Why We Can Sit.
A Boston schoolboy gave the following definition of the spine: "The spine is a long bone reaching from the skull to the heels. It has a hinge in the middle, so that you can sit down; otherwise you would have to sit standing."

THE BIRDS AND BEES.
I think the bees, the blessed bees, Are better, wiser far than we. The very wild birds in the trees Are wiser, far, it seems to me. For love and light and sun and air Are theirs and not a bit of care.

What bird makes claim to all God's trees? What bee makes claim to all God's flowers? Behold their perfect harmonies. Their common board, the common hour! Say, why should man be less than these, The happy birds, the hoarding bees?
—Joaquin Miller.

Presence of Mind.
One of Mrs. Hamilton Fish's rules when her husband was secretary of state in Grant's cabinet was to return every call she received. Her husband was continually holding public receptions, and many women would come who had no desire that Mrs. Fish should call upon them.

One such woman attended a Fish reception, left her card and a little later was duly honored by a call from Mrs. Fish.
It was a beautiful, mild afternoon. The Fish equipage, all a-glitter in the wintry sunshine, dashed down the narrow street and halted before the woman's little house with a musical jingle of silver chains. The footman leaped from the box and opened the carriage door, and Mrs. Fish descended.

The woman of the house was kneeling on the sidewalk beside a bucket of hot water, with a scrubbing brush in one hand and a cake of soap in the other. She was scrubbing the front steps.

Bending graciously over her, Mrs. Fish asked politely, "Is Mrs. Henry Robinson at home?"
And Mrs. Henry Robinson replied, "No, mum, she ain't," and went on scrubbing.—Lippincott's.

Her Position.
An applicant for teacher in a country school was asked, "What is your position with regard to the whipping of children?"
"My usual position is on a chair, with the child held firmly across my knees, face downward," was the reply.

A Noisy Eater.
Ex-Senator William E. Chandler has an admirer in New Hampshire who has ideas on how the government should be conducted and writes Mr. Chandler about them at great length.
After Chandler was defeated for the senate and before he was appointed president of the Spanish claims commission the friend wrote, condoling with the senator.

He said it was a shame that the nation and New Hampshire should be deprived of the services of so able a man as Mr. Chandler and closed with this prophecy: "Nevertheless, I do not think republics are ungrateful. I am confident that your great merits will again be recognized and that at no late date we shall hear of you feeding again at the public crib."

All the Same to Him.
One of a party of gentlemen left his corner seat in an already crowded railway car to go in search of something to eat, leaving a rug to reserve his place. On returning he found that, in spite of the rug and the protests of his fellow passengers, the seat had been occupied by a woman clad in handsome clothes. With flashing eyes she turned upon him:

"Do you know, sir, that I am one of the directors' wives?"
"Madam," he replied, "were you the director's only wife I should still protest."—Ladies' Home Journal.

What She Was Like.
"Do tell me what Mrs. Tewler is like," she asked of her husband.
"Well, she's a woman of sixty who looks fifty, thinks she is forty, dresses like thirty and acts like twenty."

A Nice Distinction.
"I fear," said a country curate to his flock, "when I explained to you in my last charity sermon that philanthropy was the love of our species you must have understood me to say 'species,' which may account for the smallness of the collection. You will prove, I hope, by your present contribution that you are no longer laboring under the same mistake."

Unique Post Holes.
The foreman and his crew of bridge-men were striving hard to make an impression on the select board provided by Mrs. Rooney at her Arkansas eating establishment.

"The old man sure made a funny deal down at Piney yesterday," observed the foreman, with a wink at the man to his right.
"What'd he do?" asked the new man at the other end of the table.
"Well, a year or so ago there used to be a water tank there, but they took down the tub and brought it up here to Cabin Creek. The well went dry and they covered it over. It was four or five feet around, ninety feet deep and plumb in the right of way. Diddy know what to do with it until along comes an old lollypop yesterday and gives the old man $5 for it."
"Five dollars for what?" asked the new man.
"Well," continued the foreman, ignoring the interruption, "that old lolly-pop borrowed two jacks from the trackmen and jacked her up out of there and carried her home on wheels."

"What'd he do with it?" persisted the new man.
"Say, that old lollypop must've been a Yankee. Nobody else could have figured it out. The ground on his place is hard, and he needed some more fence, so he calculated 'twould be easier and cheaper to saw that old well up into postholes than 'twould be to dig 'em."
"Thereafter the new man bit more on his food and less on the conversation.—Everybody's."

Seven Hens Cannot Lay One Egg.
Daniel Webster when he was secretary of state was one day reading at a cabinet meeting a draft of a message he had written for the president to transmit to congress. He was constantly interrupted by one of the members with suggestions until, losing patience, he turned to him and said:
"Sir, you might as well expect seven hens to lay one egg as seven men to construct one message."

He Tipped Them All.
A New Yorker was shown to a room in a hotel in Brussels, where he found twenty candles stuck in a chandelier. As it was dark, the attendant lighted them all, but the guest put them out immediately.
In his bill next day, however, he found them charged: "Twenty candles, 10 francs."

