After the ceremony they drove to Newfield. They built the house in which they live and moved into it fifty years ago next January and have always lived in the same house. Mr. and Mrs. Corwin have been hard working people all these years and by good management and economy have accumulated a vast amount of property. Mr. Corwin, when inviting the guests did not even hint that it was their anniversary, but simply invited them to dinner. However, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Hollister attended the wedding fifty years ago and they whispered it to some. The company wished to get something for the occasion, and so they went over to Genoa and purchased a very handsome Morris chair at Smith's store. A very elaborate dinner was served at 2 o'clock, after which the chair was presented, much to the surprise of the recipients of the gift. The day was pleasantly spent by all. C. G. Barger and wife with Mrs. H. B. Hunt sang "We're Growing Old Together," which was very appropriate for the occasion. The company dispersed at a late hour, all wishing their host and hostess many more anniversaries. Mrs. Corwin received a gold pin tray from her sister, Mrs. Rachel Lyon, of Denver, Colo., who attended the wedding fifty years ago.

Drowned at Panama.

A dispatch from officials at Culebra, Canal Zone, Isthmus of Panama, was received by relatives in Auburn last week stating that Bert S. Sturdevant, formerly of Auburn, was drowned on Sunday, Dec. 1. The dispatch requested to know if the remains should be buried there or sent home at the expense of the government. It was decided to have the body sent to Auburn and the funeral will either take place there or at Poplar Ridge, where his mother resides.

He was a former member of Company D, Fourth United States Cavalry, his headquarters being at Fort Walla Walla, Wash., where he served three years and was honorably discharged. Bad Fire at Freeville.

The Lee building at Freeville owned by Mrs. Ophelia Vandemark was burned early Wednesday morning, Dec. 4, and there are suspicions of incendiary origin in that locality. The building was occupied in part by the family of Sylvester Roper who also conducted a store in a portion of the building. The other part had been used by H. J. Barnum, proprietor of the Freeville Press, which suspended publication several weeks ago.

The presses, type, machinery and equipment connected with the printing plant were in the building when it burned. Mr. Barnum had completed arrangements to remove the plant to North Tonawanda Wednesday, he having engaged in business in that city. The fire was discovered about 4 a. m., and in a short time the entire building was in flames. Mr. Roper succeeded in removing all of his effects with the exception of two counters and a stove which were in the store. The loss on the building is estimated at $800 while Mr. Barnum's loss is placed at $1,000. There was no insurance.

Freeville is without protection and there was no means of fighting the flames except with a bucket brigade.

When Christmas is safely out of the way for another eleven months, every woman is justified in turning her attention to her own needs, and especially to the practical side of her own wardrobe. January is the best month for home sewing and especially appropriate to the white month is the making of underwear. Every woman likes to know the latest innovations in dainty lingerie, and she will find a great deal of useful information in the regular fashion article which is devoted entirely to this subject in the January New Idea Woman's Magazine. A new and practical device for the sewing corner is illustrated and described, and there are many helpful suggestions for the home seamstress. The needlework department offers many pretty novelties, and the glove question as well as good taste in handkerchiefs is also discussed. The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

LOVING.

Unless you can love when the song is done
No other is soft in the rhythm;
Unless you can feel when left by one
That all men else go with him;
Unless you can know when unpraised by his breath
That your beauty itself wants proving;
Unless you can swear, "For life, for death!"
Oh, fear to call it loving!

Unless you can muse in a crowd all day
On the absent face that faded you;
Unless you can love as the angels may,
With the breadth of heaven betwixt you;
Unless you can dream that his faith is fast,
Through behaving and unbehaving;
Unless you can die when the dream is past,
Oh, never call it loving!

The Coat With a Hole in It.

An old colored farmer near Washington, having sold his crops, came to town to find a safe place for his money. He consulted a friend, who took him to the People's bank, which had been established for colored people, introduced him, deposited his money and got a bank book for him. When the farmer came to deposit the money for the next crop he found a colored man in charge and asked:

"Whar's de pres'dunt, mister?"

"He has resigned, and I have his place now."

"You got de white gemman's place now?"

"Yes, and I hope to serve you just as well as he did and be equally worthy of your patronage."

"You mought be dat, Mr. Pres'dunt, but I'd lak fer you ter hand me dat money I jls gib you and gib me back what I 'posited las' time, too, if you please. I done tuck notus dat when-eh-er a white man gibs a nigger his coat de coat is got a hole in it sho."

The bank soon afterward failed, and the depositors lost everything.—Lippincott's.

He Did His Best.

A hungry Irishman went into a restaurant on Friday and said to the waiter:

"Have yez any whale?"

"No."

"Have yez any shark?"

"No."

"Have yez any swordfish?"

"Have yez any jellyfish?"

"No."

"All right," said the Irishman. "Then bring me ham and eggs and a beef-steak smothered wid onions. The Lord knows I asked for fish."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Opened by Mistake.

The man had been rushed to the hospital and after a hurried diagnosis was operated upon for appendicitis. But the surgeon found nothing wrong with his appendix, so he sewed him up and sent the man back to his wife with this note pinned to his clothes: "Dear Madam—I opened your male by mistake. Humbly beg your pardon. Dr. Black."

Declining a Manuscript.

This is how the editor of a paper in China declines a manuscript: "Illustrations of the sun and moon! Look upon the slave who rolls at thy feet, who kisses the earth before thee, and demands of thy charity permission to speak and live. We have read the manuscript with delight. By the bones of our ancestors we swear that never before have we encountered such a masterpiece. Should we print it, his majesty the emperor would order us to take it as a criterion and never again print anything which was not equal to it. As that would not be possible before 10,000 years, all tremblingly we return thy manuscript and beg thee 10,000 pardons. See—my head is at thy feet, and I am the slave of thy servant."

As the Boy Saw It.

An Englishman tells the story of a boy who saw an exceedingly bow-legged man standing in front of a hot fire. Finally he could restrain himself no longer and said: "Hey, mister, you'd better get away from there. You're swarin'!"

The Loan Was Returned.

Just why she was carrying a five cent piece in her hand as she climbed into the car was not quite clear. A stout gentleman in the cross seat in front of her turned as she entered, for she was very pretty. His hat brim struck the hand with the nickel daintily held between thumb and finger, and the coin dropped down his back.

"I'm really very sorry," she stammered as he gave a convulsive shudder, for it was evident that the nickel was sliding down the length of his spine.

"It's of no consequence at all," said the stout gentleman. "I don't feel it at all now. If you have a silver dollar or a gold locket or—"

"But," she began, still more flustered, "I really must have it back again, for it's the only change I have."

The coin dropped off the face of the stout gentleman, and he began to look apprehensive. His hands moved fatteringly toward his collar button and then fluttered toward his belt buckle.

"Hold on there!" shouted a hale old gentleman farther along the seat. "If it's coming to that, we'll take up a collection. For the time being that nickel has got to stay right where it is."

And the stout gentleman, catching the suggestion, put his hand into his pocket and, with a low bow, said, "Permit me, madam, to return your loan."

Not a Sport.

A well known clubman of Boston was married during the early days of last winter to a charming Wellesley girl, who, of her many accomplishments, is proudest of her cooking.

