Heavens! She was going to accept! At all events astonishment had deprived her of the means of refusal.

Snatching a gigantic rhubarb leaf from its stalk he wrapped the reptile within it. A second later it lay within the girl's unwilling hand.

Keywood returned to the house filled with a variety of emotions. He had seen a schoolboy present a pig-tailed girl with a peppermint—and he had laughed. He wondered why.

The next day he walked through the bed of stocks in a reminiscent mood. To his surprise he found the tortoise there once more. He remained by its side until he saw the flutter of a white dress.

"Your tortoise," he said as he handed it back.
He ventured some comment upon the habit of the creatures. He was glad to see her smile.

The following day he returned to the spot where the stocks bloomed. He knew that he had little right to expect it to be there yet its absence filled him with a curious sense of disappointment.

In a restless mood he was walking by the hedge that separated his neighbor's garden from a meadow when without the slightest warning he came upon the reptile. It was crawling among the long grass. Keywood's forehead grew wrinkled. The hedge was quickset and impervious, and a tortoise cannot jump. He embraced the first opportunity of restoring the creature to its owner.

"Thank you, so much," said the girl.
"I found it in the meadow," said Keywood.

It seems to him that her eyes fell before his.
Harassed by deepening doubt Keywood installed himself at a creeper-clad window that commanded the neighboring garden. It was long ere his patience was rewarded, but the girl emerged at length. She cast a quick glance in his direction that sent Keywood's head in haste behind the pleasant shelter of the creeper. He noticed that within her hand was a small bag whose soft material bulged. He watched her graceful figure as it glided through a gate at the bottom of the garden and disappeared within a cove at the further end of the meadow. A little later she returned. The bag she held hung limp and attenuated.

That evening Keywood searched the cove from north to south and from east to west. When in the end he sighted the tortoise at the base of a young nut tree the discovery did not altogether surprise him. Ere the sun had set he was waiting by the hedge for the second time. But upon this occasion he projected his shoulders on the further side in added boldness. When the time came for him to act he signaled with the reptile regardless of any giddiness that may have manifested itself within the shell.

"Your tortoise strayed again!" he exclaimed.
The face of the advancing girl showed open incredulity.

"Oh, no," she cried, "this is an altogether different one."
"I assure you," protested Keywood, "that it is the same."
"But how can you tell?"

For a moment Keywood felt non-plussed. Then he drew a bow at a venture.
"Because," he said, "there is no other creature of the kind, within a radius of miles."

The girl flashed a quick glance at him. Then she laughed. He decided that he had never before heard such a silvery ripple of a laugh.

"And my own. You had forgotten that."
He stared at her in astonishment. "You have not lost your own?"
She blushed beneath his gaze. It seemed to him that she hesitated for an instant.

"Lost it?" she replied. "Certainly I have not lost it."
Keywood recovered his wits.

"Then," he said, "you refuse to accept this as a companion to the other. It will feel less lonely."
On the next day it was necessary for Keywood to journey to the neighboring town. On such occasions the carrier's cart served as an efficient if loitering omnibus. As he sat within the vehicle his trend of thought fell from more sentimental matters to the habits of creeping things. The sudden realization that he had been gazing absent-mindedly upon an object that was strangely in keeping with his thoughts awoke him abruptly from his musing. Through the broadly perforated holes that honey-combed a small box he could discern the shell of a tortoise. The case was directed to an address in the Shetland Isles.

Keywood's suspicions were confirmed by Jim Preston, the carrier. It was his neighbor's hands that the box had been received.

An argument ensued between the pair. The carrier's views upon honesty and the retention of situations were altered in the end by a sovereign and a solemn guarantee against evil to come.

That afternoon Keywood deliberately leaped the hedge. The girl was reading beneath the walnut tree. At the sight of her visitor and of that which he bore her book fell to the ground.

"Oh!" she cried, "not another—surely not another one!"
Keywood handed it to her in unimpaired grandeur.

"You will now have three," he said.
She turned a pair of puzzled eyes upon him.

"Confess," she said, "that you have other means of obtaining these things. To find three, one after the other—"

"But I did," he interrupted. "I found it really and truly in Preston's cart."
The girl's face flamed suddenly.

"Oh!" she cried, "in Preston's cart. But how dared you?"
"I suppose that you could get Preston six months?" mused Keywood. "I should probably get rather more—as the instigator; but you would not trouble to do that unless the tortoise belonged to you."

The color was still in the girl's face, but she was laughing.
"I detest tortoises," she said, "I may as well tell you that I tried to lose this one, but I did not succeed, for there was only one—in different places—do you see?"

"I knew that quite well," replied Keywood.
"So you took the credit for three presents when there was only one?"
Keywood grew desperate.

"But I had received nothing in return, you see," he protested, "not even an invitation to tea."
For a moment as he sought her eyes he feared impending disaster; but just then appeared one of those benevolent factors which go toward the easing of a strained situation. In this case it was the maid with the tea cloth. The girl in the white dress laughed again.

"I will forgive both Preston and you upon one condition," she said, "and that is that you promise never to give me a tortoise again."
"There will be no necessity for that now," Keywood assured her. A little later they were seated in company at the tea table, which, of course, was the beginning of the end.