He went back to the room and took them all out, wrapped them in a bit of paper and slipped them into his overcoat pocket.
When he was about to leave the house he found the servants drawn up in two lines in the hall in the European style—all smiling and ready for the expected tip. Then he drew out his package and distributed the candles one to each as he passed out.
"Allow me, monsieur," said he, with a bow; "permit me, madam. They are very superior candles, I assure you. I paid 10 cents apiece for them."
—Ladies' Home Journal.

Outwitting Her Lawyer.
"Still, there are occasions when a lawyer isn't the chief beneficiary of a suit," said Mrs. Stonewall Jackson. "I know of one instance. A friend of mine in Virginia sued a railroad company for damages and secured a verdict for $50,000, which was paid, and the whole amount is now in bank subject to her order. Her counsel didn't get a penny of it."
"How was that?"
"She found the only way of outwitting him—she married the lawyer."

Bible Authority For It.
Mr. Rundlett, at one time a merchant in the town of Newcastle, Me., instructed his clerks to strictly follow the precepts of the Bible in all of their dealings.

One day a lady came in to buy a piece of dress goods, and one of the clerks spent a great deal of time showing her various cloths, which she said weren't good enough. The clerk said he had a better piece in the rear of the store. He showed her this piece, which she had already seen, but told her it was much finer and worth 50 cents a yard more. She said that she could readily see that it was better and made her purchase.
Mr. Rundlett, who had seen the transaction, censured the clerk, who replied that he could refer to the Bible to justify his action.
"Why how is that?"
"Well, she was a stranger, and I took her in."

The Same Effect.
There had been a brilliant company at the home of a society leader in Des Moines, Ia., a woman whose husband was known better for his wealth than for his mental attainments.
"Well, Francis," she said after the last visitor was gone, "it was a complete success, wasn't it?"
"Sure!" observed Francis.
"Did you notice Professor Billington?"
"The man with the bandage around his neck?"
"Yes. What an astonishing vocabulary he has!"
"From the way he held his head I thought it was a carbuncle."—Lippincott's.

Long Name, Short Lived.
"In Boston there used to be a stammering college kept by Professor Graves," says Governor Guild. "Next door to this college was a flower store. Professor Graves' method was to ask each pupil what phrase he would like to learn to say perfectly. Then the professor would drill the pupil on that one phrase or sentence, and when the stammerer repeated it smoothly a cure was pronounced. One day a friend of mine, who was afflicted with the stammering habit, decided to patronize the professor. Before he went into the studio, however, he stopped to look in the flower store at some chrysanthemums.
"Now, my dear fellow," said Professor Graves, "is there anything particular that you would like to learn to say perfectly?"
"W-w-w-well, y-yes th-ther-ere is, I sh-should like t-to be able t-to say cr-crys-crys-cr-crysanth-th-the-m-m-m-mum before the darn th-th-thing f-fades!"

Unkind.
Miss Folla La Follette, daughter of Senator La Follette of Wisconsin, was passing a collection plate one day when she was waved away by a man distinguished for his wealth and parsimony.
"Nothing," he said gruffly; "I have nothing."
"Take something, then; this collection is for the poor, you know."

RUM DID IT.

March 29, '08—(Prov. 23:29-35.)

The book of Proverbs is full of conundrums. Solomon was a professional in thinking up "nuts for people to crack." The Queen of Sheba came across the known world to prove him with riddles and was nonplused at the sharpness of his wits. She came, full of pride at her own ability in that direction; she went home, chagrined and defeated. As an originator of proverbs, quotable sayings, epigrams, and crisp utterances, the King of Israel easily stands at the head of the ages.

But the "conundrum" of this lesson is "easy." The smallest child in the primary class can answer it and not half try. "Who hath woe? Who hath sorrow? Who hath contentions? Who hath babbling? Who hath redness of eyes?" Any one who has lived in a license town, or in a town where prohibition is not enforced, can reply without looking in the book for the answer. Solomon seems to imply that the trouble comes largely from "mixing drinks," for he speaks of those who "go to seek mixed wine." In other words, we suppose he had observed that all wine would get people drunk, but mixed wine would do it more expeditiously. If the alcohol in one kind of wine is the devil, that in several kinds is a whole legion of imps encamped upon the territory of the soul. "Who hath woe?" The margin reads "Who hath oh?" Or in plain Anglo-Saxon, "Who hath ouch?" The cry of one who is hurt. Ah, Solomon, that is easy!

The cry of the hurt! No one will dispute the statement that the cry of the hurt is the cry of the drunkard. Sober people get hurt, of course. Those who never took a drink of liquor in their lives suffer in this world of trouble, but if all the accidents and casualties of every day were traced back to their source, in nine cases out of ten the investigator would find a whiskey bottle somewhere in the wreckage. Notwithstanding the well-known fact that a drunk man will tumble all over things and receive little injury, on account of his relaxed muscles and no attempt to save himself, it is yet true that of the vast majority of accidental deaths throughout the country it may truthfully be said, rum did it.