The husband returned late one afternoon to his home in Brookline to discover that his wife was "all tired out."

"You look dreadfully fatigued, little one," came from hubby in a sympathetic tone.

"I am," was the reply. "You see, dear, I heard you say that you liked rabbit, so early this morning I went to the market to get you one. I meant to surprise you with a broiled rabbit for dinner, but I'm afraid you'll have to take something else. I've been hard at work on the rabbit all day, and I haven't got it more than half picked."

Against His Creed.

The noted Rabbi Hirsch had arisen to give his seat to a young woman in a crowded street car, but before she could take it a burly young fellow slid into it.

The rabbi looked intently at him, and, after an uncomfortable silence, the young fellow blurted out: "Well, whar're you giarin' at me for? Want to eat me?"

"No," calmly replied the rabbi, "I am forbidden to eat you—I am a Jew."

Dead Letter Office Mail.

A traveling man received the following telegram from his wife:

"Twins arrived tonight. More by mail."

He went at once to the nearest office and sent the following reply:

"I leave for home tonight. If more come by mail, send to dead letter office."

More Than They Wanted.

On his trip homeward by trolley a tired business man was annoyed by three middle aged ladies who stood near him. They seemed determined that he should offer one of them his seat.

He screened himself behind his paper and listened to plainly audible remarks about the decline of gallantry. This grated on his nerves, so he arose and, with a profound bow, addressed the three.

"Will the oldest of you ladies honor me by accepting my place?"

Whereupon they became interested in the advertisements over the windows, and the man resumed his seat.—Ladies' Home Journal.

A Close View.

Telescope Proprietor—Step up, ladies and gents, and view the planet Mars. One penny, mum.

Old Lady—Oh, lor! Hain't it round and smooth!

Telescope Proprietor—Will the bald-headed gent please step away from the front of the instrument?

Two Foolish Situations.

A farmer went into a hardware store and while purchasing some tools was asked by the proprietor if he did not want to buy a bicycle.

"A bicycle won't eat its head off," said the man, "and you can ride around your farm on it. They're cheap now, and I can let you have one for $25."

"I'd ruther put the $25 in a cow," replied the farmer.

"You'd look almighty foolish riding round your farm on a cow," said the hardware man sarcastically.

"No more foolish than I would milking a bicycle."

A Sure Cure.

He was very sick, and his doctor told him that he had to change his mode of living and prescribed "going to bed early, eating more roast beef, drinking beef tea, a month's rest at some quiet watering place and just one cigar a day." A month later the invalid met the doctor, and the latter complimented him on his improved appearance.

"Yes, doctor," said the patient, "I look better because I am better. I went to bed early, ate more roast beef, spent a month in the country and took great care of myself, but that one cigar a day nearly killed me, for I had never smoked before."

Washington and Teacher Differed.

The teacher was announcing the holiday of Feb. 22 and asking them questions concerning its observance, among others, why the birthday of Washington should be celebrated more than that of any one else. "Why," she added, "more than mine? You may tell me," she said to a little fellow eager to explain.

"Because he never told a lie!"

The After College Girl's Complaint.

A lady was calling on some friends one summer afternoon. The talk buzzed along briskly, fans waved and the daughter of the house kept twitching uncomfortably, frowning and making little smothered exclamations of annoyance. Finally, with a sigh, she rose and left the room.

"Your daughter," said the visitor, "seems to be suffering from the heat."

"No," said the hostess. "She is just back home from college, and she is suffering from the family grammar."

CHILDHOOD MINISTRIES.

Dec. 15, '07. (1. Sam 3:1-21).

The child Samuel was the bridge connecting two great dispensations in the history of religious and civil development. He wrote the last chapter of Jewish theocracy and the first chapter of the new volume of the Jewish kings. He came into the world for a special purpose and completed his mission before in old age he departed.

His childhood position should arrest our attention at the outset. We find him in the temple of God, a ministering child. Responsibility rested upon him, as a child he was trustworthy and capable. The poet who sang "Heaven lies around us in our infancy" was not wide of the mark. Childhood can be trusted when maturity can not. Men and women grow away from honesty and innocence instead of toward it. Children are unsophisticated, straightforward, simple, trustful, joyous, loving; adults are often crooked, crafty, double-minded selfish, moody, rancorous, and vile. As men grow old they lose the simplicity and beauty of childhood, and stoop to deeds which degrade and despoil them. The child is often the father of the man. Many a parent could well afford to go to school to his offspring, and retrace his footsteps until they turn into the path worn by the tottering feet of his child. We speak of parents educating their children but we overlook the fact that often the children educate their parents in a very definite way.

Those who have the charge of juvenile training should be careful how they exercise that function. Not every husband and wife is fit to be a parent. It is a crime for some people to beget children. Their progeny is not born, as Sidney Smith says, "It is damned into the world." As the Psalmist puts it: They are conceived in sin, and born in iniquity. It used to be thought that almost anyone who had a fair education was competent to teach school. To know a little more than the pupil was about the only consideration. That time has largely gone by. Now, to be a teacher of youth, special and peculiar qualifications are necessary. It is understood that a child is possessed of body, soul and spirit and that every part of the life must be developed. To do this something more is needed than a spelling book and a rattan.

Children are constantly bearing messages to the world which they would not otherwise bear, even as Samuel. In the temple he received a communication that was denied even the aged prophet Eli, and all his priestly sons. They were too dull of hearing or too much engrossed in carnality, but the instant the sensitive soul of Samuel heard the call he answered, "Here am I!" So the world has often been instructed out of the mouth of babe and suckling. The Almighty does not despise the minute, the obscure, the weak, but hangs a dewdrop upon the commonest flower, and when he has occasion to speak declines the services of thunder and whirlwind, and earth-quake and uttered his message in a still small voice. Who has not been staggered with the curious questions of the child mind? How many a man has been turned back from murder by the artless blippings of a child. The request of a child has more than once set in motion influences which take hold of eternity. Samuel gave unmistakable evidence of the bent of his inclination while he was but a child. His mother, wise woman, discovered it early, and at once set herself in line with it. She saw where the finger of providence indicated success and turned his infant feet into that path. Would that every parent was as wise. Many a man has made a botch of his whole life, because his parents have sought to make him go in a direction which nature and grace both have made impossible. So the world is full of men who are misfits, unsuccessful, the bodies in one place, their minds another. Watch for the first dawn of indications of natures design in the child. Sooner or later it will manifest itself, then let everything bear on the development of that providential design and success is as certain as the sunrise. But attempt to make the vine twine in the opposite direction and you will simply succeed in making a mess of it. It was the most natural place in the world for the child Samuel right in the temple itself, other children would have been sequestered if there is a place for every human being who is born in the world, happy are they who find it.

Solomon, long after the days of Samuel, said, "train up a child the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it. Many people think he referred on to moral character. Oh, no. The law applies to the whole design of providence. Some men are ordained to a business career as certainly as others are to the ministry. Business men are born, made. Poets are called, artists are created, orators have divine credentials. Samuel was not the only man who has been sent into the world, with their work all out on advance for them.

FLOWERS IN DEMAND

IN EUROPE MILLIONS ARE SPENT ON THEM BY RICH AND POOR.

Wedding and Funeral Tributes — Courses of Flowers at Russian Dinners—"Supper of Roses" — Bouquets for French President.