Paid for Wood Burned 41 Years Ago.
The United States Court of Claims has allowed John W. Brooks, son of Isaac Brooks, deceased, $320 in payment of a claim of $1,200 for 800 cords of wood taken from the premises of Isaac Brooks, near Warrensburg, Johnson County, Missouri, by Union troops in 1864 and 1865.

The amount is for John W. Brooks's half interest in the wood. The fuel was taken for use of the army by soldiers of Company M, Seventh cavalry, M. S. M., and soldiers under the post quartermaster, Capt. Shaw, United States.

Rivers as Solvents.
Rivers not only carry sediment, but they also dissolve many substances, such as salt, various carbonates and sulphides. This constant transport of dissolved substances into the sea has made it salt throughout, common salt being the most readily soluble of minerals, and, therefore, the most freely transported by rivers.

Surgeon-Made Man.

It is probable that most persons will prefer to go through life with a whole skin in spite of the reassuring comment of a Philadelphia surgeon on a recent operation in Rochester, Minn., that "it makes little difference if a man does lose a few inches of his intestines." There is plenty of scientific authority on his side, remarks the New York World. Prof. Elie Metchnikoff, of the Pasteur institute, in Paris, even holds that civilized man would be better off if he should lose a little of his alimentary tract, which still retains the proportions he required when in a savage state.

The vermiform appendix has been found to be not only a superfluous but a source of disease. The surgeons seem to be the only class to profit by it, yet few persons with healthy vermiform appendices are so unselfish as to offer to part with them.

In Los Angeles surgeons report with pride that they have just taken out a man's heart, washed it, replaced it, and promise that he will recover. Numbers of men under stress of circumstances and without mortal inconvenience have parted with a lobe of the lungs or liver or brains, to the immense gratification of the surgeons, but no one does it voluntarily or purely out of a desire of self-perfection. Man is perverse enough to want to remain as he is and to put off surgical improvements as a forlorn hope. It may be that there are too many parts of him for present needs, but the coming race will have to outgrow them as best it can or put up with them, as its ancestors did.

Uniformity of American Life.

The crudities of American life have been fruitful topics for foreign critics from the earliest colonial times, and many eminent British writers, including Dickens, have unbottled the vials of their sarcasm at our expense. But either we have improved or men of fairer judgment are expressing opinions. Mr. Nabuco, the Brazilian minister at Washington, has returned from an extended tour of the United States, and, speaking of what he saw, said to a newspaper interviewer: "I tried very hard indeed to find the 'west,' about which I had heard so much, but I came to the conclusion that it is a myth. There is no difference between the people of your various states that I could perceive. The one thing about Americans which must impress visitors more than anything else is the absence of any so-called lower strata in your society. In this country there are no men and women of the sort always referred to in Europe as the 'people.' Men and women here never admit that they are at the foot of the social ladder, and if they are there they don't look it; they appear to be at the top. I looked in vain for some place that would look provincial. In Europe, if one stops at a small station, even on the principal lines of travel, one may find himself in a place where every essential of refined life is wanting; but in this country, where all is change and interchange, railways, electric light, telephones, lifts and all modern improvements are everywhere. This uniformity of your life from sea to sea is amazing."

If "Mary, Mary, quite contrary," be an Algerian, perhaps her garden grows with silver bells and cockle shells and sponges all in a row. The cultivation of vegetable sponges is making progress in Algeria. About ten species of the plant are known and they are cultivated in Asia and Africa, being extensive in the regions of Algiers and Oran. Prior to maturity the fruit is edible; when the stage of ripeness, however, has been passed the pulp becomes separated from the fibrous matter which then forms the spongy mass entitled the vegetable sponge. Fine specimens when bleached in a weak lime bath are sold at about a nickel apiece. Paris is at present the chief market for most of the vegetable sponges grown in Algeria. They are suitable not only for toilet and bathroom, but also for domestic purposes.

The correspondent of a New York paper writes of a philosophical tramp whom he met in Massachusetts. The man, who said his name was William Hicks, had clothes that hung in looped and windowed raggedness, but he refused to accept others. In the course of a lengthy interview Mr. Hicks uttered this piece of more or less conclusive philosophy: "I do what I please and, doing what I please, I have my will, and, having my will, I am contented, and when one is contented there is no more to be desired, and when there is no more to be desired there is an end of it."

Lake commerce during April and the first four months of 1906 exceeded that of like periods in any earlier year, and suggests a new record for lake tonnage in 1906. For the month shipments from all points on these great bodies of water amounted to 4,595,505 net tons, while for the year to April 30 they aggregated 5,412,451 tons, a gain for the month of 1,375,043 tons, and for the four months of 1,592,655 tons if compared with corresponding movements in the same period in 1905.

The Good Old Way.

Like the shadow of a great rock in a weary land comes the news of an old-fashioned elopement from Richmond, Ind.

The common or garden elopement is so ordinary and unromantic at every point as to be wholly uninteresting, if not absolutely tiresome, in the recital. A young couple "make a date" with each other, board a street car, ride to the nearest Green and are married by a parson or a justice of the peace. Usually it is "all for a joke" or "to surprise their friends." Or they slip away in a runabout or an automobile and hike to the nearest marriage license office. Everything is done in a hurry and—in the daytime.