Untold lakes of tears have been shed, uncounted groans have been uttered, innumerable pangs have been felt, unnumbered bones have been fractured, multitudes of bodies have been crushed, or decapitated, or incinerated, or drowned, or hung from great heights because of rum. Multitudes of human beings are in eternity to-day because a drunken man had a trembling hand on the lever of a locomotive or looked with bleared eyes at a chart, or was impelled to action by the fancies of a muddled brain. Sober men make mistakes, commit blunders, perpetrate outrages, perform acts which result disastrously; we grant all that without argument. But if the troubles resulting from the sober could be put on one side of a sheet, and the disasters attributable to rum could be put on the other, the world would stand aghast at the preponderance of evil on the rum side.

Read the daily story in the newspapers—the story of murder, of suicide, of assault and battery, of incendiarism, of wife-beating, of highway robbery, of railway collisions, of ships pounding on the rocks, of the exposure of crime in high-life and low-life, and ask yourself the question if you can, "Who hath woe?" It is not a question now as to whether this groan that rends the heavens can be stopped, it is not a question as to ways and means of drying up the lava tide of alcoholism that is sweeping over every green thing. Whether intemperance can be wholly blotted out or not, is not the question now. We are simply calling attention to a great, overwhelming, stunning, unmistakable fact. So true is it that rum is the curse of curses, the demon of demons, the blight of blights, the anarchist of anarchists, the deadly foe of everything that is pure in the soul, peaceful in the family, prosperous in the state that nothing can be named in connection with it that deserves consideration.

It is no argument to say that some men use it all their lives and are never harmed by it. Some men work in powder factories all their lives and never get blown up. Some men deal in rattlesnakes, hunt them, trade in them, and never feel their fangs; some men put their heads in lions' mouths as a profession, and never get decapitated, but that does not make the business any the less risky. It is only here and there a man can be found that is able to hold this demon at bay. Possibly he is allowed to do it, in order to tempt a multitude of fools to try the same experiment and go down to endless ruin. The text rings like a tocsin of alarm in its awful reiteration. Who hath woe! woe! woe!

COAT OF MOIRE AND BRAID.

A Dressy Garment Which is in Good Taste all the Year.
Fashion's disciples remain true to the little coat whose lines vary from the semi-Empire to hip length and we are told that with the approach of spring this dressy little garment will take up its tremendous vogue where it was left off in the late autumn. A famous French design is responsible for the model pictured here; it is carried out in rich black moire silk and stitched handsomely with bands of black braid with the merest suggestion of white along either edge.
The neck is finished in collarless fashion, but revers of embroidered taffetas and cloth lend an elegant touch to the front of the jacket. The sides are left unstitched over the hips, for the sake of novelty most likely, and sometimes, the little chasm is bridged with loops of passamenterie braid and appropriate pendants.

French dressmakers have no set rules for finishing the lower edges of coats of any kind. Pointed effects seem to be liked better than the cut-away lines for short jackets and the latest models are so contrived that the points are sufficiently long to emphasize the smart curves of the underarm seams.

Salary to Club Treasurers.
There is a strong movement on foot just now to pay a salary to treasurers of women's clubs. At two, at least, of the largest of women's clubs and organizations in New York City this subject is to come up for careful and definite consideration at the first fall meeting next month.

At one of the annual elections last year the treasurer's office was offered to ten women before a candidate was finally found who would accept the position. The treasurer's work entailed by office in one of the large New York clubs is terrific. It takes practically all of a woman's time, and in addition requires absolute accuracy and care, and some business training.

The move to give a salary to the treasurer is a wise one, born of necessity, it is true, but a wise and sound one, nevertheless.

Household Suggestions.
To clean: frying-pan, rub with a hard crust of bread and wash with hot water and washing soda. Never scrub it or the next food fried in it will be likely to stick.

To clean enamelled or granite utensils whose contents have been allowed to burn, fill with cold water, add a piece of washing soda the size of an egg, and heat to boiling point. Wash at once, as the burned parts will then be more easily cleansed.

Tinware should be washed in soapy water, rinsed, then dried with a towel. Drying tinware on the stove darkens and sometimes melts it. If desired bright first wash and then clean with either whiting or some mineral soap; not sand, as this will cut through the soft metal and soon wear it out.

To clean woodenware, wash in hot, soapy water and dry thoroughly. Never dry near the fire, as excessive heat will crack the wood. Tables, bread and pastry boards, may be scrubbed the way of the grain with fine sand, being careful to thoroughly rinse it all away afterwards.

The Tea Kettle.—Never use water which has been standing over night in the tea kettle. In the morning fill with fresh water, boil and use at once.

Rusted iron ware or sinks may be cleaned by smearing thickly with fat or grease, and then covered with powdered quicklime and left for several hours. Wash off with hot water and washing soda, using a cloth tied to the sink broom for the purpose, so as to avoid touching it with the hands.

"Shadow" of a Queen.
Queen Alexandria of England has been served by the same lady of the bedchamber for forty-four years. She is the Hon. Charlotte Knollys, and in the royal household she is known as "The Shadow," because of her unflinching faithfulness to the Queen.