Europe spends millions every year for flowers. Flowers are an indispensable feature of every social occasion, and the French Government has used them extravagantly of late as adornments of public festivities.

One of the most expensive features of getting married in France is the florist's bill. The man in the case celebrates his engagement by sending a basket decorated with lace and ribbons to his fiancée. If he does not pose as wealthy he may get out of the obligation for $20 or so, but the case is cited of the son of a financier who spent $3,500 for an orchid as a center piece and grouped around it four others at $1,200 apiece.

After the introductory corbelle, the engaged man must send a bouquet every day. These bouquets are supposed to be more modest. The devotion of the sender is to be expressed rather in rarity and beauty than in cost. Or he may fall back on the language of flowers and send orchids to express romance, narcissus blooms, white lilacs and jasmijn for tenderness, white carnations for innocence or crimson ones to typify his own ardent passion.

It is obligatory that the wedding bouquet shall be of white roses and orchids, with the traditional orange blossoms, and it must be framed with myrtle leaves. It is not necessarily expensive, but of course a man may go as far as he likes in the decoration of the church.

In this item it is doubtful if European extravagance comes anywhere near that of fashionable American marriages. There was a marriage in Marseilles in 1897, though, which made a record.

It was in the height of the bicycle craze and bridegroom and bride and all their attendants rode to and from the church on wheels completely hidden with flowers. The whole show cost $2,500.

Enormous sums are spent on the floral decorations for the Presidential feasts at the Palace of the Elysee. Felix Faure invariably had the tables at his State dinners decorated with orchids.

It is in Russia that the dinner table decorations reach their climax. There is a different floral garniture for every course. Beginning with violets with the soup, they will change to lilies of the valley with the fish. Then come bouquets or pates with hyacinths, a reliev with cornflowers, pinks with the sherbet, roses with the roast and orchids or sweet peas with the sweets.

A favorite decoration of the table in Paris is a serpentine mirror, which meanders about the table like a river between banks of moss through which wild flowers are dotted. Clusters of orchids suspended over the table are reflected in the glass.

At one floral dinner, the bill for which ran into five figures, screens of vines, apparently growing, surrounded the table and formed a canopy over it on wire trelliswork dotted over with tiny electric lamps of every imaginable hue. Miniature fruit trees were grouped on the tables about fish ponds full of real water with real live gold fish swimming about.

Then there was a famous entertainment given at a noted restaurant in Paris by a London man in 1899 to forty of his friends. It lives in local tradition as the supper of roses. The florist's bill was 75,000 francs, or $15,000.

An American is said to have spent $4,000 on huge chrysanthemums, which suspended singly from the ceiling, were the decoration of a supper room. To this a Hollander countered with tulips imported from Amsterdam to decorate a banquet hall.

Flowers have their political significance in France. Twenty years ago the followers of Gen. Boulanger adopted the red carnation as their emblem. Gossip records that Mlle. Mars, the famous actress, was hissed off the stage one night in Paris in the Restoration period because she wore a bunch of violets. Violets are the Bonapartist flower.

When a French baby is born his cradle is apt to be surrounded with blooms. When a Frenchman dies his bier and his grave will be lavishly decorated with flowers.

The sum spent on the adornment of graves runs into the millions annually in Pere-la-Chaise alone. The tomb of the Worms de Romilly family is kept covered with fresh flowers at a cost of 30,000 francs a year.

What is spent all over Europe for this purpose would, according to one authority, support all the orphanages or all the hospitals. In some cases the flowers that grow on graves are distributed, in memoriam, to friends of the departed every summer.

It was in line with this custom that the widow of the dramatist Ibsen sent the two first blossoms that appeared on his grave to Eleonora Duse in Rome and to Suzanne Despres in Paris in memory of his admiration for their portrayal of the characters in his dramas.

Don't walk close to a building after dark; give an alley a good margin.

LORD : : :
EVLINGTON'S
DOUBLE : : :
By Paul Hardy.

Extract from Ancient and Modern Society, 1st Jan. 1906.

We understand that a marriage has been arranged, and will take place shortly, between Sir Desmond Fallon, of Fallon Park, Northumberland, and the Hon. Muriel Lynn only daughter of Lord Lothbury, the head of the famous London banking firm.

Extract from the Daily Telephone, 2d January, 1906.

Lord Evlington is leaving England immediately for South Africa, where he will commence a shooting expedition that is expected to last for some months.

I may mention that I am a financial expert or what ordinary people call a money lender, so those who know Sir Desmond as well as I do will understand why I know him so well. It was one of the greatest surprises that I have experienced when I read in the society papers the various references to his contemplated marriage with Lord Lothbury's only daughter and heiress; it was scarcely credible that he had a man of business should permit his daughter to affiance herself to a spendthrift. Certainly, the great banker was sufficiently wealthy to permit his daughter to indulge in the luxury of a love match, yet those who have millions to play with generally prefer alliances with families which possess similar privileges. The only conclusion I could arrive at was that the North Country baronet was even smarter than I had believed him and that he had contrived in some extraordinary way to conceal the fact that his large estates were heavily mortgaged, while his debts were on a scale that I must respectfully term magnificent.

When he called on me to arrange a trifling loan of twenty thousands pounds I ventured to suggest that he should apply to his prospective father-in-law, who would, no doubt, be pleased to accommodate him. He smiled, and with the utmost amiability, and frankness pointed out the delicacy of his position; Lord Lothbury, he admitted, was quite ignorant of his peculiar financial position; if the illusion could only be maintained till the marriage took place, all would be well; if not—he shrugged his shoulders.

"And the twenty thousands pounds which you wish to borrow will help to maintain the illusion?" I asked.

"Give me the twenty thousand, and I will guarantee that the marriage takes place within a month," he said.

"And the security?" I suggested.

"I shall be married to the richest heiress in England; isn't that sufficient security?" he demanded.

There was no doubt that the security was not altogether to be despised; I have known large sums of money to be lent, at a proportionately large rate of interest, on the strength of expectations much less substantial. However, I am a cautious man, by training and inclination; I understand perfectly that all engagements don't end in domestic bliss, or the divorce court; and I invited Sir Desmond to dine with me in the evening, when we could discuss the matter more at leisure. I forgot to send a wire to my wife, though I knew she had arranged to visit her sister at Kensington. Consequently, when Sir Desmond came down he found me alone, and we were able to talk confidentially.

It was about 10 o'clock, and we were just lighting a second cigar when my friend from the studio dropped in casually, wearing the inevitable Norfolk suit. I was rather pleased at the interruption, because I had finally decided that I couldn't see my way to negotiate the twenty thousand pounds, and Sir Desmond was beginning to make general but acid remarks about people who have the honor to follow my profession. He looked perfectly astounded when my visitor entered; sprang up, and held out his hand.

"Why, Jack!" he cried, "all the world believes you are in Africa!"

My tenant gazed at him for a moment, and then turned to me with a glance of inquiry.

"You know Sir Desmond?" I asked.

"I am afraid there is some mistake," he said. "This gentleman appears to know me, but, upon my word—"

I explained to Fallon. "This is Mr. Grant, the tenant of my studio and an old friend of mine. Perhaps you have met him at some artistic function?"