Not so with this Indiana couple. Who knows? asks the St. Louis Republic, and then suggests by way of answer, that "it may be that the influence of Charles Major or Booth Tarkington or James Whitcomb Riley so permeates the atmosphere of Hoosierdom that even the most unresponsive hearts are unconsciously touched by the spirit of romance. It may be that the steady light of fame which beats down upon the broad bosom of Indiana as warm as the midday sun kindles in the hearts of all Hoosiers a peculiar sense of pride which prevents them, even in moments of the wildest exuberance, from indulging in any course not in the highest degree artistic and, therefore, in keeping with the literary processes and ideals of the men who have made the state famous.

It must have been such a force or impulse as this that moved the young Richmond couple to resort to the old-time orthodox, romantic method of eloping by means of a ladder placed at the girl's bedroom window. Not in daylight, mind you; no, not when all the curious world might see, but in the silent watches of the night, and in the dark of the moon, at that. Everything was artistic to the last degree. "The Gentleman from Indiana" performed his part just as gallantly as ever such a loverlike feat was performed "When Knighthood Was in Flower."

With such an example as this to guide to future generations, we are convinced that the spirit of romance shall not perish from the face of Indiana or the earth.

Surveying the Ocean Bed.

Science is beholden to commerce in the matter of deep sea knowledge. It is difficult for the scientists to imagine a more thoroughly satisfactory method of survey than that employed by the submarine cable companies. Through them have been discovered details in the configuration of submarine gullies, of freshwater outlets beneath the sea, and of alterations in the bed of the ocean itself. Prof. Platania of Catania has directed attention to the fact that in the straits of Messina there are deep water currents of sufficient velocity to cause the interruption of the cables joining Sicily with the mainland. In one case a cable seems to have been corroded by a sulphurous spring. The surface currents attain a speed of five miles an hour. They have always been a danger to navigation. The existence of correlated, strong, deep water currents had been suspected. M. Thoulet and others have repeated the classical experiments of Capt. Richard Bollen, made in 1875 in the straits of Gibraltar, and have demonstrated the existence at 20 fathoms of an undercurrent flowing in a contrary direction to that on the surface, but these currents have not yet been as systematically studied as their importance warrants.

England is the healthiest country in Europe, having a death-rate of 16.5 per 1,000 in 1905, according to Everybody's Magazine. Germany and France have practically the same rate, about 19.5. Everywhere the death-rate is decreasing, and it will continue to decrease as medical and sanitary science improve. But if it continually decreases, that unpleasant fact of the end of life must cease to be some time, must it not? On the other hand, the birth-rate seems to be decreasing almost everywhere. If it keeps on decreasing, there will be no more births, will there? Fortunately, none will be needed if the other rate does its duty and disappears altogether.

Mr. and Mrs. U. S. Grant are a couple of Sac and Fox Indians residing on the reservation in Oklahoma. Recently they visited some relatives in Iowa, and while there some reporters tried to interview Mr. Grant. He was asked: "How do you think the Indians of the territory will be affected by the new state of Oklahoma?" "We like him," was his answer. Further Mr. Grant wouldn't talk. It was noticed that the wife of his bosom would be a good subject for a corset demonstration. Her conversational powers were extremely limited.

London hotels are full of American millionaires and millionairesses. To some uttering in rapid speech the Londoners call these latter "multis" for short. At Claridge's there are half a dozen multimillionaires installed and whole suites of rooms have been booked by other "multis." The Savoy can boast four "multis" and eight ordinary millionaires; the Carlton harbors a round dozen.

The Effect of Caste.

"The mixture of the social classes in education," says Henry M. Whitney in the current issue of the Arena, "has been one of the greatest safeguards of the quality of culture, helping to keep it pure, practical, helpful and unselfish. 'No reflective observer,' continues Mr. Whitney, "can fail to see that one of the greatest hardeners and then corrupters of the human heart is the spirit of caste. A culture that is founded upon caste, that strives to protect or build up caste, is absolutely sure to do mischief—in a positive or a negative way. On the other hand, the more frequently and intimately and helpful the representatives of different social classes can meet and learn to respect each other—in the schoolroom, or on the athletic field, or anywhere else—the purer, other things being equal, will be the life and the culture of all, and the more will those who have had greater privileges think it a matter of course that they must help in any good work that is doing. They realize better that the world is not wholly of them nor for them.

"In America to-day there are two lines in which a healthful mingling of classes may especially be found. One, as we have already suggested, is the educational system. In the older days the 'select school' was the place for the child, if the family purse could afford it. But * * * our public schools are, especially in the more democratic parts of the country, used and enjoyed by all classes, and hence have been made good enough for the rich while not beyond the reach of the poor.

"Then, the friendships of school days are carried through life, crossing all artificial lines. * * * Our colleges and universities are substantially democratic; men are still valued there for their worth, the door of opportunity is still open to the deserving, however born; and the future is still so hopeful that President Harper, in one of his very last utterances, ventured to declare even that 'the university is the prophetic interpreter of democracy.' So long and so far as this continues true, our culture will be safe from decay."

Pig Iron Statistics.