On one occasion when there was a fire at Sandringham she saved the Queen's life by unceremoniously dragging her from her bed. It was shortly after this incident that she parted from the man to whom she had been engaged to be married for several years. She said that the choice was between her lover and the Queen and as she loved the Queen the more she was sure she did not care enough for her lover to make him a good wife. She draws a salary of $3,500 from the Government and $1,500 from the Queen's privy purse.

The Girl In The Case

It was common talk in the camp that Herriott's life had been spoiled by a woman, but in that he was an exception from most of his mates, and save for Snowy Pete, who was supposed to have a family somewhere in the East, and Bradley his mate a green boy who wasn't old enough to have any past worth speaking of, the same reason might have been given with more or less truth for every one present at Daylight Camp.

One day the stage, creaking wearily crawled in from the plain and drew up before the ragged shanty, which was the store. Then Herriott looked up and saw the flutter of a white dress, and heard the accents of a pretty young voice: "Can you tell me where my father lives?"

He gave a start as he met her eyes. She bit her lips and blushed. "If you will tell me his name," he stammered. She regained composure as she saw half a dozen suntanned miners looking at her curiously. "Oh, of course, of course. How stupid of me! It is Mr. Peter Desmond."

Herriott's brain was blank a moment, and then his thoughts flashed to "Can you tell me where Snowy Pete, my father lives?" He had never heard his family name before.

"If you will come with me I will show you the way," he said, "but I'm afraid he's not expecting you." "No," she replied with a smile, "you see I wanted to give him a surprise."

The man thought of the rough tumble-down shanty that was Snowy Pete's home, and reflected that a little of the surprise might fall to her part. They walked in silence down the tent lined track and then when they reached their destination Herriott stopped and said hesitatingly: "I am sorry that I got in your path again, but you must admit that it is hardly my fault. After all, I won't be staying much longer here, and we can pretend we never met before."

"I guess that would be best," she replied. Then they went their different ways, and Herriott was absolutely silent that night when he met at the shanty with the rest of his chums to play poker, as was their custom. Only once when Walter Davis made a remark, did he show some interest.

"I know what brought her here," the miner said. "She came to marry Bradley." "What?" Herriott blurted out. Walter chuckled. "Don't get rattled, Herriott; it isn't matter much to any of us, but I happened to hear Snowy Pete say something about it once, that's all."

Things went on as usual until one night Herriott found an excited crowd in the shanty when he left his day's work. "Did you hear the news?" Walter Davis shouted as he opened the door. "Mike Healey and his gang have pitched their tents about a mile from here, and I guess they are up to nothing good; there are about twenty of them and they say they are set on jumping our claims."

Next morning Herriott felt trouble coming and his mind flew to Tillie. The thought of her was uppermost in his mind. When he met her riding down the track near the camp, she blushed as he approached her. "Miss Desmond," he said, speaking very slowly and very earnestly, "this is not the place for you. There is bound to be some ugly fights here very soon and—well, you would be better off in the city."

"Do you think that I'm afraid?" she said. "I guess not," he answered quickly; "still Healey's boys are a nasty lot." "Anyway," she said slowly, "I'm only staying a few weeks longer here than I—I mean we are going away. You see, I'm going to—marry Mr. Bradley."

Herriott turned on his heel and his face was deadly white. He did not know that her lips quivered as she spoke these words. "It was two days later that Snowy Pete struck it rich. Looking across the plain to where Mike Healey and his gang were camping, Pete said abruptly to his mate: "Look here, Bradley, we have fought hard enough for this streak of luck, and we're not going to let it be taken from us. Those fellows over there are only waiting for a chance to jump our claim."

"But what are you going to do?" asked Bradley weakly. "I'm going to ride around to some of the other camps and bring in every able-bodied man that I can get, to clear them out. You will have to sit right here till I come back."

Next morning before dawn he left. The boy felt horribly alone when he had gone. All morning he worked with his heart in his mouth, while the air was heavy with heat, and noon found him strolling slowly down to Herriott's tent. His lips were twitching. "They have given me notice to quit," he said.

"Really," said Herriott dryly. "And what do you mean to do?" "I suppose I'll have to go. I'm not going to risk my life for all the gold in the camp."

Herriott's lips curled. "I see, you are going to run away." "I'm only doing what any one else would do."

"Look here, Bradley, if you are going to shirk the trouble that is coming, you'd better stay here and look after my claim. I'll fix up the rest." Ten minutes later he was working a pick and shovel in Snowy Pete's shaft, and for a whole hour nobody disturbed him; then he heard the tramping of heavy boots and a voice: "Come on, get out of that." He went on working as if he had not heard a word.

"No bluff now," Mike Healey shouted. "We won't stand any of that nonsense. Come on out." "I'm very comfortable in here," Herriott replied very slowly.

A shower of loose granite descended on his head. Then he made a dash for the ladder, but at that moment a large rock hit him full in the chest and he fell back with a low groan. "That settled him," said Mike Healey with a chuckle. "Come on boys, haul him out; we will teach him to monkey with us when he comes 'round again.'"

They dragged him to the top. Herriott's eyes opened and he made a weak effort "You horrid cowards, to resist, but step back or I'll fire," they quickly tied a rope around his wrist, rendering him helpless. At that moment a voice rang out, "You horrid cowards, step back, or I'll fire."