Sir Desmond shook his head and dropped back into his chair. "I mistook you for an old friend," he said to Grant. "The resemblance is really extraordinary."

He still regarded Grant searchingly, and with a puzzled expression; after a little while this passed away, and he appeared to reflect; he was so absorbed that he paid no attention to our conversation, and, indeed, seemed unaware of it. He emerged from his reverie suddenly, and with a jest at his own expense, insisted on Grant remaining, though he seemed anxious to get away, and entertained us as a polished man of the world, who has been in every desirable and undesirable corner of it, alone can do. We passed a very pleasant evening, and Fallon became so chummy with Grant that he gave himself an invitation to visit the studio at the earliest possible date. Apparently, he had forgotten all about his disappointment with regard to the twenty thousand pounds that I really couldn't lend him.

It was, some days before Sir Desmond accepted his own invitation to visit his new acquaintance—the gentleman who hired a studio because he couldn't paint; but when the ice had once been broken, it was not allowed sufficient time to freeze again; visit followed visit, and casual interest seemed to have developed into close friendship. However, Mr. Grant in no way changed his usual habits; he went out only in the early morning or the evening, wearing always the old Norfolk suit and avoiding frequented thoroughfares. Apparently he never felt any inclination to run up to Piccadilly or the Strand; music halls and theatres, so admirably adapted to soothe the youthful, possessed no charm for him, and any intelligent observer would have reasoned that either his income must be very small, or his bump of seclusiveness very large. Had the observer been a woman, she might have found a third alternative, more romantic and pathetic—for Mr. Grant was young and extremely attractive—that he should remain wedded only to the art which he caricatured, might be due to some desolating disappointment in connection with other matrimonial desires. Sir Desmond Fallon was perhaps as shrewd a judge of men as horses; it was his business to make money out of both, and his misfortune to fall frequently when his hopes were most roseate. He was cultivating this acquaintance for a definite and selfish reason; he wished to make a catspaw of his friend, but it was not until he had exercised all his admitted powers of fascination, and established himself on terms of intimate familiarity, that he ventured to allude to the daring and desperate scheme which his fertile brain had conceived on the occasion of the first meeting, and which had since been cunningly and carefully elaborated.

He began cautiously, passing from vague and jesting remarks to more serious hints; finding that these were neither misunderstood nor resented, he advanced boldly; finally, he explained the scheme, coolly, as a matter of business.

"When I first saw you," he said, "you may remember that I was amazed. I thought you were a man whom I know well, if you will excuse the bull, you are more like him than he is himself. There is nobody living who would not be deceived by the astounding resemblance. You have his face, figure, and even his voice. I should not be at all astonished to find that your handwriting also is already a very colorable imitation of his. I have noticed that people who resemble one another closely in their physical attributes frequently carry the resemblance into even trifling details. But this is not a case of mere resemblance; the likeness is so remarkable that even now, when I know you so well, I can scarcely believe that you are not the man himself. My dear fellow, likenesses like this are not to be trifled with; they are special dispensations of Providence, and wise men should make the most of them."

"And whom have I the honor to resemble so closely?" inquired Grant.

"One of the richest men in England—though he isn't in England, by the way, at present. You are the perfect double of the Earl of Evlington."

Grant meditatively blew a cloud from his pipe. "I think you have mentioned his name two or three times lately in your interesting reminiscences. Let me see; isn't he the man who was supposed to be more or less devoted to the lady whom you are going to marry?"

Sir Desmond shrugged his shoulders. "Quite so; he left England immediately after our engagement was announced. I believe he is soothing his lacerated emotions by shooting elephants in Africa." "You don't seem to like him?" "No; I have no particular feeling one way or the other. It is true that he inconvenienced me for a time; I almost thought he was going to carry off the prize for which I was striving. However, I managed to put him out of the running."

"May I ask how?"

"I contrived that a certain lady should hear of a few discreditable episodes which hadn't occurred."

"You must be a pretty damnable kind of scoundrel, you know," observed Grant, surveying him with mild curiosity.

"Oh, all's fair in love and war. Besides, I was playing for a big stake. I am still playing for it, and I want twenty thousand pounds to insure success. I am sure you will admire the simplicity of my scheme for obtaining it. Listen. I have several letters from Lord Evlington. You will learn to imitate his handwriting, and I shall also coach you in a few personal details. When you are proficient, you will quietly make your way one morning into the city; you will stroll into Lothbury's Bank and inquire for Lord Lothbury. He will not be there, because we shall choose a day when I know he will be away. You will then ask for a check book, quietly make out a check for twenty, or say twenty-five thousand pounds, and get it cashed. The cashier will be astonished to see you, and you may mention, curtly, that you have just returned. No explanations will be necessary; the amount of the check will excite some surprise, but no suspicion. I happen to know that the balance of the Earl's account is quite large enough to meet the check; even if it weren't, they would cash it. You see, you are Lord Evlington; you have his very accent. Man, the thing's beautifully simple. There's only one other point; if you happen to meet any one who appears to recognize you, you must use your native wit; it's easy to nod, and be in a hurry. Even if you were buttonholed, it wouldn't matter. My dear fellow, if you yourself said you weren't the Earl people would laugh at you. There's not the slightest danger."

"And what do I get for my valuable assistance?" inquired Grant, after a pause.

"Five thousand down, and another five—or ten, if you like—when I'm married."

"Why not halve it?"

"Because I must have twenty thousand now, and you can afford to wait. It wouldn't do to have the check too large, or I'd say make it forty thousand, and share alike."

"Very well," said the painter who couldn't paint. "Now give me my first writing lesson."

A week later a gentleman alighted from a phaeton at the corner of Gracechurch Street. He strolled on for a few yards and was joined by another gentleman. Securing a passing four-wheeler, they entered, the newcomer giving the order, "Waterloo."

When the door was shut Sir Desmond removed his hat. "Well?" he said.

Grant nodded. "It's all right; twenty-five thousand in notes."

"Good Lord!" said Sir Desmond; and there was a quaver in his voice. "You'd better give me the package," he added.

Grant fumbled in the pocket of his frock-coat extracted a small bundle, deliberately counted seventy rustling notes, and replaced the parcel in his pocket. "I got twenty in thousands and the rest in hundreds," he observed.

"Give me my twenty," said Sir Desmond irritably. "Why have you stuck them back in your pocket?"

"Because I intend to keep them," said Grant.

His accomplice bit his lip. "Don't play the fool," he said. "Besides, honor among thieves, you know."

"You are probably familiar with the ways of thieves," said Grant icily. "I'm not, and if you don't like it, we'll drive to the nearest police station."

"And expose the whole thing?" inquired Sir Desmond sardonically.

"And expose you, you pitiful schemer," returned the other. "Cannot you see even yet that I am Lord Evlington, and that you have been persuading me to act as my own double?"

EPILOGUE.

Extract from Ancient and Modern Society, 2d April, 1906.

We are authorized to announce that a marriage has been arranged, and will take place shortly, between the Earl of Evlington and the Hon. Muriel Lynn, only daughter of Lord Lothbury.

It will thus be seen that there was no foundation for the rumour published by several of our contemporaries, to the effect that the Hon. Muriel had contracted an engagement with a well-known Northumberland baronet.