According to preliminary statistics which have just been issued by the bureau of census at Washington the production of pig iron in the United States in the calendar year 1904 amounted to 16,263,625 gross tons, valued at $228,911,116, against 14,447,791 tons, valued at $206,512,755, in the census year ended May 31, 1900. The wage earners employed in 1904 numbered 35,077, who received $18,984,513 in wages, against 39,241 in 1900 who received $18,484,400 in wages. The consumption of iron ore in 1904 amounted to 30,033,862 tons, valued at $100,945,369, as compared with 25,268,894 tons in 1900, valued at $65,902,932. Of the iron ore consumed in 1904 29,203,994 tons were domestic, valued at $96,306,246, and 829,818 tons were foreign, valued at $4,739,123, while in 1900 the domestic iron ore consumed amounted to 24,612,511 tons, valued at $61,795,473, and the foreign ore to 754,383 tons, valued at $4,107,449. The daily capacity of the completed furnaces in 1904 was 77,970 tons, as compared with 54,425 tons in 1900.

As ascertained by the American Iron and Steel association the production of pig iron in the United States in 1904 was 16,497,033 gross tons.

A Chicago school of domestic science has recently turned out a group of sweet girl graduates whose diplomas certify that they are able to keep a house on ten dollars a week. While this movement may not settle the household problem, remarks the Minneapolis Journal, it is gratifying that it is being considered and that there are young women who are making the effort to restore the art of housekeeping in this country. Ten dollars a week may not be the right figure but it seems a safe starting point. No man who cannot earn ten dollars a week has much of a license to marry. And the man who can earn that amount is entitled to know in advance that if he does marry he is not being run up against a $20 wife.

Senator Hale, apropos of an awkward remark, said:

"It reminds me of the conversation of two women at a reception.

"They were strangers to each other. After a moment's desultory talk, the first said, rather querulously:

"I don't know what's the matter with that tall, blond man over there. He was so attentive awhile ago, but he won't look at me now."

"Perhaps," said the other, "he saw me come in. He's my husband, you know."

A contemporary says that one live man is worth a thousand dead dollars. The trouble with the live man is that he too often worries himself dead, hunting for the thousand dollars. And, dead, he can take none of them away with him.

It must not be supposed that the manufacturers of black pepper are confined to the use of lampblack and lapices. They can make an excellent article of ground succinat shells.

We Do Tinwork

Many people did not know that we do tinwork—and many fail to realize what a difference there is in tanners. Some tanners do their work poorly and others but indifferently well. We do it right. We don't care for the reputation of doing all the work in-town, nor the cheapest work, but we do claim to do good work at the lowest living prices. Try us on roofing, guttering, tin, sheet iron or copper work.

Interesting Oriental Place of Worship Said to Be the Only One in America—Has Been Placed in Philadelphia Park.

Philadelphia.—In this free land the pious or the superstitious may worship anything or nothing without causing comment. But we have not yet grown accustomed to the worship of Buddha, and the sight of the Japanese appealing to the gods of their island home is one to cause a national craning of necks. The shrine that is the mecca for pious orientals is a temple recently set up by Japanese workmen in a shady corner of Fairmount park, Philadelphia. It was never intended as a place of worship, but was set up merely as a curiosity for American visitors to the park. Just as pious Americans in a foreign land, however, would avail themselves of the privilege of praying and meditating in a Christian church, so Japs who live in Philadelphia or who go there on foreign ships, seek the favor of their own gods in the quaint retreat just erected in Fairmount park.

The temple is said to be the only one outside of Japan. The Japs are indebted to John H. Converse and Samuel M. Vauclain for the privilege of worshipping Buddha in a foreign land. Once within the sacred portals Buddhists might imagine themselves back in the land of the lotus. Wide-eyed and gentle visaged goddesses await the coming of the believer, wonderfully carved symbols adorn the altars, mother of pearl incense bowls are at hand for the faithful, and Buddhist deities in various poses invite a continuance of the homage to which they were accustomed in the land of their origin. It is very interesting, very oriental and ancient enough to satisfy the most exacting lover of the antique. The temple was built more than 300 years ago at the village of Furimachi, province of Hadachi, Japan, by Lord Satake Globu-no-Tayu, of the noble Satake family, in memory of his father, and for the peaceful rest of his departed soul. It is two stories high and resembles an Indian pagoda in its architecture. There is an outside balcony on the second story encircling the structure, which is 45 feet high, 30 feet wide and 16 feet in depth. Its roof is tiled, as are all Buddhist temples, in distinction from Shinto temples, which are always straw thatched. The chrysanthemum, which is the Japanese imperial crest, is seen prominently upon the roof. It was allowed to be put there when the imperial tablet was conferred upon the Temple Society. The two Deva Kings, Brahma and Indra, stand on either side of the gate as guards of the temple. Fantastic and fabulous beasts carved out of wood project from every beam and support, corresponding to the gargoyles of Christian ecclesiastical architecture. The old bronze bell, which hangs on the balcony was cast 450 years ago, and was used to summon the devout to prayer.

In the interior of the second floor are the shrines and religious treasures. The shrine of the Goddess of Mercy stands in the center, guarded on each side by two sacred dogs which were carved 600 years ago. Hung about are the curious cymbals, gongs, bells and drums which are used in the religious ceremonies. On the wall hangs a picture of the Buddhist paradise, painted on silk. Eternal Buddha is seen in one corner. The mural paintings are by the best artists of the time, and the design is different in each panel.