They looked up to see a slim girl racing them, her eyes flashing and a revolver in her little white hand. Involuntarily they fell back—there was a moment's silence and the score of men looked at one another awkwardly.

"Now, then, Miss," said Mike Healey, "we ain't got no quarrel with you and we would thank you to clear out." The girl's dimpled chin was tilted up resolutely. "Make one step forward and I'll shoot," she said.

Mike Healey smiled, but it wasn't the smile of a man who felt good; there was something in the brown eyes that didn't mean trifling, and the little finger nestled too close to the trigger to be comfortable. He was in a fix.

"I'll give you one more minute to go, she said firmly. "After that— But she didn't finish her sentence—for across the plain a dozen figures came galloping and even the naked eye could see that they were troopers. Blank dismay spread itself over the faces of the men, and before the minute rang out they had turned about and were racing down the track toward their camp.

There was a little flutter as the girl lunged herself down by Herriott's side. Her face was flushed, as she bent over him, and her eyes looked into his. At that moment whatever had stood between them was brushed away, laying their love bare as day. Bradley left the camp next day, never to return.

Napoleon's Secret. Napoleon understood human nature. He recognized the great truth "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

A French soldier carried a despatch to Napoleon. Just as he delivered it into the hands of the emperor his spent horse dropped dead. Napoleon wrote an answer to the despatch, then, dismounting from his own horse, handed the bridle to the soldier.

"Take his horse and ride back comrades," he said. "Nay, sire," stammered the soldier, gazing at the blooded horse and its trappings. "It is too magnificent and grand for me, a common soldier."

"Take it," commanded Napoleon. "There is nothing too grand and magnificent for a soldier of France!" The soldier mounted and rode away on his perilous business, ready and willing, and Napoleon's words repeated through the ranks and columns of the army, gave to his tired troops fresh inspiration and energy.

"Nothing too grand and magnificent for a soldier of France!" they said, and the thought that they were worthy of the best inspired them to the mighty deeds which followed.

THE POST CARD CRAZE.

Rare Indeed is the Home Today that Has Not Some Collection.

The legitimate post cards are useful. They permit thousands to become acquainted with the fine works of art that they would never see at all were it not for the little messenger that comes through the mail. They can be placed in frames and make a room artistic and pleasant; an album of them is the aftermath of a pleasant journey; a delicate frieze may be made around a room with them, the beautifully tinted ones or scenic panorama and those that blend or harmonize in color serving as an excellent border.

And think what a revenue is accruing to the government of the countries where the post card craze has taken possession of the people. On every pound of cards mailed Uncle Sam pockets $1.20; that is nearly $15 a minute, $900 an hour, $21,000 a day, $151,200 a week, and nearly $8,000,000 a year. Lucky Uncle Sam! Merchandise of the same weight pays only 16 cents a pound, books 8 cents, newspapers and magazines 1 cent. In the summer time when the craze is at its height, some of the smaller post offices are exhausted of their supply of one-cent stamps and the mail bags are filled to the bursting point. Establishments are now being run whose sole business it is to handle picture post cards; delightful little out-of-the-way places that were never heard of before are each season being introduced to the public through the means of the post card; people are attracted thither, and the landlords of the place and the inhabitants in general are benefited. Think what a web of scene and color is woven across the country each summer season as the government's great loom of mail routes is fed this enormous number of cards that go direct, diagonally and zigzag across the country ceaselessly, one after the other. Rare indeed is the home today that has not some collection, be it ever so small, of these cards on the wall or on the table. The craze will not abate; rather it will increase and more and more cards will be issued, beautiful, comic and bizarre in design, to attract the host of purchasers.—The Pathfinder.

Womer Who Did Men's Work. In connection with the passage of the Women's Qualification act in England it is interesting to read in the ancient records of London and other cities of the active part taken in public and other business life by women in old England. An old manuscript in the Guildhall Library, its edges charred in the Great Fire, contains many interesting entries, of which the following is a typical example: "George, Mountford, son of John Mountford of Lapworth, co. Warwick, husbandman, apprenticed to Raclaf Medcalf, Armorer, Christmas, 36 Hen. VIII." In another Guildhall record, an entry for 1595 attests that "the office of Plumber of London Bridge was granted to the widow Foster."

Flowers for the Sick. Growing plants are undesirable, best, while the old idea that they harmed the sick one by remaining in the room over night is only a superstition, the invalid may easily harm them, especially if they are much handled.

Avoid violent color contrasts. The nervous system is always slightly deranged and the perceptions unduly sharpened in a serious illness and the contrast of vivid reds and pinks and yellows may be really harmful, and will surely be disagreeable to the patient. Choose, instead, delicate pinks, soft oranges or light blues.

Do not, above all, send white roses unaccompanied by any other flower, nor an abundance of unrelieved white flowers of any kind. You might just as well order a floral pillow marked "At Rest" for the effect it will have upon the recipient at your mistaken kindness.

Saved Her Son's Life.