Extract from the Daily Telephone, 2d April, 1906.

Sir Desmond Fallon, of Fallon Park, Northumberland, has been ordered to make a prolonged stay in Egypt for the benefit of his health.

Spaniards in Egypt.

No less than 20,000 persons in Egypt speak Spanish, though very few of these are Spanish by birth. These Spanish-speaking people are Jews, but not the Jews descended from those driven from Spain in 1492 by Ferdinand and Isabella. These Jews, in the course of time, merged their Castilian into the Arabic, which is closely akin to the modern Hebrew of Syria and Palestine. The Jews now in Egypt are later arrivals, whose settlement in Egypt was not accomplished until a circuitous path had been travelled from Spain through the Levant. Many Spaniards have settled in Turkey where there are several newspapers established for them. There are two at Constantinople, two at Salonika, one at Philippopolis, and three at Sofia. Recently a cultivated Jew, M. Abraham Galante, has established another at Cairo.

Muzzling Dogs.

Twenty thousand muzzles have been ordered from England by the Rhodesian Government for the purpose of stamping out rabies among native dogs.

ROADS AND ROAD MAKING

MAINTENANCE OF HIGHWAYS.

Should They be Constructed and Looked After by a Commission.

Whether the construction and maintenance of the highways of a State should be wholly administered by an engineering department, as in New York; or looked after by a commission with its attendant engineering department, as in Massachusetts; or in the nature of State "reward," as in Michigan; or by a highway commissioner who personally directs all engineering, as in Connecticut, is a question that could be gone into at great length and with gratifying results. As discussed by Joseph Palmer Woodhams in Good Roads. Certainly good results have been attained in all of the above-mentioned States, as well as in others which I have not mentioned. My own observation, gained from some highway work in Connecticut, has led seven or eight years' experience in me to believe that very favorable results have been obtained under the last named method of administration. Certainly, in any case and under all conditions, the engineering force and appropriation for its maintenance should be adequate for the work which it is called upon to perform. That the commission may not be crippled, and the best results not attained.

The importance of the engineering can readily be seen from the following comparison: The old idea of making a road was termed "working the road," a term much more appropriate than would at first appear. It was, in brief, to take a plow and pair of horses and drive six miles in one direction along the shoulder of the road in the forenoon, and back on the other side in the afternoon, and the following day take the same pair of horses and scraper and drag the furrow of sod from the sides of road into the center of the road, give it a few vicious thumps with a hoe, and leave it to be worn down by travel. Soon afterward the village doctor, hurrying to answer an urgent call, strikes this particular piece of road, breaks a spring of his buggy, and must bear the expense of repair, besides paying his share of the tax laid to pay for "working the road." Anyone who has driven over a smooth stretch of State road, with its easy curves, gradual grades, and well crowned surface, in the States of Massachusetts, New York, or Connecticut, can readily appreciate the importance of intelligent engineering in the establishment of good drainage, easy grades, and smooth surface.

The Use of Tar Preparations.

During the summer of 1906 it is stated that nearly a million yards of macadam roads in the United States were treated with coal tar preparations for the suppression of dust.

Some interesting records of results are now obtained. The effects from the employment of this treatment are strongly illustrated on some of the boulevards which form the connecting links of the Metropolitan Park system of Boston.

On these boulevards the wear of the automobile had become a serious menace to the life of those beautiful thoroughfares, and the park commissioners were quick to adopt some means for alleviating the dust nuisance, which had become a serious matter.

In order to test the efficiency of the tarvia treatment various points in the park system were selected, and sections of road varying from a few yards to a mile were treated in the fall of 1906. The results of the treatment are now apparent. It is reported that all the sections of the roads which have not been treated show considerable deterioration, due to traffic, especially to the horses' hoofs, which picked up the softened surface to a depth of two inches or more. The fine material which had made the surface smooth and hard has been largely washed away or blown off as dust and much loose stone has been exposed. It is noticeable that where the gutters are deep the stumps have washed little side gulleys or rivulets, the result being that the roadway presents a rough surface at its sides. This deterioration is what road engineers naturally expect after the winter. It is found, however, that on the sections of the road which were tarvated the macadam is now in especially good condition. The surfaces are still smooth and firm and without mud.

According to the figures given out by the park department engineers, it is shown that the cost of maintaining macadam roads in this vicinity has been about $0.116 per square yard per year during the three years previous to the use of his coal tar preparation, or in round numbers something over $1,000 per square mile of 15 ft. roadway. These costs include repairing, sprinkling and cleaning. It will thus be seen that the reduction in repairing and sprinkling expenses would be in favor of the tarvating treatment.

LIVE STOCK

SHELTER FOR STOCK.

Dairyman Claims That a Warm Stable Is Necessary.

There is considerable difference of opinion among stockmen as to what constitutes the best shelter for the live stock of the farm. The progressive dairyman claims that a warm stable is necessary for the economical production of milk during the winter season. He also holds that it is unnecessary and an extravagant use of valuable food, to compel the high strung dairy cow to daily warm from 60 to 70 pounds of water from the freezing point to 102 degrees Fahrenheit, the temperature of her body.

The cattle feeder on the other hand considers an open shed preferable to a warm stable for fattening cattle; others go so far as to claim it is more economical, and better for the cattle to break the ice on the water tanks in the morning than to keep its contents above the freezing point by means of artificial heat, says Farmer's Tribune.

Methods of stabling must necessarily differ because of the difference in climatic conditions in different sections of the country. As a general rule, however, both scientific experiments and practical feeding tests indicate that we are more and more getting away from the idea of overheated stables, and that a temperature from 8 to ten degrees above freezing in the stable is conducive to the best health of farm animals. Professor King states, in his "Physics of Agriculture" that a temperature between 40 and 50 degrees Fahrenheit is probably the best temperature for fattening cattle and for dairy cows that are being forced to give large quantities of milk. But in the case of animals that are kept on a maintenance ration, he believes that a temperature of from 10 to 15 degrees higher would be more economical. The larger the amount of feed consumed by cattle the greater the amount of heat produced in the body, and hence the necessity of a more rapid loss of heat from the body. There can be no doubt but that the lower the temperature in the stable the larger the consumption of food to maintain the body temperature of the animals. When cattle are kept in a cool stable they will eat a larger amount of food than when they are kept in overheated stables, and even if there is an increased oxidation of food on account of low temperature, the larger amount consumed will more than counterbalance this loss and actually give better results from the food consumed, either in the form of milk or in the form of more rapid gains.

Device for Holding a Wild Horse.

A convenient method of holding a wild horse when administering medicine, taking off shoes, etc., is shown in the accompanying sketch. In the end of a piece of fork handle a hole is bored in which is inserted a

FOR HOLDING A WILD HORSE.

4-inch rope. The rope is twisted over the horse's nose by turning the handle. It should not be over the nostrils or in the mouth.—Prairie Farmer.

Care of Sheep Pastures.

Sheep are especially pastoral animals and close croppers. A typical pasture is a clean pasture with a dense growth of short grass, so closely covering the ground that they will not pull up the roots.

An old pasture is dangerous to the flock and too costly in this advanced age of agriculture. It is more or less infested with sheep's worst enemy, internal parasites.

