

The Scrap Book

The Request Granted. He was standing on a corner in the shopping district of New York waiting for a car when a woman, handsomely gowned and evidently a stranger, approached him and said hesitatingly: "I wish to go to John Wanamaker's."

WASTED AFFECTION. Talk not of wasted affection. Affection never was wasted. If it enriches the heart of another, its waters, returning back to their springs like the rain, shall fill them full of refreshment.

Doing His Best. Two leading attorneys of Memphis warm friends for years, happened to be opposing counsel in a case. The slider was a man of magnificent physique, about six feet four and built in proportion, while the younger was barely five feet and weighed not more than ninety pounds.

The Governor and His Band. Ex-President Cleveland tells an experience he had when governor of New York. There was a public meeting at one of the theaters to which the governor and his staff were invited. The staff put on their most gorgeous uniforms. They were fifteen or sixteen of them, and they were resplendent in gold lace and cord.

He Announced His Intentions. A young man and his ladylove attended a protracted meeting which was being held in the village church. Arriving late, they found the church filled, but a gentleman gave the lady his seat, while the young man was ushered to a seat in another part of the building.

Corrected, if Not Charged. Some years ago a freshman at Dartmouth college called upon one of the professors and asked for medical advice. Having received it, he offered the usual fee, but it was refused with the explanation that students were never charged.

An Easy One. Ex-Senator Spooner tells of a case tried in a Wisconsin court in which, during the course of the cross examination of an exceptionally youthful looking physician, the opposing counsel was led to utter some rather sarcastic remarks as to the probability that so young a doctor should thoroughly understand his business.

They Were Quits. A city fellow while hunting went out into the country one day and lost his way, and as he was standing by a crossroad he saw a farmer a little way off. He walked over to the farmer and said, "Say, Pat, which road leads to the station?" "How do you know my name is Pat?" asked the farmer. "I guessed it," said the fellow. "Well," replied the farmer, "then guess the way to the station."—Judge's Library.

References. When a man fails to keep an appointment, infer that you are seeking the favor, not he. When you hear an American lauding the institutions and customs of Europe and speaking slightingly of the United States, infer that he will never be president.

Crockett and the Mules. It is told of the famous Davy Crockett that one day while standing on Pennsylvania avenue, Washington, a swarm of mules trotted by under the custody of an overseer from one of the stock farms in Virginia. A congressman from Boston attracted Crockett's attention to the unusual sight, saying: "Hello, there, Crockett! Here's a lot of your constituents on parade. Where are they going?" Crockett looked at the animals with a quizzical glance and answered quietly, "They are going to Massachusetts to teach school."

condemning a literary production, info that it has wounded his pride, vanity or self interest. When a magazine returns a voluntary contribution, infer that the editor knows what he wants and you don't.

When an acquaintance invites you to take a drink, infer that he expects you to treat back. When it is told about the clubs that you are the most popular poker player infer that you are losing all the money. When a man flatters you, infer that he takes you for a fool who is easily worked.

His "Character." There is a story of a Scotch gentleman who had to dismiss his gardener for dishonesty. For the sake of the man's wife and family, however, he gave him a "character" and framed it in this way, "I hereby certify that A. B. has been my gardener for over two years and that during that time he got more out of the garden than any man I ever employed."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Mark Misjudged. When Mark Twain was a young and struggling newspaper writer for the Atlantic County Herald in New York city a lady of his acquaintance saw him one day, with a cigar box under his arm, looking in a shop window.

Only the Runner Up. The best man thought he'd take a look around and see that everything was running as a fastidious bride would wish it, and up in the room where the presents were displayed, alone and unhappy looking, he came upon a youth, seemingly ready, like the wedding guest of the English poet, to "beat his breast." He was wandering about, looking at silver and cut glass without seeing them, and the best man hardly knew how to approach him.

On Papa's Side Only. "Mamma, our teacher says I'm descended from a monkey." His mother (glancing severely at her husband)—Not on my side, darling.

Not Quite the Same. Having arrived at that point in the baptismal service where the infant's name is conferred, the clergyman said, "Name this child." "Original Story," said the sponsor nurse.

The Painter's Way. When a painter has taken up the parlor carpet, removed the furniture from the dining room, leaned two ladders against the hall mantel and stacked a half dozen variegated cans of paint on the sideboard, it means he is now ready to paint the outside shutters and the back fence.—Mark Twain.

SHORT SERMON FOR A SUNDAY HALF-HOUR By Charles F. Aked, D. D. [Fifth Avenue Baptist Church (Rockefeller's Church) New York City.] Christ's Gifts of Thrones and Kingdoms.

Ye shall sit upon twelve thrones, Judging the twelve tribes of Israel.—Matthew, xix., 28.

Christ is the speaker. His words tell His appreciation of the loyalty of His followers. His exquisitely sensitive soul valued it to the full. There was much in Him to make difficult the first open recognition of His kingship, and not less difficult continued, unswerving faithfulness. He was born in a stable. He belonged to the laboring classes. He worked at a trade. When He entered upon His Messianic ministry He offended the wealthy, ruling and educated classes by His contempt for their convention and shibboleths, all that makes life "respectable" and proper. He failed to hold the popular element by His deep disdain of their "patriotism," His refusal to end Himself to their revolutionary schemes and His dependence on the silent, omnipotent forces of love and triumphant suffering.

Frankly, now, do you find it so easy to stand by the side of a man misunderstood, slandered, about whom men lie with unexplained and inexplicable bitterness, who can say in a pained wonder, as He said, "They halted me without a cause?" Do you find this so easy that you see nothing wonderful in the faith of the disciples? Do you find it a simple matter to be true to a great principle when all the noise of voices is on the other side; to assert the cause of the poor, the wretched, the disinherited in the face of a frivolous and worldly society; to preach peace when all your world goes mad for war? If you think it is a light matter, try it. The situation is open. Try it tomorrow at your club, or in the cars when the talk turns on some great social or political question of the hour. Then, if you will live in this spirit, live always in this spirit, and maintain a righteous but unpopular cause through the crisis of half a century, you will understand the value which Christ sets upon uncalculating loyalty to Himself. He rewards it with thrones and kingdoms.