Among the regular visitors to the temple are members of the Japanese colony at the University of Pennsylvania. One student, a devout worshipper of Buddha, is almost a daily visitor to the shrine in the park. He is always alone, and is very careful to see that no mocking freshman or sophomore follows him to the scene of his devotion. Only the flesh and blood guardians of the temple and Brahma, the fierce-looking imaze who eternally scowls at the visitors, see the little student burn incense to the gods of his homeland.

Chain-Making Machine.
Lelong, a Belgian inventor, has devised what is said to be the first successful apparatus with which, by the use of but one furnace and one machine, a continuous chain may be made and completely finished. The iron is fed into the machine in the shape of straight rods, and comes out a complete chain. Chains of any size may thus be made, from the smallest "tackles" up to huge chains used in the navy.

COAL KING IN PARLIAMENT.

Lord Joicey Had Disadvantage of Starting in Life Rich—Knows Business Thoroughly.

London.—Decidedly the most interesting of the new peers is Lord Joicey, who has been raised from a baronetcy to a barony, and has taken the title of Baron Joicey of Chester-le-Street in the county of Durham, a district which he has represented in parliament for ten years. But he has won another title which will stick to him longer than that which carries with it a seat among the hereditary legislators of the realm. It is that of the "Coal King," for he is the largest individual producer of coal in the world. The output of the Lambton and the Joicey Colliery companies, which he practically owns, amounts to 5,000,000 tons a year, and he has besides large interests in several other coal companies.

Lord Joicey cannot be described as a self-made man according to the popular definition of that much-abused phrase. He did not start in life with what Andrew Carnegie has repeatedly declared is the most valuable aid to success—poverty. He belongs to the rarer type of men who acquire vast fortunes without the early stimulus of a dire struggle for the necessities of life. His father was a fairly prosperous coal mine owner. He could have well afforded to send his boy to Eton, Rugby or some other famous public school, where he might have made the acquaintance of several future dukes and earls, and aristocratic scions of lower degree, and have obtained a sort of education which is supposed to best equip a man for the job of going through life without working for a living. But young Joicey's father was a level-headed man. He sent his son to a good middle class school, where there was no danger of his being infected with snobbery, and where a thorough grounding in science took the place of Latin and Greek. There young Joicey studied hard, carried off a lot of prizes, joined his father's business when he was 19, and devoted himself to mastering all its details. He was constantly in the pits and about the workings—so much so that an old workman one day said to him as he passed with dirty overalls on:

"Why, young maister, you'll soon know as much about the pit as we do."
"That's just what I want to do," answered young Joicey.

"KATIE QUAKA'S CAMP."
Relic of Indian Days of Michigan Still in Existence in Wayne County.

Willow, Mich.—While all of the white settlers who traded with the Indians in this vicinity at the beginning of the last century have passed away and the reds have long since gone to the happy hunting grounds, there are a few landmarks which still recall the stories and legends of those times; not the least interesting of these is the old log hut, built nearly 100 years ago on the banks of the Huron river two miles east of this town.

In the early days it was known as "Katie Quaka's Camp," and was at that time inhabited by the Indians holding a big reserve in this vicinity.

LANDMARK OF INDIANS IN MICHIGAN.

This reserve granted to the Wyandottes by the United States in 1815 was located in the southeast corner of Huron township, Wayne county, and included 4,996 acres. By a treaty of March 17, 1842, this tract was ceded back to the government and the Wyandottes were removed to Kansas.

The familiar landmark to old settlers known as "Katie Quaka's Camp," was a favorite camping ground of the red men when they came to this section on their hunting and trapping excursions. Katie Quaka was the wife of James Clark, who lived near Amherstburg, Ont., and with his daughter, Mary McKee, was among the last of the once most powerful tribe of Wyandottes who inhabited this territory.

It is related that Katie offered a half bushel of silver dollars to any white man who would marry her daughter, who was almost as fair as any white girl. After the tribe was removed Katie visited this place annually for several years and it was believed by the old settlers that she had money buried in this vicinity.

HARD LUCK OF A MAN WHO TRIED TO PROPOSE.

Wealthy Austrian Proves That Evil Spirits Kept Him from Asking for Widow's Hand.

Vienna.—A rich widow has sued a wealthy landowner named Szabo for damaging her reputation by a long courtship without proposing marriage. Defendant admitted he courted the widow, but pleaded fate had prevented him from proposing to her, and he told the court a touching "hard luck" story. He said he had made strenuous efforts to ask the widow to marry him, but all were unsuccessful.

The first time he was just on the point of proposing when he stepped on the tail of the woman's pet dog. The consequences of this misadventure so upset him he did not dare suggest marriage.

Subsequently his courage again reached the sticking point and he drove to the widow's house in a carriage drawn by four horses. He was determined nothing should prevent him from proposing this time, but fate again reached out its hand and courage and determination availed nothing. The carriage upset and he was thrown into a mud puddle. His plight caused his bravery to wane, and he returned home to await a more favorable opportunity.

The third time he started to walk to the widow's, but, heedless of the ill luck bound to follow such a foolhardy venture, he attempted to pass under a painter's ladder. Fate again had an eye upon him, and just as he got under the ladder the painter upset a pot of green paint over him.