The happiest mother in the little town of Ava, Mo., is Mrs. S. Ruppee. I kept this treatment up for a few weeks when he was perfectly well. He has worked steadily since at carpenter work Dr. King's New Discovery saved his life." Guaranteed best cough and cold remedy by J. S. Banker, Genoa, and F. T. Atwater, King Ferry, druggists 50c, and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

ONE WOMAN BARONET.

Baroness Mary Bolles of Osberton, Nottinghamshire, Was So Honored.

The rank of baronet was given first by King James I. as a means of raising money. The recipients of the dignity were to be gentlemen of good birth possessing not less than $1,000 a year; and in times of war—like the old knights banneret—were to occupy posts of honor near the royal standard.

The money payment has wholly ceased; but when a baronet is created the ancient form of warrant is still retained, and a "tally" is struck at the exchequer and handed to the new baronet by way of receipt. Baronets have no coronet or robes; but in the English and Irish divisions they possess as a distinct badge the "Bloody Hand of Ulster," which invariably appears on their coat of arms.

The baronets of Nova Scotia, who date before the union of England and Scotland, show the arms of Nova Scotia upon their shields. The baronets of Scotland have a distinctive badge consisting of an enameled decoration, "worn from the neck by orange-tawny 'ibbon," showing St. Andrews cross upon a small shield, surmounted by a crown, and surrounded by the enameled motto, "Fax mentis honestae gloria" ("Glory, the Beacon Light of the Noble mind").

With this King Charles conferred a crest—a branch of laurel held by a naked hand, and a thistle held by an armed one—with the added motto, "Lucit haec, altera vincit" ("One defends, the other conquers"). All later baronets are of the United Kingdom or of "Great Britain," and possess no such pretty toys.

In fact, many people who pride themselves on their familiarity with baronets, badges, and beyond a misty notion of the meaning of the Ulster Hand, are unaware of their history and significance.

There is one instance of the honor being granted to a woman. Dame Mary Bolles of Osberton, Nottinghamshire, created a baronet in 1635, for "maintaining thirty foot soldiers at 8d. a day for three years in his majesty's service." No slight help in those troublous times.

"Dame," the old English word for lady, is the almost obsolete style to be used by a woman's wife. Nowadays she is styled "lady" without the use of her Christian name. Should she prefer the old word "dame," that is always followed by the Christian name, and sounds deliciously quaint and distinctive.—Modern Society.

WALL CLEANER. A similar character which cannot be reached without considerable labor, is shown here, recently patented by a Massachusetts man. The device is formed of two sections of bent spring wire.

Girl Who Connives. The girl who connives not buys her clothes is at present aglow with pride over some extremely pretty brown satin slippers. "Don't they look expensive—don't they?" she crows gleefully. "Wouldn't you think they meant simply dollars and dollars?" I tell you the longer I live the more I'm amazed at the way I manage—those slippers cost me exactly 35 cents! Now that's the way I like to have you look—dabbling—then I feel that I'm appreciated. Yes, my dear, 35 cents; I was walking along Sixth avenue and I saw a pile of trash in the window of a custom and sample shoe place and on the top of the pile was a pair of white satin slippers marked 35 cents. They were beautiful shape but soiled. Did I pause and peep on or act in any other stupid manner? I made one flying leap inside that shop and tried on those slippers. Of course I knew they'd fit me, 'cause I've a special Providence that looks after such things, and before the salesman could tell me there was a mistake in the price I bought them and started home. I had to walk, having spent all I had with me, but that just shows the economy of living down town, and within half an hour after I got home, those slippers were the beautiful brown you see there, now. Water, colors, of course, I suppose you'd guessed that; and with my brown silk stockings that Aunt Louise brought me from Sorrento why I can feel tingles of pride in every toe. I don't see how my poor girl gets along without a box of water colors. I wouldn't be anything without mine; they'll do everything except mend a hole or clean my furs, and those things of course, connive in other ways. Don't I make you just gasp?"

THE ARMY AS A SCHOOL.

Advocates of disarmament will do well to consider how without the standing armies of Europe the young men of the farms and factories could be taught the things which army life now teaches and which in countries like Great Britain and the United States many young men never learn.

No one can visit Germany or Austria without being struck by the fine bearing of the younger men; no German or Austrian visits the United States without noting the slouchy carriage of many young Americans. Great benefit results upon the physical side from army training. The soldier learns something of sanitation and the value of pure air. He learns to take care of his eyes and his teeth. The average German conscript is larger and stronger than in 1848.

New York is only beginning, many American communities have not begun, to give children in the schools such inspection and instruction as to their eyes and teeth as the German soldier gets at a later stage. Only in exceedingly small part does the city furnish such physical drill and such instruction in sanitation and in decent behavior as Pomeranian Hans or Prussian Karl gets while with the colors. The non-military nations must supply this practical part of education if they are not to be left behind in the race for peaceful efficiency; and the time of schooling is the period within which such training may most easily be imparted.—New York World.

A "NEW ENGLISHMAN."