Let us not be afraid of comparing small things with great. The child who appreciates a hurdy-gurdy is of the same spirit as Beethoven or Wagner. The boy at school who refuses to bully the weak and truckle to the strong is made of the stuff of which heroes are made. The man who receives a prophet in the name of a prophet—who recognizes a prophet when he sees one—is sure of a prophet's reward, and he who gives a cup of cold water to a disciple in the disciple's spirit must share the disciple's honor.

We own our weakness. We deplore our faults. We confess that we have come short of our own ideal of manly fortitude. But all the same there is this in your life, and he world and death and hell cannot take it from you—you saw the truth when dull eyes saw nothing in the darkness; you followed it when your best friends thought it a will-o'-the-wisp and the others said you were a fool; you owned the right when right was mis-called wrong and took an unpopular name amid hatred, scoffing and abuse when every prudent person asked, "Have any of the leaders of the people believed?"—in this or that. You were faithful, and neither coaxing nor coercion could turn you from your course, and whether your cause is criticized or crowned you know, and God knows, that you took it bravely when you had nothing to gain by it and everything to lose, and that knowledge is a kingdom to you forever. These are the things by which men live.

Obedience Strengthens Faith. The reason that Abraham was so able to fully believe God was because he was in God's way, not his own. When called Abraham had obeyed and given up all his plans for God's, so that the promises he was believing were promises that concerned God's will and glory much more than his own. It has been well said that faith is not trying to believe that God will do something that we want, but believing that God will do what he wants to do for us. When we fully accept His way it will not be harder for us to believe that he will surely carry it out. Would we have greater faith in God? Let us come into His will, accept His plan or us, give up all else, and choose what He has chosen for us, and then we will have no difficulty in knowing assuredly that what He hath promised He will perform.—Christian and Missionary Alliance.

Saturday Night Talks By F. E. DAVISON — RUTLAND Vt. COVENANT OF FRIENDSHIP. Aug. 23, '08.—(I. Sam. 20:30-42.)

Companionship is a thing which is rarely to be desired or all men. To have some bosom friend, some one in whom to trust, an affinity, another self. He who does not care for that is lacking in his general makeup. Mankind is naturally gregarious. Solitude is not congenial to them. And such a feeling is to be expected in a world where nothing stands alone. The stars swing through the midnight heavens in groups and systems, the birds fly in clouds, the cattle roam the pastures in herds, the fish swim the sea in schools, the mountains are piled in ranges, the rivers empty into other rivers, the seas are multitudinous. And in such a world as this for a man to stand aloof from his fellowmen and shut up his heart and life from friendly intercourse is to mark him as an anomaly, a freak, a misanthrope or a criminal. Even Jesus Christ felt the need of human friendship and gathered about him a band of simple hearted fishermen to whom he could speak familiarly, and on whose sympathy he could rely.

The old time story of David and Jonathan, Damon and Pythias is of universal application as it points to that hunger in every human breast for companionship and genuine friendship, which nothing but the living person can satisfy. That was a true saying of the ancient wise man—"He that hath friends must show himself friendly and there is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother."

It does not necessarily follow that a man's friends must belong to the same rank and station in life in which he moves. Some of the most conspicuous friendships of the ages have existed between those who seemed to have a thing in common and yet were as effectually bound together as the Siamese twins. David and Jonathan was such an instance. In a peasant, Jonathan had royal blood in his veins. David had no prospects of advancement, Jonathan was the heir to a throne. David was familiar with the sheepfold, Jonathan was a warrior. Yet their friendship was of such an intimate character that in the striking language of Scripture their souls were "knit" together. So great was the strength of their friendship that Jonathan took the part of David against his own father, saved the life of his friend when in danger of assassination, stripped himself of his royal attire and insignia and bestowed it upon his friend, gave up without hesitation, his claims to kingly succession that David might find his way to the throne and made a covenant of friendship with the son of Jesse that should not only continue through life, but should bind their children and their children's children in the generations to come.

In this world of sham and hypocrisy a real friend is a rara avis. Probably you could count on the fingers of one hand the friends who would stand by you through thick and thin, through good report and evil report, in fair weather and foul, in prosperity and adversity, when the flowers bloom and when the snows drift, when it is 90 in the shade and when the mercury registers 40 below zero. Friends are like birds; they feed in flocks, but at the first bang of the hunter's gun they fly away, utterly indifferent to the one whose wing is broken or whose life has been snuffed out. Let but a breath of scandal be whispered and life long friendships crumble, and bonds that seemed indissoluble snap like a tow string, and they who but yesterday were bosom friends pass each other with averted faces. In other words, much that passes for friendship among men is pure selfishness. There is something about you that makes it desirable to bask in your presence, and you have no lack of pretended friends. It may be your money, it may be your beauty, it may be your brains, it may be your office, it may be your prospects, it may be your genius, it may be your family, it may be your profession. It is certainly something which will be of advantage to your friends because they come from every quarter. A molasses barrel never has to advertise to draw flies. But when Lazarus full of sores, is laid at the rich man's gate, even the servants shake the table cloth the other way. This is the reason why the friendship of Jonathan and David is the most conspicuous thing of all the ages. It was genuine, sincere, absolutely indestructible. Time did not weaken it, change of circumstance did not invalidate it, contumely and slander did not tarnish it, death itself did not abrogate it. Long after Jonathan was dead and turned to dust, his crippled son was sought out in his obscurity and given a seat at the King's table on account of this covenant of friendship. What this weary world is longing for is a vast increase of the kind of friendship manifested by David and Jonathan.