Szabo took his last warning to heart and concluded the widow was not for him. He produced witnesses to prove the statements, which the court accepted, and he was acquitted.

GIRLS FIGHT A MAD DOE.

Battle in Park at Paul Smith's, N. Y.—Young Woman Saves Companion by Using Water Bottle.

Paul Smith's, N. Y.—Miss Cella Zehden had an exciting battle with a maddened doe in the park of Thomas Flaggien, near this place. By her heroism she saved Miss Lydia Davidson, daughter of George Law Davidson, of New York, from serious injury.

The girls were walking through the park to fill some water bottles when the doe bounded out upon them and made for Miss Davidson, attacking the young woman with its sharp hoofs. Miss Zehden rushed to her friend's rescue, striking the doe on the head with the water bottle. It turned on her, and Miss Davidson ran from the park, calling for help. The doe pushed Miss Zehden back into the underbrush, and she rained blows on its head with the bottle until several men arrived and drove off the enraged animal.

Miss Zehden fainted after the desperate encounter and is prostrated. Her hands were torn and her body was covered with bruises. Miss Davidson is none the worse for the encounter.

WELLMAN'S MOTOR BICYCLE

Touring Sled Built for Explorer for Use in Arctic Country—Description of Machine.

New York.—Before leaving for Paris to arrange for the construction of his polar airship, Walter Wellman sent a representative to interview the automobile people of the country, select the best and make a contract for the building of a trial motor towing machine. The experience was disheartening. Almost every prominent concern had more orders on hand than could be filled, in which there was an assured profit, and to undertake an experimental machine such as Wellman wanted "would throw the entire factory out of its stride."

After weeks of vain effort Wellman's representative returned to Washington, enlisted the interest and cooperation of Charles M. Miller & Bro., who detailed George W. Wells, an automobile expert and a man of much originality of thought, to build the machine. In a stable in an alleyway in the northeast part of the city, where the desired secrecy could be had, the work was begun and finished.

The motor and tricar frame used were secured from a motor bicycle maker, but everything else was constructed by hand under Mr. Wells. The motor is of four and one-half horsepower. It is intended for towing solely and not for speed, and therefore is geared low. The machine can travel from two to thirty miles an hour, over smooth ice.

The runners used are of two pairs of Norwegian "ski," both having seen actual service in the north on Wellman's two former trips and having been worn by Wellman himself. The wood is therefore seasoned and can be relied upon. They are reinforced, however, with sheet iron, underneath which are steel runners or skates. The front "ski" are the guides; the rear ones being used to take some of the weight from the tractive or driving wheel when soft snow is encountered, which is frequent enough in the frozen north to make such a provision necessary.

The driving wheel is quite an interesting bit of mechanism, and is Mr. Wells' invention. It is constructed entirely of steel except for the rubber tire. The width of the wheel proper is about six inches, on the outer edge of which are broad teeth that are to give the power in the snow or soft ice. In the center is a pneumatic tire of rubber two inches wide. This is covered with steel wire to prevent puncture, and this latter is covered with a strip of leather which is filled with sharp steel teeth about the size of the head of an ordinary screw, that will grip the hardest ice and, as Mr. Wells put it, will climb the side of a house.

CREEK COUNCIL HOUSE

HISTORIC STRUCTURE MAY BECOME COURT BUILDING.

Citizens Likely to Buy Hall of Justice at Okmulgee, I. T., Where Indian Crimes Were Judged and Criminals Executed.

Okmulgee, Ind. T.—In the event that Okmulgee becomes a county seat under statehood the citizens of the county are more than likely to buy the old Creek council house for a court building.

The council house is one of the historic buildings in the Indian territory. It is made of a very fine grade of sandstone called cotton rock and is situated in a yard shaded by maple trees three-quarters of a century old. The building itself is two stories high, square in form, with the conventional bell tower on its top. A small marble tablet near the north front door bears the inscription: "Muskogee National Capitol. Erected A. D. 1878. Building Committee—James McHenry, W. F. Brown and John McIntosh."

The council house was not only the seat of the Creek legislature, but it served the Indians as a hall of justice for the trial of their prisoners. Beneath the cluster of trees on the shady side of the walk many a prisoner has been executed within the past 28 years. These executions were always solemn affairs. The prisoner, after a dignified farewell to his family and friends, took his stand with his back to the tree and calmly awaited the shot from the lighthouse-man's pistol, which was to put out his life.

Sometimes, however, the executions took place in the small cemetery on the hill beyond the present Frisco tracks. The last Creek execution occurred there in July, 1898. The victim was a young Ulteche who had committed his third horse theft. There was a large crowd in Okmulgee that day. The young Indian was taken to the cemetery on horseback. When the prisoner with his escort arrived the men had just finished digging the grave. A few songs were sung, a prayer was offered up in which the victim joined and the Indian sheriff, Berryhill, stepped from the crowd, Colts revolver in hand, to do his duty. When the fatal shot was fired the young Ulteche's eyes were sweeping the lovely Creek hills and uplands. He fell with a smile on his face. His grave is well kept in the cemetery, a monument to the stern laws and incorruptible justice of his people.