A good dressing of air-slacked lime on an old pasture two weeks previous to the flock being turned out will give good results for the labor.

Stagnant or pond water should be guarded against, as it is liable to be contaminated with larvae of the pestilent parasites. The flock should be supplied with pure water in troughs pumped from deep wells.

A Horse's Digestion.

The idea that a horse's digestion and general condition are improved by clipping its coat is an absurdity. A horse cannot digest food if it is constantly shivering and blankets cannot take the place of hair for warmth. The greatest exponents of clipping are grooms who are too lazy to thoroughly care for a horse which has a long coat of hair. It is utterly useless to improve on nature in this respect and clipping should be discontinued as a barbarous practice.

FIRST GLOVE WEARERS.

Gauntlets of Ancient Hunters—Saints Who Wore Gloves.

Not only on account of the intrinsic beauty of many specimens that have been preserved, but also because of the symbolism connected with them gloves will ever have a special interest for the student of the past.

That they were worn at a very early period here is no doubt, though exactly when they first came into use it is impossible to say, for there are no actual references to them in early Greek or Roman MSS. The first mention of gloves is in the Odyssey, in which it is stated that Laertes, the father of Ulysses, wore them on his hunting expeditions to protect his hands from the thorns, and in his Cyropaedia Xenophon reproaches the Persians for their effeminacy in covering their hands.

Both in the East and West the glove, when once adopted, soon became of importance as the recognized symbol of the transfer of property, the seller of land giving the purchaser a glove as a token of possession, for which reason it is generally supposed that in the much quoted passage in Ruth iv., verse 7, "to confirm all things a man plucked off his shoe and gave it to his neighbor," the word shoe should have been translated glove.

In Christian iconography a glove was very early associated with certain saints, notably with St. Front, who is said to have left his glove behind him after attending the funeral of St. Martha, the sister of Lazarus and with St. Cæsarius, Bishop of Arles, who is credited with having sent his glove full of air to a district in his diocese suffering from a protracted calm.

A glove worn on the left hand by a saint is a token of noble birth, probably because the falcon was carried on the left wrist, and as early as the third century A. D. gloves were given by the Emperor to Bishops on their investiture. St. Ambrose of Milan, who died in 398 is represented in a painting, now in the sacristy of the cathedral of Aix-la-Chapelle, wearing gloves, on the back of which a star is embroidered. Gloves are among the emblems of St. Amadens of Savoy, whose sister is supposed to have given him a Blessed Virgin, and the story goes that St. David of Sweden, when his sight was falling from old age, hung his gloves on a sunbeam, taking it for a cord.

As is well known, the throwing down of a glove was in feudal times a challenge to single combat and the picking up of that glove an acceptance of the defiance, a fact skillfully turned to account by Browning in his beautiful poem "The Glove," in which he makes the heroine dash down her glove at the feet of the lion, only to have it flung back in her face by her lover.

Knights used to wear a lady's glove in their helmets as a token that they would defend her cause against all comers, and to this day a special significance attaches to the gift of a pair of gloves from a man to a woman. The custom of taking off the right hand glove before shaking hands with a lady is probably a survival of the days of chivalry, as is also the presentation of a pair of white gloves to a Judge when there are no cases to be tried at an assize, as well as to the giving of black gloves to mourners at a funeral.

PAY OF ENGLISH CHAUFFEURS.

Ranges From $5 to $12.50 a Week—A Very Few Receive $15.

Chauffeurs will not be likely to abandon America in a grand rush for England if they should happen upon a certain article in the Gentlewoman entitled "The Cost of a Chauffeur"—meaning of course the cost in England.

Regarding wages, says the article, these may be anything from 20s. to 50s. a week. Much depends upon the car and the experience of the driver. For a small car, say, up to 15 horse-power, a very good man can be obtained at 25s. a week. For larger cars, however, you must have a good and experienced driver, and you will not get one of that description under 35s. a week, possibly more.

A fair average for a good man is 35s., and the best drivers will not look at anything less than £2 10s. a week. Those at the very top of the profession, handling high powered speedy cars, earn their £3 a week easily besides perquisites, but the supply and demand of these is necessarily limited.

I strongly advise against the employment of the cheap driver. I should look with suspicion upon any man who offered himself for a pound a week. He may be of excellent character, but it is probable that he wants experience, and I don't want men gaining experience on my car.

The very best livery that can be provided is a good, stout driving coat. It is necessary to the driver on even warm days, and it always looks smart.

Cap and goggles, a set of overalls for cleaning purposes, a pair of rubber boots for use when washing the car, and driving gloves will complete the outfit, all of which can be obtained for not more than a five pound note. This is sufficient for the driver employed in general driving; if he has much town work a smart jacket will be needed and possibly a complete livery.

The Gent-Madam, I am collecting for the drunkards' home and am open to receive anything suitable for that institution. It may be so, but it is more likely to make him smart.

WAYS OF WOMEN INVALIDS

Workers Often Envy Their Well-to-do Sisters.

"With the best intentions I occasionally say things best left unsaid," remarked the good-natured woman. "Only the other morning, meeting a neighbor on the way to the shop where she is employed, I said: 'I needn't ask how you are, Mrs. Jones, as you are certainly the picture of health.'"

"I may be the picture of health," she snapped, "but all the same I ain't well at all. I ought to be under the doctor's care at this minute, and would be if I could afford to lose the time from my work."

"And then Mrs. Jones, plump, rosy-cheeked, and bright-eyed, tossed her head and walked on, apparently quite offended."

A specialist, who had grown rich upon ailments, real and fancied, of a large number of women patients, once spoke of one of them having to be lifted out of the coach which had brought her to the door of his private hospital. "The good lady really thought," said he, "that she could not put her foot to the ground, and yet there is many a poor woman in this city going to her work every day who is quite as much out of health as she is."

Poor women out of health, and poor women ashamed of being in health, both envy their well-to-do sisters.

"Oh," sighed an imposed-upon boarder in a working women's home, "how many times have I toiled up three or four flights of stairs, carrying ploughman's meals to some roommate, who, being out of work, wished to be put down on the sick list! If I hadn't done it, the duty would have devolved on the already over-worked housemaid. These invalids could not afford a doctor, but anyway they could take to their beds and sleep about twenty hours out of the twenty-four until it became an imperative necessity for them to go out in search of another job. By reading the advertisements of patent medicines, they had become familiar with the names of various diseases, and my how they had 'em! If they could only have had a doctor in the bargain they would have been better pleased, but a doctor costs money, and the managers of a home probably think they do enough in giving free lodging."

Among other things seen at Godollo were the apiaries in Langstroth-Dadant hives, and also the shops where the students learn to make hives of this and other patterns. The different experiments being conducted on the farm with various honey-producing plants were indicative of the value of the school to the beekeepers at large.

Connected indirectly with the school are some eight or ten inspectors who each have a district of the kingdom to travel over and instruct and encourage the people in bee-keeping. Along the lines of the state railway, at the section and station houses, are small apiaries fostered by the government, for the dissemination of knowledge concerning bees. To those interested in bees it is a source of great pleasure to ride along on the train and see apiary after apiary and realize that the little kingdom of Hungary annually expends in the interest of apiculture $50,000, of a sum equal to five times that expended annually by the United States for apiculture.—Ralph Ben'ion in Gleanings.