BEING GRACIOUS

A WOMAN'S CLUB GOES BACK TO GRANDMA'S DAYS.

The Members Will Try the Old Fashioned Ways of Life—Politeness at Home and in Public Made Necessary to Avoid a Fine.

A great shock is in store for the traveling public of New York city it may not come to-day or to-morrow or the next day, but there won't be long to wait.

Be it understood that "Our Grandmothers" is built around a brand new idea which according to its organizers will first shock and then revolutionize the city of New York.

Last winter and for several previous winters the members had a club devoted to Bridge—written with a capital.

"That was our last meeting, at least the last meeting of the club as we then understood it," declared the president of the new club.

"Her manner was just as gracious and charming as ever, but there was just the tiniest suggestion of her feeling out of place. We objected, begged her to remain, and some of us began to apologize and explain.

"In my young days," she said. "We used to say that we had to be careful where we took our daughters. Now it seems that the shoe is on the other foot and you girls have to be careful where you take your grandmothers.

"From that we began to persuade her to stay and tell us about our grandmothers. I couldn't repeat another word she said, but I know that when she finished life for me at least had changed its aspect.

"You musn't think she scolded or lectured us. Not at all. She sat there among us and told us about the grandmothers she had known. Some of them were the mothers of men whom we knew about, men who have made their mark in the world.

"When she left we all left with her and I for one never intended to attend another meeting of the club. The next afternoon I had a telephone call from a fellow member, a woman several years younger than myself and whom I had known before her marriage.

"It was at that meeting that our Grandmothers organized. The young woman who had called us together made a little speech. 'We all love our husbands better than we do bridge,' she began, 'and those of us who have children know how dear their futures are to us. Let us follow our grandmothers' examples and prove our love.'

"That is the aim of our club, to prove that we love and have the best interests of our homes and our families at heart.

To Prevent Rust. If the vessel in which the clothes are washed, steeped or boiled becomes rusty at the bottom, spots of rust are apt to form on the garments.

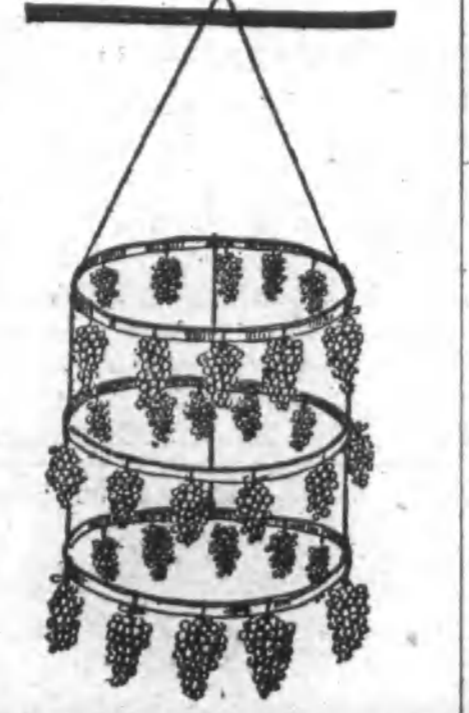

Wasted Hours. In the days when piano lessons were thought a necessary part of a young woman's education, without regard to aptitude, the head of a fashionable school in St. Petersburg asked Rubenstein how many hours a day her pupils should practice the piano.

"None," was the laconic response of the great pianist.—Youth's Companion.

apart by means of three strands of baling wire. The bunches of grapes are tied to the hoops with twine, far enough apart to prevent their touching. They are easily examined to pick off any grapes that start to decay, and hung in a cool cellar will keep several months after picking.

Coat Stitched With Soutache.

Soutache braid is such a fashionable trimming that it is not surprising to see it stimulating fine stripes upon the new silks and cloths of the season. Heavy black taffetas lends itself admirably to stitichings of soutache, as will be seen by the above illustration.

Soft silk fibre braid is used to outline the coat all around and the braid again appears in the wide plaits that fall over the shoulders and continue down to the waist where they are lost in the lines of the coat.

A pleasing note is struck in the dark green and deep purple velvet collars that are stitiched upon some of the black coats, and still another smart idea is the collar of pale grey or white suede. They do not necessarily have cuffs to match, for close-fitting coats, as a rule, have long, simple sleeves which are simply stitiched with braid about the edge, with buttons at the back.

Finishing this coat is a quaint little French turban of pale mauve trimmed with crushed roses and ostrich tips.

HOME COOKING.

Lemon Pudding. Beat the yolks of 4 eggs smooth with 2 tablespoonfuls of granulated sugar, then stir in the juice and grated rind of a large lemon, add 2 tablespoonfuls of boiling water and cook in double boiler, stirring constantly until like thick cream; beat whites of eggs stiff, add to them 2 tablespoonfuls of granulated sugar; when this looks like a meringue it is to be beaten into the yellow mixture while the latter is hot. Serves five people; if 6 eggs are used it will fill a quart dish.

A Dainty Dessert. One quart of strawberry, cherry, orange or any kind of fruit juice, 1 cup water; let boil; add 2 table-spoons sugar, 4 table-spoons corn starch, wet in cold water; let boil 5 minutes; mould in small cups; serve with whipped cream or boiled custard sauce.

Chocolate Custard. Heat 1 quart milk, when hot add 3 table-spoons corn starch, wet with cold milk, 3 table-spoons cocoa or chocolate, wet with hot milk or water to dissolve it, add 2-3 cup sugar. Boil 3 minutes, stirring all the time. Remove from stove and add 1 tea-spoon vanilla. Serve with either thin or whipped cream.

THE HIGHER LIFE

Selected Gems of Thought from Prose and Poetry of All Seas.

Pledge of Immortality.