The legal authority of the Creek Indians expired in 1898, and on March 7, 1907, the Indian governors will step down and out and the Indians will become actual citizens of the United States instead of remaining wards of the government. The last of the Indian governors are William C. Rogers, of Skiatook, chief of the Cherokees; J. F. Brown, of Wewoka, chief of the Seminoles; D. B. Johnston, of Tishomingo, chief of the Choctaws; Green B. McCurtain, of South McAlester, chief of the Chickasaws, and Pleasant Porter, of Muskogee, chief of the Creeks.

Gov. Porter, all in all, is the best known and perhaps the most extraordinary Indian now alive. Few men have received so much newspaper notice as Gov. Porter, for he has been the subject of many fables. He has been written about as an Indian millionaire, when the fact is that, though comfortably fixed, he ranks lowest of the Indian governors in point of wealth. He would have been a wealthy man if he had been less honest and less charitable. He has given away a large fortune in the course of his lifetime. Gov. Porter was born in Indian territory near Clarksville, September 26, 1840. He entered the confederate army as a private and left the service as a second lieutenant, after an honorable career in many battles from Wilson Creek until the last shot was fired in Texas.

Gov. Porter is profoundly versed in Indian history and lore and will write a history of his people. He believes that the southern Indians are of Aztec and Toltec origin and was even in advance of ethnologists in maintaining his views.

THE FUTURE OF CANADA.

Within the last twenty years a new ideal, or rather, a passionate development of one that is as ancient as humanity, has become more and more manifest in the world, the ideal of nationality. To be free, to be able to observe one's customs, to speak one's native tongue, to develop one's own characteristic institutions, to live one's national life untrammelled by outside influences and restrictions—this ideal is stirring in the hearts of many different races and peoples to-day.

And the Dominion of Canada has likewise fallen under the inspiring influence of this ideal.

The Dominion, of course, is, to most intents and purposes, a nation now, for the bonds that bind her to Great Britain are frail at best, but Canadians have, in the last five years, awakened to the possibilities of their vast country and, roused from the torpor of a century of easy-going colonialism, look confidently forward to the future.

Will this budding empire of free-men consent to lose its identity in that of its great neighbor to the south?—Chicago News.

"SIMPLE LIFE" IN THE ARMY.

General Corbin has been delivering an allocution to the officers in his Department of the Philippines against luxury, and in favor of simplicity and frugality, says the New York Times.

In the German army, where an officer is supposed never to appear except in uniform, with no questions asked, for example, about underclothes, the case is comparatively simple. But the American officer, if his post be in the neighborhood of a city, must maintain, in addition to all his uniforms, at least two of the civilian's necessary three suits of clothes, in addition to his multifarious uniforms of broadcloth, duck, and khaki. And, when the head tailor of the War Department prescribes a change of uniform, which he does with bewildering rapidity, he does not give officers due notice, whereby they may wear out their old uniforms before buying the new, but shows little consideration for them in regard to the new clothes which they have no choice but to buy. General Corbin is all right. But it must be admitted that Uncle Sam is all wrong.

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN WAY.

The case of an American citizen who was in jail for several weeks because he threatened resistance to the attempts of a Nicaraguan functionary to plunder him of his property, is apparently typical of a quite usual Central and South American condition, says the New York Sun. It is necessary to pay blackmail to a swarm of public functionaries. If the tribute is not paid, many vexatious "regulations," the whole purpose of which is extortion, are applied. Generally the foreigner finds it cheaper to pay the blackmail.

This may not be Nicaraguan law, but whether it is or not an American citizen is entitled to other treatment in case of trouble of the kind than endless incarceration without trial. It is high time that steps were taken to regulate some of these Central American regulations. If the usages and securities of civilized countries are not to be obtained without pressure, the pressure should be applied.

TRY PHILOSOPHY.

"Philosophy, my boy," says Senator Platt, "is the cure-all for every evil life has. When discontented with any situation, philosophize. Think it over; be judicial with yourself. Contentment and happiness will then be yours. I'm a philosopher."

Young men assuage their disappointments by writing verses, and it has been written that "Few sorrows can outlive a little song." When men have reached the winter of their days and feel that "most friendship is feigning, most loving mere folly," they forget their troubles in a buck-wheat breakfast or bury them in philosophy. If its consolations are not complete, it yet suffices to assure them that some things are not near so important as they seem to be.—St. Louis Republic.

CHINA AND HER CLAIM.

China will begin a fruitless negotiation when she demands of Russia and Japan reimbursement of her citizens in Manchuria for the war ravages. Even though the proposal is coupled with an offer to submit to The Hague tribunal both the equity and the amount of the claims, it is certain to receive scant courtesy.

So far as Japan is concerned an effective counter claim can be urged. Japan, when she began the work of expelling the Russians from Chinese territory, undertook a task which China herself should have assumed. The war was waged as much in behalf of China as of Japan. It is poor gratitude to a neighbor who thus valiantly interfered in her behalf to suggest that this neighbor is responsible for incidental damage done while the ejecting movement was in progress.—Pittsburg Gazette.

King Edward is alleged to have told Mr. Whitelaw Reid that the American people are the grandest ever. The British lion keeps wagging his tail so vigorously in token of friendship that nobody can get a chance to twist it.

Opponents of the anti-race suicide policy can bring to the support of their argument the excuse that if the life insurance presidents had no sons the policy holders would not have had to pay them fancy salaries.