An Exquisite Tea Gown.

At least two of three materials with as many different kinds of lace will be necessary to duplicate this luxurious tea gown, although they need not be necessarily expensive. Although embroidered chiffon is used for the original model, this can be delightfully replaced with the machine embroidered silk muslin, built over a foundation of silk mill of soft China silk. The bertha and border of the front of the gown are of taffetas stitched with very narrow silk soutache braid.

There is a front panel of tucked mill with inserts of embroidery and or blouse of the same materials. The sleeves and collar are also of mill, the sleeves being finished with tiny ruffles of chiffon and Valenciennes lace. Around the bottom of the skirt there are two tiny folds of taffetas.

For more expensive models marquisette and liberty satin are handsome and combined with the modish trimmings make strikingly rich effects. The coming modistic season shows every promise of the maintenance of strange, and what may have been once regarded, as incongruous materials ingeniously maneuvered into an effective whole, and his is true of house gowns as well as street frocks.

Clothes.

Wearers of fine woollen openwork stockings will find that if a hole in the open part be mended or drawn together with wool, however fine, an unsightly black thickened part will show on the foot when in wear. If black silk (crawel or fine knitting) be used instead of wool for the darn, it is almost impossible to detect the mend. The silk mend is quite as firm and strong, and can be easily stitched into the design. It also has the advantage of keeping its color.

HOME OF THE BANATER BEES.

What Hungary is Doing For Apiculture.

In some respects it can be said with truth that the little kingdom of Hungary leads the world in apiculture. The Hungarians are a shrewd, thrifty people, and intensely patriotic. This last characteristic is particularly shown by the fact that the young students of the country even refuse to learn German for fear of Austrian encroachment and dominance. Budapest, the capital, is the Paris of Oriental Europe—rich commercially through the business-like qualities of the Jewish-Hungarian merchant. And it is in the vicinity of this city at Godollo that the Hungarian State School of Apiculture, whence that splendid system of governmental fostering of bee-keeping is directed, has its location. Here there is offered to the youth of the kingdom a two-years' course devoted entirely to apiculture in all its branches.

The Banater or Hungarian bees are a very gentle race resembling in many respects the more familiar Carniolans. They are somewhat smaller than the latter, and have a greater tendency to show yellow. This yellow becomes more pronounced toward the east, in the Siebenberg region. The writer also noticed, in going southward through Servia, Bulgaria, into Turkey, a gradual shading off into yellow, and a steady increase of the excitability shading off into the very excitable bees of the Orient. It is said by Hungarian bee-keepers that they have no excessive swarming with their bees, and that the Banater bees are yet prolific and excellent honey-gatherers. This is also the testimony of those who have had experience with this race of bees as imported into this country.

Among other things seen at Godollo were the apiaries in Langstroth-Dadant hives, and also the shops where the students learn to make hives of this and other patterns. The different experiments being conducted on the farm with various honey-producing plants were indicative of the value of the school to the beekeepers at large.

Connected indirectly with the school are some eight or ten inspectors who each have a district of the kingdom to travel over and instruct and encourage the people in bee-keeping. Along the lines of the state railway, at the section and station houses, are small apiaries fostered by the government, for the dissemination of knowledge concerning bees. To those interested in bees it is a source of great pleasure to ride along on the train and see apiary after apiary and realize that the little kingdom of Hungary annually expends in the interest of apiculture $50,000, of a sum equal to five times that expended annually by the United States for apiculture.—Ralph Ben'ion in Gleanings.

For Hive Stands.

A writer in Bee Culture says: "I have been making some cement hive-stands for my own use. The blocks are made 1 in. square on the bottom, 5 1/2 in. high. The top, or where the hive rests, is 3 in. by 1 1/2. These cost me three cents apiece, are much cheaper than wooden stands, and are practically indestructible, besides presenting a very neat appearance. You will see that the hive rests upon such a small surface that there is small chance for dampness to collect to rot the bottom-board.

Bees Make Fruit Grow.

Honey producing is only one of the missions of the bee. Some years ago, says a writer in Suburban Life, I moved to a small place up the Hudson river. I wanted a bee farm and selected for that purpose a spot among apple, cherry and plum trees, some of which had never borne fruit, others none for years past.

Being busy I did not cut the trees down. They blossomed freely and of course we paid no further heed to them.

The cherry trees were, much to the owner's astonishment loaded with very large, perfect fruit. Such a thing had not happened for years.

Early in the autumn while waiting for a swarm of bees to settle I observed a number of fine apples upon one of the smaller condemned trees. Later we gathered from this tree a barrel of the finest fall pippins ever seen in that vicinity.

Since that time I have demonstrated by scores of experiments that trees which had for many seasons borne little good fruit, or possibly none at all, have been brought up to a high standard of productiveness by the presence of bees.

A Real Wonderland.

South Dakota, with its rich silver mines, bonanza farms, wide ranges and strange natural formations, is a veritable wonderland. At Mound City, in the home of Mrs. E. D. Clapp, a wonderful case of healing has lately occurred. Her son seemed near death with lung and throat trouble. "Exhausting coughing spells occurred every five minutes," writes Mrs. Clapp, "when I began giving Dr. King's New Discovery, the great medicine, that saved his life and completely cured him." SPARKING DISTANCES IN OIL.

That of the Olive Shows Lowest Insulating Power.

A large number of various oils have been examined with respect to their dielectric strength by E. Jona, the famous electrician of Germany. The charges were derived from an alternating current transformer, yielding voltages as high as 160,000. The oils differ greatly in their insulating powers; but the curves indicating the relation between voltage and maximum sparking distance all tend to become straight lines at voltages higher than 80,000.

Natural olive oil shows the lowest insulating power. Benzol and fused paraffine are at the other extreme, and of these benzol only shows a slight increase of sparking distance for the higher voltages. It begins at 44 centimeters, and only rises to 47 centimeters at a voltage of 160,000. The sparking distances in air show a very much greater increase with voltage than those in any liquid, but they also tend to a straight curve at the higher voltages.

All dielectric oils show a smaller change of sparking distances with the voltage than the corresponding oils do in their ordinary state. Toluol, xylol, and solution of colophony in xylol have nearly the same insulating power as benzol; but the modern vaseline oils used for transformers closely approach them. Benzol is, in any case, too dangerous on account of its inflammability.

To Determine the Age of Pewter.

It has been truly said that "no hard-and-fast dogmatic propositions can be accepted" as regards the age and makers of pewter. At least nine-tenths of the pewter of today is without a mark of any description, so that the only way to determine the period to which it belongs is to study the history of pewter and then to arrange the dominant facts in the proper chronological order. For example:

"Straight or slightly curved lines preceded swelling curves; flat, unadorned lids came before domed tops with knobs or crests; few and simple moldings were the forerunners of many and elaborate ones."

"A vessel with the lower part of the handle attached directly to the body is older than the one having a handle connected with it by an intervening peg or strut. The Scottish 'quagh' differs from the porringer, often incorrectly called a bleeding-vessel in that the former is round-bottomed, the latter flat, and the handles or lugs were always plain, not pierced or otherwise ornamented."

"The older a plate is the broader the brim and the heavier the metal from which it is made. This refers chiefly to large plates."