"We carry the pledge of immortality in our own breast. Man is to live hereafter." Professor John Fiske was a firm believer in a future life, and said that the whole momentum of nature carries us onward into the unseen world.

What Luxury Offers.

One does not need to pick an unnecessary quarrel with luxury or to plead for any kind of medieval asceticism in order to drive home the contention that, after all, luxury is a trundle-bed at best and no proper couch for a full-sized man.

Gift of Faith.

We learn from history that faith had well nigh departed from the earth when our Lord Jesus came. We know that it lived again in the hearts of men and that sons of God and valiant ones were born over the face of the whole earth.

Value of Pain.

Pain is incidental to all birth. Sorrow must come wherever there are human affections. Pain is not therefore to be treated as an interference with normal living.

Looking to Christ.

Jesus Christ died on the cross for human sin. Thank God for that. The cross is our hope. But He did more than that. He preached to the poor. He healed the sick. He showed men and women the way of love.

Fidelity in Friendship.

Severely faithful was Christ, when He healed men of their self-deceits, their swollen virtues, their vanity and their emphasis of the semblances of things.

The Seeking After Happiness.

A pathetic fallacy underlies some modern thinking, viz; that the end of this present life is happiness and that every man and woman ought to attain happiness here and now.

Failings of Painters.

The old-time painters delighted to picture Jesus as a sorry specimen of manhood; their work made him look like an antique funeral director or a chronic dyspeptic.

Whatever weakens the body wrongs both heaven and humanity. Social service is the evidence of salvation, helpfulness the proof of holiness.

Care of Asparagus Beds. Burn off the asparagus beds now and clean the ground thoroughly applying manure plentifully.

FARM AND GARDEN BRAIN WORK ON THE FARM.

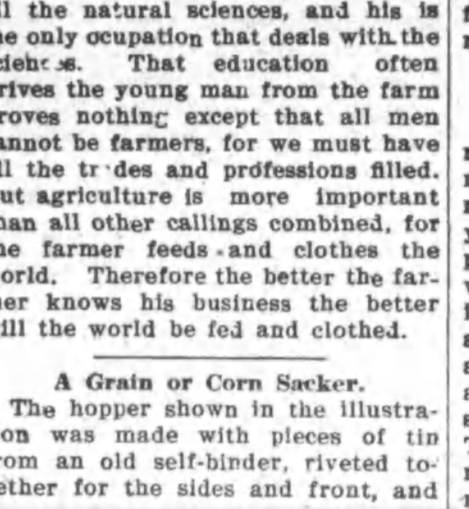

Necessity of Understanding Exactly What One is Going to Do.

No one will dispute the proposition that the more thoroughly one knows the principals that govern his work, the better the work will be performed.

A farmer needs more education than either a physician or a lawyer, for he has need in his business of a knowledge mor. or less complete of all the natural sciences, and his is the only occupation that deals with the sciences.

A Grain or Corn Sacker.

The hopper shown in the illustration was made with pieces of tin from an old self-binder, riveted together for the sides and front, and nailed to the back which is of wood. Around the bottom I used board strips three inches wide to make a box 38 inches square.

Market Cabbage. Market cabbage should be cut before the heads are hard and solid. Cover ship loose on soft heads. When cabbage is soft it is a sign that it is still growing and not matured.

Feeding Coal Ashes to Hogs. I will give the readers of the Prairie Farmer a little of my experience relative to feeding coal ash to hogs.

Geranium Cuttings. For geranium cutting, choose a stem that has bloomed. Pinch out the blossom and cut two-thirds through the branch that is to be used.

Corn a Good Fattener. Corn is a mighty good grain to feed hogs when fattening time comes along.

Eggs Intended for Hatching. Eggs intended for hatching are not to be kept over four weeks, and must be turned over every two,

When it is desired to heat a barrel of water all that is necessary is to screw a large pipe into one side near the bottom and put a fire under it.

Next Year's Pig Crop. The low prices of hogs have caused many to change their minds and side many to change their plans about the number of sows to breed for next year's crop.

Three Square Meals.

One looks in vain among the authors of new rules for taking in our portions of daily bread for the man with the hoe or some one able to speak for him from a fellow feeling. His creed would doubtless be found very simple as to the number and the nature of his meals. Others preach of one meal, and perhaps the majority of those who want to reform our habits of dieting insist that two are enough. Breakfast, we are told, we don't need, but if we insist upon it from force of habit we should come to it after chasing for an appetite an hour or more. Then the hearty breakfast should suffice until evening and the noon meal be cut out.

But the man with the hoe is usually chased out of bed by an appetite already urgent, and his day is twice as long as that of the average maker of food regulations. If everybody needs two meals a day, then the man of hard work needs four. School children have also a strong claim to four, for they must grow as well as keep up steam for study and play on what they eat. The muscle worker is always creating an appetite. He transforms his food into energy and requires more and more fuel to make good the steady waste. His appetite isn't a habit, and it isn't forced. It is a necessity and comes to him naturally.

It is to be noticed that the most of the theorists who tell how little food is required insist upon regulating other "habits" besides the appetite. Fletcher, who contends that man eats too much, insists that one must feel just right before taking food. But when there is work to be done a man cannot consult his feelings and moods as to the time of eating. The work demands the food and demands a worker who can eat periodically and work regularly. When a general gets a hurry order to march his army a certain distance by a given time he insists upon the men having breakfast first. They can lose time over getting breakfast and then reach the goal quicker than they could by marching on empty stomachs. So it's a question of the size of a man's job as to how many meals he shall eat in a day and how hearty they shall be. The two meal man will do a two meal stunt, and the man who is put at a three meal job should have his three square meals or nature will interpose and square the deal in her own way.

Meeting of the Governors.