In the columns of the London Truth is a lament over the "new Englishman," who is described as a product of the last thirty years and as being "partly formed on the American plan." He is a sad person, this remodelled British cousin. We read of him that—

His mind, time and activities "are absorbed in the accumulation of money; his standard of value is money; He prefers to gamble for money to obtaining it by mere manufacturing or ordinary trading; he aims at hitherto unthought-of amounts; he is increasingly inclined to be unscrupulous, and he tolerates almost any circumstance or conduct that has money to support it."

In short this "new Englishman" has all the vices which in America we attribute to our billionaire apparatus. He is a greater plague than the Yankee "plunger" because, while America is a new country with the faults of a new system, England is an old country with the faults of an old system—the obvious connection being that England should not care to add fresh failings to those it has inherited.

Coming to the question of responsibility for the "new Englishman," we are not left in doubt. The burden is upon the American women with a long purse who has married a title.

HOW TO LIVE TO A HUNDRED.

There may be some comfort for all of us in Dr. Wiley's confident assurance that no man living has any business to die until he has celebrated his hundredth birthday, only we are daily confronted with the uncomfortable fact that a considerable number have ceased to live when the time comes for celebration. In consideration of this single disturbing circumstance we are justified in asking how longevity is to be compassed since this seems to be the real problem involved in the matter of living to an old age. For his own part, the Chief Chemist is a member of the Hundred Year Old Club, where "any one who dies before he is a century old will be considered disgraced." We were apt to be a little sceptical about the value of such a rule as this, till we had been assured on the best authority that the threat was sure to prove wonderfully effective, no member once disgraced having even been known to survive.

CAN BE BOUGHT AT HOME.

Why it is the fashion to send $50 to Paris to get a coat of arms is one of the curious puzzles of social conventions. Every first-class stationer's shop at home has a full stock to select from, and the home-grown device is just as genuine as the Paris-made article. But as it costs only a few dollars it can never be fashionable.

TRIALS AND TRUTH.

A club, said to be composed of "women lawyers," lately held a meeting. There are a few women lawyers. A very few of that very few practice in courts. Most of the very few women who are real-for-true lawyers are clerically employed in firms or in title companies, and occasionally lecture. They also instruct clubs of women who seek to improve their minds, by matching views and dresses on select occasions.

Be this as it may, General Horatio C. King is currently reported lately to have addressed "a club of women lawyers." The name of the club is fittingly the Portia Club, Portia having been a woman who lived in Belmont not far from Venice, and who came down to Venice in men's clothes and lawyers' robes, to upset Shylock in a very picturesque litigation.

The General, with a slanting reference to a celebrated trial involving lawyers, was moved to say:

You may think it strange to hear me say that lawyers should be honest, when, as I was told, there are now sixty-nine lawyers in Sing Sing, a good many more on the way, and still others who ought to be there. A lawyer who will defend a civil action which he knows to be wrong, or try to prove a man innocent when he knows him to be guilty, will soon find his own level, and that will be a very low level, too.

SMOKELESS INDUSTRY.

That cities in which bituminous coal is used are getting rid of the smoke nuisance, and that black smoke issuing from a modern manufacturing or power plant is a badge of bad engineering and management, is due to the economic saving effected in smoke abatement. Mr. A. S. Atkinson declares in Moody's Magazine that "the modern mechanical stoker has saved millions of dollars' worth of coal."

The prohibitive law against sending out dense columns of smoke above the cities of New York, Cincinnati, Baltimore, Washington, St. Louis, and Pittsburg, and their enforcement with the aid of civic bodies like the Manhattan Anti-Smoke League, have enabled engineers to discover a way to burn coal in the average furnace which gives at least 15 per cent. greater efficiency. In cities like Pittsburg and Cleveland, where 99 per cent. of the coal burned is bituminous, nearly all the great factories have installed, or are having installed, the modern stokers. These, provided with intelligent firemen, who, by scientific firing, save more than their wages in a month, will soon make grotesque the depictions of prosperous industrial towns belching forth from high chimneys black clouds of sulphurous smoke.

DANCING WAY TO MARRIAGE.

Very farsighted was Jeremiah when he said, "the virgins shall rejoice in the dance." Thereby they prove that they are not foolish virgins, according to the hymenal statistics secured by the "International Academy of Choreographic Composers and Teachers." Since everybody dances in some manner, at some period between infancy and age, the International academy claims jurisdiction over large sociological questions, and has just discovered that people marry because they dance—that the two-step is a cause and a symbol of two-stepping toward the marriage altar.

Believing that there is affinity as well as alliteration of waltzes and weddings, and that the polka is the first aid to the match-making mother systematic academic investigations were begun. The results cabled to the "Times" were that 3,996 professors of dancing, members of the academy, discreetly questioned their 1,097,503 pupils, married or about to marry, as to how they fell in love with their spouses or spouses-to-be, in five countries over 80 per cent. of the marriages owe their inception to the dance.—New York Times.

When the President told the Michigan farmers that their best crop was children, he forgot that machinery inventions long since did away with the connection between the cradle and the wheat harvest.—Boston Post.

Mr. John L. Sullivan, judging from the way he gets along with magnates of all sorts and descriptions, lay and clerical, shows that he made a mistake. He ought to have gone into the diplomatic service instead of the ring.

A religious denomination opposes the wearing of neckties by its male members. This will be a disappointment to the married women who love to go shopping.