SCENES OF SUFFERING.

Some Personal Reminiscences of the Days in the Hospitals at Fredericksburg.

Grant was battering away at the confederates, and the wounded and sick from the Wilderness and Spotsylvania were taken into the city, churches, public buildings and private houses being converted into temporary hospitals, and many a poor fellow after leaving the dissecting table gave up his life and answered the reveille in a different country, relates the correspondent of the American Tribune. Reinforcements, many of them raw troops with gay uniforms, occasionally passed through the city singing "Glory, Hallelujah," and "Battle Cry of Freedom," and many soon returned singing quite another song, wounded and sick. Old men, young men, and even boys were stretched upon the naked floors, simply a blanket for a mattress and a knapsack for a pillow, some with legs off, arms and hands amputated, others with bullets in their loins and many sick.

Early in the morning, after being divested of their money and watches, the dead were taken out, placed in rows, pinned in blankets, with a slip of paper attached giving the name and regiment and soon removed by the army baggage wagons, taken near some cemetery and there interred, a pine slab in pencil giving name, etc., and there left alone in their glory, martyrs to liberty and union.

One little drummer boy, wounded in three places, lay in the basement of one of the churches in a hastily constructed cot, one leg held firmly to a post, tenderly cared for by an elderly woman, a volunteer nurse, who would sit by his side for hours and watch over him, giving a mother's care. Late one evening, during her absence, he was taken again to the dissecting room, operated upon, and in a few moments passed away, never more in earth life to beat the long roll, for taps were beaten and his life extinguished.

"Where's my boy?" cried the good lady, in the morning, when she saw the vacant cot, and then burst into tears.

An artillery officer belonging to the Eleventh Massachusetts battery, with brain crazed, imagined himself on the march, and kept crying to his horses until a halt was made, and he, too, passed away, leaving a widowed mother somewhere among the hills of New Hampshire.

A young lady attached, I suppose, to the sanitary commission, visited us often, and after distributing a basket of delicacies to the soldiers would pause by the door and sing patriotic airs amid a deadly silence, recalling to our minds our dear mothers and sisters at home. That young lady I saw some time afterward at the front, apparently unconcerned, amid the flying bullets, but who she was I know not.

Members of the Christian commission, seeing the approach of death, would kneel by the side of the departing soldier, utter an audible prayer, and give all possible consolation. There were constant arrivals, all were hastening on to Washington, for Grant and his army were marching and Fredericksburg was soon vacated.

BOSTON CORBETT IN LIFE.

Old Likeness of a Striking Character Who Played His Part in Civil War.

Mr. Henry Barclay, of Jefferson, Ia., has sent the National Tribune a photograph of Boston Corbett, which the latter presented to his father, Capt. Henry Barclay, immediately after the close of the war. The picture herewith given is reproduced from it. Mr. Barclay writes that he is confident that Boston Corbett is not among the living.

A Lucky Mess.

In 1862, when company E, One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Illinois, was mustered into the service, Andrew Goldsberry, Robert Marsden, Eugene Fowler, Brainard Wheeler and Charles H. Beach formed a mess. They served through the entire Vicksburg campaign, the Atlanta campaign, went with Sherman to the sea and finally were mustered out after the review at Washington at the close of the war, the original mess remaining unchanged during the three years of service. Today all are living and in fair health. The One Hundred and Twenty-seventh was in the First brigade, Second division, Fifteenth corps. I think that this is an almost exceptional record considering that in the Atlanta campaign they were under fire 106 days.—J. M. Beach, St. Joseph, Mo., in National Tribune.

HELD UP BY BIG PANTHER.

Man and Wife Out Driving in Pennsylvania Pass Through Thrilling Experience.

Cross Fork, Pa.—Held up on the public highway and made prisoners for half an hour by a panther was the adventure which befell Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Crowley.

They were driving to Coudersport and in going through a deep woods their horses shied violently, snorted and attempted to turn around. Mr. Crowley thought a bear had crossed the road ahead of them. He leaped to the horses' heads and then saw, crouched in the middle of the road, not more than 20 feet ahead, an animal of the cat family, which, he declares, was a panther, as it was much too large for a catamount.

The animal squaled frightfully and the horses plunged backward, sending the rear wheels of the carriage over an embankment. Mrs. Crowley leaped out of the vehicle and escaped unhurt. Crowley tried to shoot the panther, but made the aggravating discovery that his pistol was empty.

For half an hour the panther crouched in the road until dawn approached, when it slunk away into the woods. Its arrival at the edge of the road was welcomed by a chorus of squalls and hisses, indicating that it was a female with a litter close at hand. This accounted for the mother's show of fight.

Woman Kills Big Blacksnake.

Easton, Pa.—Attracted by the excited barking of her small dog, Mrs. O. H. P. Reimer went to the spot and found that he was having a fight with a large blacksnake. The reptile would make lunges at the dog, but the animal managed to jump aside each time and escape. Arming herself with a garden hoe, Mrs. Reimer attempted to dispatch the reptile, which started for her. As her aim was inaccurate a battle, which lasted 15 minutes, followed. Finally Mrs. Reimer struck the snake back of its head with the blade of the hoe and put it out of the combat.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free. F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

Sold by druggists, 75c. Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.