The purpose and scope of the conference of the governors are the important things about the meeting convened in Washington recently on the invitation of the president. Immediate results were not to be expected. The governors do not and cannot make laws, but they can talk reason and compare conditions. Only through a common understanding and an agreement on the part of the state executives can anything resembling uniform action be secured, and only by uniform action can the forests, the water courses, the mineral deposits and other natural resources of the country be protected against extravagance and spoliation.

The conference of 1908 sets up a precedent that may be observed hereafter with benefit to health, to morals, to finance, to commerce, to agriculture and to popular government. Our population is rapidly shifting, and individual states are first affected by the changes. In certain of the states those issues first arise which grow and force themselves upon the attention of the nation. What is needed is uniformity of state policies on matters affecting the well being and progress of the nation as a whole. When such uniformity is assured we shall see an end to evils which, if not positively alarming, are to be regretted, because they are obstacles in the way of national progress.

If Canada selects all her citizens as cautiously as her immigration commissioner is now doing in England, the Dominion must some day be what the natives often dream of—the Utopia of the Anglo-Saxon race. The influx of southern and eastern Europeans and orientals is vigorously opposed, and even the English themselves must pass a strict examination as to their desirability. The searchlight is turned mercilessly upon all proposed importations from the London slums.

In 1844 Edgar Allan Poe furnished a New York paper with his renowned "balloon hoax" invention, a tale of a balloon which came from Europe and landed near where recent experiments with the aeroplane were conducted. It may be that the first real aerial transatlantic flight will start from the very region where the fictitious one was made to end sixty-four years ago.

Another latter day problem of the air is how the mother birds can prevent their reckless youngsters from flying in front of the aeroplanes.

Sometimes men ride two horses in the political arena as well as in the circus. But the political equestrian takes the heavier risk.

India as a Storm Center.

Peace is threatened in India in two quarters far apart. In the northwest trouble has been impending since the date of the Anglo-Russian treaty, and Lord Curzon, the late viceroy, warned his government while he was yet in office that the powerful Afghans should be consulted as to the terms of that treaty. The warning was unheeded, and the treaty as completed recognizes Afghanistan as lying within the exclusive sphere of British influence. The Afghan monarch does not relish the predominance of Great Britain.

In the southeast of India there is a social unrest very much like that which preceded the great sepoy rebellion of fifty years ago. The people of Bengal especially demand a greater share in the government than has been allowed in recent years. They ask for native representation in the councils. To meet the military crisis which was foreseen Lord Kitchener, the conqueror of the Sudan, was sent to India some years ago and given extraordinary powers. He knew the Sudan tribes, and he succeeded there by wielding the iron hand. Thus far his methods have failed to pacify India, and it remains to be demonstrated whether stern military rule is best for the Indian races.

Living is Still High.

In spite of the industrial depression and the loss of work, the cost of living remains high. Usually a commercial slump is followed by a decline in prices until matters adjust themselves and prices are set up by a normal demand. In a few lines goods are offered at bargain rates, but the things that people must have from the grocer and the butcher show but little falling off in prices.

If the trusts are responsible for high prices the old rule of demand and supply has ceased to operate. The prices are arbitrary, and it is possible to maintain them for the necessities of life. Neither the producer nor the laborer shares in the profit exacted when the prices of necessities are "made" by agreement. Competition is destroyed, and not only is the consumer's paying price fixed for him, but the producer's selling price also. The difference goes into the coffers of somebody higher up, and the consumer and producer have no remedy.

Multimillionaire Hetty Green, who recently scolded the Vanderbilts and Goulds for extravagance in living, has given up her nineteen dollar a month flat for a thirty dollar a day hotel apartment. With such a beginning there is time for Hetty to get into the spendthrift class herself before she dies.

—The Granges of Southern Cayuga county will hold a basket picnic at Cascade on Saturday of this week. Prof. Wing of Cornell will speak. All members of the Grange are invited.

—The new steps and carriage block, with cement walk from one to the other, at the Presbyterian church are a long-needed improvement and are much appreciated by the members of the congregation.

—The following Cayuga county students attended the Cortland summer school which closed its ninth annual session this week: Leona Belle Southworth of Genoa, Linda Johnson of Locke, Emmett L. Karn of Moravia and L. Grace Stone of Port Byron.

—Shea's ice cream speaks for itself. Served every day at Mrs. D. E. Singer's, Genoa.

—Dr. Benjamin R. Tupper of New York City was a guest at the home of A. Cannon and family last week. Dr. Tupper's parents resided in Genoa about fifty years ago, his father being Dr. Asa W. Tupper, who is remembered by some of the older inhabitants here.

—Several men and teams have been at work on the fair ground putting it in shape for the fair. The track has been put in first-class condition, and additional hitching rails have been built to accommodate the large crowd which will be present.

—Charles J. Foster was the victim of a very unfortunate accident Monday afternoon. While at work at the tile yard undermining a fellow workman accidentally struck Foster in the left arm with a pick, tearing the muscles of the forearm and making an ugly wound of five inches in length. It will be some time before he can use the arm.

—The New York, Auburn & Lansing railroad will give special passenger service during the three days of the Genoa fair. Five trains, each way, will be run every day, and two of these trains will be run through to South Lansing. Trains leave Auburn at 7:30, 10, and 11 a. m., and at 2 and 5 p. m., and leave Genoa at 8:45 a. m. and 12:15, 3, 3:15 and 7:15 p. m. —A purse of $100, divided into three prizes, $50, $30 and $20, is offered for the best display of farm and domestic produce exhibited by the Granges of Cayuga county at the Cayuga County fair, Sept. 2, 3 and 4.

A new lot of shirt waists in white and colors at Mrs. Singer's.

—In a note to a Union Springs friend, Mrs. Frederick Trumpeter of Levanna, who is visiting relatives in England, enclosed the program of a musical given on ship board which netted the seamen's fund $145. Mrs. Trumpeter filled two numbers.—Union Springs Advertiser.