Motor Cars for Ammunition.

Trials to test the ammunition carrying capabilities of motor cars in war time have recently been going on between Berlin and Kiel. According to report, three cars transported altogether 51 tons of ammunition, and this is considered to be satisfactory.

Badly Mixed Up.

Abraham Brown, of Winterton, N. Y., had a very remarkable experience; he says: "Doctors got badly mixed up over me; one said heart disease; two called it kidney trouble; the fourth, blood poison, and the fifth stomach and liver trouble; but none of them helped me; so my wife advised trying Electric Bitters, which are restoring me to perfect health. One bottle did me more good than all the five doctors prescribed." Guaranteed for blood poison, weakness and all stomach, liver and kidney complaints, by J. S. Banker, Genoa, and F. T. Atwater, King Ferry, druggists. 50c.

TEMPERANCE TOPICS.

Need of Inebriate Asylums.

Dr. M. S. Gregory, the resident alienist at Bellevue Hospital, in New York, says that there is an urgent need for institutions for the treatment of habitual drunkards. He declares that the disposal of chronic alcoholism cases is a perplexing problem. The present method of treatment is unsatisfactory in that it is the aim to relieve immediate symptoms and discharge the individual as soon as possible. Such treatment has no lasting effect and affords not the slightest protection to the community. Workhouse sentences do not cure the condition, but merely prolong the life of the inebriate by enforcing occasional periods of sobriety by means not calculated to increase the drunkard's self-respect. The Louisville Courier Journal discussing the matter editorially, says:

"Unquestionably inebriates are defective. While they are not insane in a legal sense, they are irresponsible and a menace to their families and the community. Farms or colonies for inebriates, under competent medical supervision, might cure many cases of alcoholism that in the ordinary course of events would never reach the 'cures' established as profitable enterprises. The pitiful tragedy of the inebriate's life is well known to persons who have from year to year witnessed the proceedings of a police court. Every city has its list of inebriates, male and female, who drift back to the clearing-house of crime and misery as surely as a police judge sends them to jail or the workhouse. Legislation providing that such individuals should be committed to institutions and released only upon the recommendation of physicians in charge would serve the double purpose of saving the inebriates from the greater degradation to which they are now subject and of giving habitual drunkenness a status that might prove a deterrent to persons in the earlier stages of dissipation."

"The question of whether or not the liquor traffic is, upon the whole, beneficial or hurtful to society, does not enter into this discussion. The inebriate is a by-product of the trade. As the trade is sanctioned by law and will probably always be sanctioned, at least in centers of population, upon the principle that the weakness of the few should not be a bar to the temperate indulgence of the many, local governments should at least provide for the scientific and humane treatment of the victims of alcohol. A part of each saloon license devoted to the maintenance of such an institution in every state would defray the expense of caring for a class of sufferers now too much neglected."

Alcohol and Idiotcy.

Dr. A. MacNicholl, a leading physician of New York City, has been making a report to the New York Academy of Medicine regarding his recent researches into the causes of mental deficiency in school children. He puts alcohol far to the front among the causes of degeneration. He says:

"In prosecuting this work I was forcibly impressed by the conspicuous position occupied by alcohol as a cause of mental deficiency of children. Alcohol, by destroying the integrity of the nerve structure, lowering the standard of organic relations, launches hereditary influences which, by continuous transmission, gain momentum and leave their impact upon gland and nerve until mental faculties are demoralized, physical energies hopelessly impaired and the moral nature becomes degenerate and dies."

Dr. MacNicholl found that of children of drinking parents, but of abstaining grandparents, 75 per cent were dullards; of the children of abstaining parents and grandparents only 4 per cent were dullards.

All this tallies with official researches in Massachusetts, which demonstrated that forty-seven per cent of the idiotcy of that state is found among children of drunkards. It will be recollected that a former trustee of the Central Imbecile Asylum at Columbus, O., testified, in an article in the American Issue, that he and Dr. Doren had concluded that there were not less than 4,000 imbeciles in Ohio as the result of fact that drinking parents more than double their chances of having idiotic children in comparison with total abstainers.

Alcohol, Worry and Insanity.

"The overwhelming majority of cases of insanity depend absolutely upon material changes in the brain due to the circulation of some poison or other in the blood. Of these poisons the most important is alcohol—which, following an old teacher of mine, I have elsewhere called the toxin of the yeast plant."

"In the first place, worry is a potent cause of insanity because it leads to the use of drugs, and especially alcohol. * * * Alcohol stands out far beyond any other one factor as a cause of insanity, and worry is responsible for an enormous amount of drinking."—W. O. Salsbery, M. D., in Canadian Magazine.

Rainy Days—A Few Reflections and a Peep into the Future.

Did you ever sit indoors on a rainy afternoon, when the world seemed to be drowsy, and the rain pattered on the shingle roof, and made a restless tinkling sound as it ran down the eaves trough at the back of the house. The sort of a day made for reveries, for quiet day-dreams—a visit with dear old memories past, or hopes to come.

And it's a good thing to think about the rainy days which may come in life—the days of storm and stress—and to save some from the days of sunshine. Saving a certain amount each day is a good deal like getting up or going to bed at a certain time each day; it becomes a habit, and when a thing becomes a habit it is natural, and when a thing is natural it is easy to do.

Dollars are like trees, planted in the right soil deep and early enough they will grow into sturdy oaks to shelter you in after life when rainy days come.

For twenty years the old Rochester Trust and Safe Deposit Company has harbored and safe-guarded the savings of thousands of people in the old-fashioned banking way, discouraging speculation, encouraging thrift, until twenty thousand persons have placed over twenty millions of dollars in its care to keep for them until the rainy day.

Talks on Ghill and Peru.

Mrs. Mabel Loomis Todd, who has lately returned with her husband, Professor Todd, from his astronomical expedition to Ghill and Peru, is giving some delightful talks on the strange magnificent beauty of the South American desert, on its people, its ruined temples, its rich mines and its background of snow-covered peaks, and her own curious experiences there. They went over the highest railroad in the world, near Lima. It goes over a pass 15,000 feet above sea level, and in places the traveler looks down 5,000 feet on one hand and up 12,000 feet on the other. Professor and Mrs. Todd rode on the cow-catcher. At some points they could see five loops of the road below them; and they went through twenty or thirty tunnels. In Lima, Mrs. Todd was invited to address the Geographical society. She was the first woman to do so. Most of the prominent men of Lima were present, and she was introduced by the minister of foreign affairs. Her subject was "The Hairy Ainus of Northern Japan." Afterwards the society presented her with an income burner more than 300 years old, made of Ayacucho silver, in the form of a mountain deer.—Rochester Post Express.

Dedicated to Christy Fallon.

(WHO DIED OCTOBER 20, 1907.)
Yes, they saw death's shadows coming,
Circling round our fair young friend,
And if human aid could help him,
Death would never gain its end.
But a higher power than earthly
Calls God's loved ones far away,
Where there is no pain, nor suffering,
But an everlasting day.
Christy, the pet of all the household,
How they will miss him none can tell,
But they know his Saviour called him,
And he doth all things well.
Loving parents, brothers and sisters dear,
You will meet when your life's work is o'er
In a hour of joy and gladness,
To dwell with him for ever more.