—Secretary Loomis of Genoa fair booked several attractions and shows from the Whitney Point and Cortland fairs, also a number of race entries. Several horses have already arrived. The society have secured a moving pictures show and a large and up-to-date merry-go-round from Penn Yan.

—Herbert Clarence Monck of Poplar-Ridge has been permitted by County Judge Greenfield to assume the name of his foster parents, Rev. and Mrs. Fred L. Ryon. The young man is 23 years of age, and since the death of his parents, several years ago, he has made his home with Mr. and Mrs. Ryon at Poplar Ridge.

—A cement walk has been laid in front of Thomas Sill's residence and market, and another will be put down on the premises occupied by Dr. Whitbeck. J. S. Banker has also recently had the same kind of walk placed about his residence. A new plank walk has been built this week from the front of Smith's store to the bridge. Good walks in a town are indicative of thrift and enterprise.

Dr. J. W. Whitbeck, dentist, Genoa, N. Y., is prepared to do painless extracting of teeth by the use of Sleep Vapor or Somnoform, the latest and safest anaesthetic known, which can be had at his office administered by a physician. He also has for extracting the best preparation for hypodermic; and also a local application for extracting children's teeth, perfectly harmless. In fact, everything in the dental line can be found at his office. Charges as reasonable as in the city or elsewhere, consistent with first-class work.

EVA'S STEPMOTHER
OoOoo

"I shall never forget you," said Eva Chaltoner, with her dark, fresh face bathed in tears and her black eyes swimming amid a mist of them.

"You shall always remain, though hundreds of miles separate us, Kate, the dearest friend that I have ever possessed!"

Eva spoke thus on the day of graduating from boarding school. She and Kate Broome were bidding each other a long farewell. Kate's protestations were not so warm as Eva's, for hers was the calmer as also the stronger nature of the two.

When Eva returned to the spacious country home in which her earliest childish days had been passed, she had a feeling of intense loneliness. She missed her boarding school and she missed the dear face of Kate Broome, her idol and idea.

Eva's mother had died in her childhood, she had been the only offspring of Mrs. Chaltoner's youthful union. Eva loved her father, and perhaps if he had been at home during the present period she would have felt far less lonely.

At first Eva and Kate corresponded with great regularity and frequency. In one of her letters Eva confidentially wrote:

"It makes me sad to have papa away for so long a time. But now and then, Kate, another wretched thought enters my head. It is a thought that fills me with actual horror. I have a dread lest papa may marry again. You can't imagine how I detest the idea of a stepmother. I shiver, now, as I write the word."

"Mrs. Russell Ogden, a distant relative of ours, is now in Washington, and she writes me quite often. The other day she had a sentence in her letter which set my heart beating. It referred to papa, suggesting that of course the chances of his marrying again were decidedly strong."

"Now, Kate, as I know you are going to Washington before very long, I want you to promise me that you will keep a sharp eye on papa during your visit there. Tell me, if he is devoted to anybody, and, in that case, just how devoted. You will no doubt move in the same social circles. Do not forget my injunctions, now; there is a dear, good girl."

Kate Broome did go to Washington, not long afterward, and there she met, for the first time, the father of her dear friend, Mr. Chaltoner, who was very much courted in society, and deservedly so; he was brilliant, talented and handsome.

Kate said nothing whatever about her friendship with his daughter on her first meeting with Mr. Chaltoner. She somehow had a curiosity to observe this famed politician, as one whom he believed a perfect stranger both to him and his.

Kate was never what is termed a good letter-writer, and she neglected Eva shamefully. She found that she could not go to balls and receptions and at the same time correspond at all faithfully with Eva, and she now wrote her friend an occasional scribbled sort of note, saying so.

Meanwhile Eva became miserably hurt, and almost wholly ceased writing to her friend.

But one day Mrs. Russell Ogden sent her from Washington a communication that burst upon her like an actual bomb-shell. Her father was reported to be engaged.

Mrs. Ogden could not give the name of the lady as absolutely certain. She had heard it but then her memory for names was so peculiar.

Eva's relative then set on to say that she had met Mr. Chaltoner and his new fiancee together on Pennsylvania avenue that very day. At the end of the letter came a postscript which ran thus:

"I have remembered the lady's name. It is Brush. But of course your father will write you immediately."

Eva was in a perfectly wild state. The next mail brought a note from her father, telling her of his engagement to a Mrs. Browns, and promising that he would very soon write her more fully.

The note was in her father's proverbial handwriting, which was so illegible as a rule, that only those most familiar with its dark ways could make it out.

Eva was by no means sure whether the title was "Mrs." or "Miss" Browns, though the "Brown" part seemed indisputable.

Eva now wrote her father a passionately reproachful letter. She blamed him for being a heartless, cruel parent. She spoke with bitterest rebuke of her dead mother's memory.

It was the sort of letter she had no possible right to send. And it was followed by three weeks of dead silence on the part of her father.

At the end of these three weeks, the unhappy girl was in an almost desperate condition. She longed to ask her father's forgiveness, and yet pride restrained her.

At last one morning a telegram came to Eva which ran briefly thus: "I was married a week ago in London. My wife and I will arrive at the somewhat this afternoon or evening."

—THEODORE CHALTONER.

Poor Eva passed the rest of the day in the most miserable suspense. At about 6 o'clock that evening she heard a carriage stop before the front entrance. After that, with beating heart and falling limbs, she slowly descended into the lower main hall.

Here her father met her. He kissed her as if nothing had happened, making no reference whatever to her upbraiding letter.

"My wife has gone into the sitting room," he said, and quietly drew Eva toward that apartment.

A lady came forward to meet Eva, though as lamps had not yet been brought and the chamber was filled with the deepening dusk, the lady's face did not dawn upon Theodore Chaltoner's daughter until she was quite close to it. And then a great surprised exclamation burst from her lips.

"Why, Kate Broome," she cried; and an instant later she had kissed her dearly beloved friend on either cheek.

"Not Kate Broome any longer," was the soft, tranquil answer. "I am Kate Chaltoner now. Perhaps you can't realize it all at once, Eva, and perhaps you won't like it when you do, but I've come to live here as your stepmother."

"You!"

Eva stared at the speaker in mute amazement for certainly ten seconds; and then, with a sudden outburst of tears, she threw both arms around Kate's neck.

"Oh, it seems like a dream," she sobbed. "It's too good to be true! After I expected some horrid, elderly creature who would be a tyrant to me. No, no; I shall wake up soon, it can't be!"

"Yes; but it certainly is," said Kate, with her rare, brilliant smile. "You see, Eva, I only found out in the most sudden way that your father cared for me. He wrote you immediately after our engagement a short note, if you remember, saying that he would explain hereafter."

"And calling you 'Mrs. Brown'?" exclaimed Eva, who was still in tears.

"That was the fault of his bad handwriting, he meant to write Miss Broome."

"And I suppose now," continued Eva, "that Papa's reason for not afterward writing and telling me everything was—"

"Your bitter, unjust, unfeeling note, Eva," said a grave voice in the doorway, which Mr. Chaltoner's stately form was just then darkening.

"I understand," murmured Eva, penitently. "But you forgive me, papa, don't you? I acted hastily, impulsively, and—I had such a horror of a stepmother, you know. Kate is a very different affair. She will be a comfort—a downright delight! We shall have glorious times together. And I shan't be jealous a bit, papa, of her love for you. But I hope that both of you can spare me a little love."

"We promise to spare you a great deal," said Mr. Chaltoner, kissing Eva. And Kate, with another kiss for her new stepdaughter, softly repeated his words.

MIGHT WAS RIGHT.

Interesting Struggle For a Leg of Mutton.

While a farmer was cutting hop-poles in one of the northern countries of Pennsylvania he saw a half-grown bear cross Clear Creek with the leg of a sheep in its mouth. He was on the point of dashing down the slope to kill the young sheep thief with his axe, when a much larger bear waddled across the stream in the wake of the cub. In a moment the big bear overtook the little one, pitched into it snatched away the leg of mutton and began to tear the meat from the bone. The small bear picked itself up, glared at the big bear, and whimpered and whined, as though the loss of the mutton had almost broken its heart. While it was giving vent to its feelings, a still larger bear came crashing through the brush. It dashed, past the crying youngster, pounced upon the second bear, and surprised it so suddenly that it released its hold on the mutton. The second bear then gave battle to the third, and while the scrimmage was going on, the little bear recaptured the leg and made off with it. The third bear soon whipped the second one, which ran away, overtook the little bear and forced it to drop the mutton. The little bear had another crying spell, and while it was whining, the third bear took the leg away from the second once more. It lugged the leg in its mouth to the little bear, and the latter took the leg in its teeth, shuffled off a few yards, and climbed into a beech tree. The second bear promptly ran past the third one, and started to climb the tree. It was not quick enough, for the third bear pulled it down, gave it a good cuffing and made it clear out. As soon as the little bear saw that the second one wasn't likely to meddle with the leg of mutton any more, it backed down the tree and shared the meat with the third bear. The farmer who had witnessed these proceedings was so amazed that he did not attempt to molest the actors at all.

Cost of Living in Switzerland.

Geneva until about twenty years ago had the reputation of being a cheap place in which to live. By degrees it has become more and more expensive, until the point has been reached where a prominent woman who spends her winters in New York and her summers in Geneva has made the assertion that the necessities of life cost more in that place than they do in New York. The increase in the cost of these necessities was already marked in the years 1904 and 1905, but the customs tariff which went into effect January 1, 1906, gave a new impulse to the advance.

There are very few things that have not advanced in price. Bread, meat, wine and chocolate are all on the increase. Milk, butter and eggs have reached prices never known before. Nearly everything being dearer, shopkeepers, shoemakers, laundresses, barbers, fuel dealers, all follow the movement with higher rates. Cotton manufactures are almost the only articles that are cheaper. The crops have been far under the average this year both in quantity and quality owing to the cold season, and this has had a tendency to increase prices. The vintage in the Canton of Geneva amounts to nearly nothing. In the large Canton of Vaud it will be very irregular and wine selling prices all vary. An average price will be about 50 cents a liter (9.65 cents per 1.0567 quarts). The hotels both in the mountains and in the open country have not had a profitable season; in comparison with the season of 1905, which broke all records in the number of visitors it has been very unsatisfactory to them. There were few days that were very hot, and the summer was so short that many residents remained either in their city homes or at their country places. To make matters worse the stock exchange market has experienced severe falls in the value of nearly all shares and bonds of industrial concerns, especially those making motor cars, a branch of national industry that has become very important. Shares in the chocolate industry have also fallen.—Consular and Trade Reports.

Built of Historic Stones.

James Logan, who was elected mayor of Worcester, Mass., has a beautiful summer home down in Friendship; in which there is a fireplace of much historic interest, being composed of stones, bars, and chains from the famous old Newgate prison, or "Old Bailey," in London. Mr. Logan was in London in 1903 when they were tearing down this prison. He bought the five stones which formed the arch of the niche or inset in the wall on the corner of Old Bailey and Newgate streets, and these he had made into this fireplace. He also bought the bars which formed the grate on the window over the execution door; and those bars are now set over the mantel, which forms part of the fireplace. The chains came from the dungeon, and are now looped across the front of the mantel.

The story of Newgate prison is well known to students of English history, and tragic is the part it has played since the beginning of the twelfth century, when it was established at what was called "the new gate" of the city of London.—Kennebec Journal.

Spiritual Retreat.

Beginning next Sunday at 11:30 o'clock at St. Mary's church, King Ferry, and continuing through the week, services will be held both morning and evening, at 5 and 9 o'clock in the morning and at 7:45 in the evening. Subjects of sermons are as follows: Sunday morning at 11:30, "The Retreat;" evening, "Salvation;" Monday evening, "Sin;" Tuesday, "Death;" Wednesday, "Why Confess Sins to a Man?" Thursday, "The Holy Eucharist;" Friday, "Temperance;" Saturday, "The Blessed Virgin;" Sunday morning at 7:30, "Perseverance;" Sunday evening, "The Church." Confessions will be heard on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday afternoons and evenings. A cordial invitation is extended to the public to attend these services.

Prohibition Convention.

The Prohibitionists will hold their state convention in the Alhambra, Syracuse, Sept. 1 and 2.

Cayuga—P. C. Froese, E. H. Lamb, Conquest—D. L. Struble, Ensenore—Alfred Simkins, Mentz—George V. Roberts, Montezuma—John Gilmore, Poplar Ridge—Fred I. Byon, I. P. Hazard, Union Springs—E. E. Benson, Venice—Paul A. Donovan.

Hughes Club.

The formation of a Hughes club took place in Auburn last week with officers as follows: President, Benjamin O. Mead; secretary, Charles A. Wright; treasurer, Irving Bacon.

The following statement of the objects of the club was sent out: "To the Republicans of Cayuga County:

"Believing that a large majority of the Republicans of this county are in favor of the re-nomination of Governor Hughes, and that thereby the national ticket will be strengthened, it has been decided to organize a Hughes club for the purpose of giving effective expression to this sentiment at the caucuses to be held on August 25.

"It is the design of this organization not only to promote the nomination of Governor Hughes, but also a representative in the Senate who will support and vote for the reform measures which the Governor has advocated.

"Senator Wilcox has shown himself not only hostile to the governor and his reforms, but has in many instances defied his vote, both the moral sentiment and the political policy of the Republican party.

"This organization invites the cooperation of all Republicans who sympathize with the above aims. We especially urge the young men of our party to help us in this movement for better politics.

"It is intended to place in the field in each town and ward in this county, a set of delegates to the 'District' convention which convention will choose representatives from Cayuga county to the State convention, and also to the Senatorial convention.

"Headquarters of the club will be in Room 208, Auburn Savings Bank Building, where Mr. Charles A. Wright who has been chosen secretary of the club, will be in daily attendance.

"Republicans who are interested in this movement are requested to communicate with the secretary at once. Friends of the governor in the various towns and wards are requested to get together and organize in their respective localities, choosing a representative to serve on a general county committee.

"The time is short, but not too short, if every one interested in clean politics will only give a little time to this cause.

THE SENATORSHIP.

The following named gentlemen have consented that we may announce that they will accept the Republican nomination for senator if that should be the wish of the Republicans of this district: Truman A. Mitchell of Weedsport, James A. Wright of Moravia, George Underwood of Auburn. The attitude of all these gentlemen in respect to this nomination is precisely that of Governor Hughes. They leave it to the people to say whether the services of any one of them is desired.

A Rare Chance.

One of the old-established insurance companies writing life, health and accident insurance will shortly appoint a representative in this vicinity, and an opportunity is presented to every man with or without experience to make application for the position. This is a chance for anyone who can furnish satisfactory references etc., to add largely to his income by devoting either the whole or a portion of his time to the business. This work need not interfere with your regular occupation, but you can realize a considerable amount for the little effort necessary to secure business.

Address for the present, State Agent, Box 107, Rochester, N. Y., and give information as to present business, age and experience.

Church and Society Notes.

Services at Presbyterian church next Sunday morning and evening. Rev. E. L. Dresser will preach at both services; morning text, "Two wagons and four oxen—four wagons and eight oxen." Mrs. Dresser will not speak in the evening as was announced last Sunday. The congregation is enjoying the singing of Miss Jenny Robinson during her stay in town. Sunday school at usual time. All are cordially invited.

Ka-Noo-No Carnival.

The business men of Syracuse, N. Y., have been planning all summer for the great Ka-Noo No Carnival which will be held in that city, Sept 14-19th inclusive. They are going to spend $100,000 just to entertain the visitors to the State fair.

Every evening of State fair week in the city streets there will be great pageant parades, spectacles and tableaux. Big floats 15 feet high will be drawn through the streets by many teams of horses and the bands, red fire and general jollity will combine to make a scene worth going far to see.

The street illuminations alone are worth the railroad fare. Imagine immense arches of electric lights over the streets all about the city. For over one mile on a single street these arches are suspended making it as light as day. Then there is the band concert every night. Wilson's famous Ka-Noo-No band of 85 pieces will be heard every evening in Clinton Square.

If you can, imagine what a sight it will be to see 500 girls taking part in the spectacles and dances at one time!

The program follows: Monday, Abdicaton and coronation ceremonies and water pageant; Tuesday, Commercial float parade; Wednesday, Historical float parade; Thursday, Fraternal float parade; Friday, school children's parade.

The Mystique Krewe of Ka-Noo-No will conduct an Indian village on the fair grounds where visitors may see the way the savage red men lived. There will be waltzes, green corn dances, archery contests and many other educational features.

"Syracuse Bids You Welcome."

He Was Mistaken. "Yes," said the sad eyed passenger, "I married the widow of a man who was hanged, and I thought, under the circumstances, I would be able to avoid odious comparisons in connection with the late lamented. But I was mistaken."

"She praised him just the same, eh?" rejoined the sympathetic hardware drummer.

"Well, not exactly," answered the s. e. p., "but we hadn't been married a week until she declared that hanging was too good for me."—Exchange.