The question suggests itself, Is a fashionable wedding, a fashionable funeral or a fashionable murder trial the most popular?

ROAD SMOOTHERS.

"Smoothing the road to matrimony" is the avowed object of a newly organized society in Brooklyn, N. Y. Such a metaphorical paving contract is highly commendable in motive, but the contractors should remember the ultimate destiny of many other good intentions, says the New York Mail. These are set forth by one of the members as follows: "Race and religion should not be a bar to young persons who truly love each other. When God made Adam and Eve, he made them without orthodoxy, and true love knows no barrier of creed.

"It is the object of our society to help the young folks of opposite faiths especially Christians and Jews, when they are worthy, to overcome the objections of parents and have them married in the usual way." The matrimonial road smoothed by such friends is apt to prove a rocky one when the time comes to arrange for the education and religious training of the children.

The name of the new society is the "Wander Lust"—a queer title for an organization whose aim is to settle folk in happiness. Of old the "travel hunger" has kept many a man journeying alone, and spoiled home making. We fear that the significance of the name has not been lost.

SECLUSION ON SHIPBOARD.

There is cause for reflection, philosophic and other, in the fact that enough people are now crossing the ocean who want to preserve the strictest seclusion from their fellow-passengers to make it worth the while of the steamship companies to provide cabins of special construction and of such privacy that not even the taking of meals to the would-be hermits can be observed by the curious.

The ordinary transatlantic traveler does not at all object to association with his chance companions. Indeed, that association is a rather important part of the joys of the passage—if gastric ills do not preclude the possibility of any sort of pleasure—and the privilege of seeing fully compensates him for the necessity to be seen.

But there are others—and they are growing more and more numerous, it seems—who are irked by the glances of their fellow-passengers—who desire neither to see nor be seen. They take their meals in their cabins and walk the decks only after dark if at all. They are, apparently, the people of something like international reputation—or notoriety. The great and—well, not notably virtuous, would elude the reprehensive stare, while the merely too-rich mime the fastidiousness of noble birth or royalty.

GOING ABROAD TO DIE.

Americans are not "quitters," and they are good losers. Yet so many of them have taken their own lives in Europe recently that they may forfeit their reputation as holding a good and cheerful grip upon existence.

It is not fair to judge them by their current record of self-slaughter abroad, any more than it is fair to hold Sundays responsible for the inordinate number of suicides that take place then. To Europe flit the butterflies in quest of the gay life, and the end of that life is bitterness. Thither also journey over-worked business men whose outlook has become abnormal, and men in disgrace and trouble flying from their vicinages but finding no escape from themselves. There is another chapter of tragedies to be credited to the ambitious men and women who have sought fame in art pursuits abroad, and found poverty and disillusionment.

The cities of the old world are not only historical and architectural museums and capitals of civilization, but cities of refuge for the dwellers in the new.

Manager Hibbard of the telephone company complains that women talk too much over the telephone. Other men have been known to make even more sweeping statements in regard to women's conversational powers.—Chicago News.

A government statistician has found that the average chauffeur receives a larger salary than the average college professor. But the latter is rarely arrested for exceeding the speed limit.

The play is clean, wholesome and entertaining, the cast is a strong one, the rehearsals have shown much interest and talent, the stage scenery has been re-arranged and that used in the first act has been newly arranged to suit this particular scene, the costumes are appropriate, and now all that remains to make the entertainment a financial success is the patronage of the people. POULTRY

MAKE MORE ROOM.

If You See That Your Fowls Will Be Crowded.

A writer in some poultry publication says, "If you are beginning to see that you have more fowls than you are going to have room for, sell some of the birds at once," but the writer would advise if you have not room enough and the birds are pulling that you would like to keep for layers take an inventory of your lumber pile and see if you cannot manage to make a new chicken house.

In the climate of Colorado a house can be made of one thickness of boards and be warm enough, if it be lined with paper and if the cracks are battened.

It is getting to be quite the thing, to have the scratching-shed part of the house with an open front, so arranged with wire that the birds can get the air all day, even in zero weather, without getting out into the storm, letting the house itself, where the chickens roost, be good and tight, if preferred though many are using the open fronts entirely.

The writer has seen houses of this sort where the hens were not let out for three months, and they layed all winter, and without the check that comes where the hens are allowed to go outside and get caught by storms that come up during the day. It is a good plan to have about two feet of boards at the bottom of the wire to the scratching-shed.—Ranch and Range.

To Cure Gapes in Chickens.

Gapes in young chickens can be cured by burning tobacco in a suitable dish in the bottom of a barrel. Across the top of the barrel is placed a long basket containing the chickens. If they are allowed to remain until they are almost overcome, and the operation repeated three or four times, the results will be found to be entirely satisfactory.

Turkey Feeding.

Lots of people kill their turkeys with kindness and then wonder why they died. Turkeys will not stand too heavy feeding.

A little turkey should be fed only three times a day and then not very much. Egg chopped with onion makes a grand turkey feed; or curd chopped with dandelion.

Some people lose their turkeys when they are half grown because they feed too much. The turkeys come off the range with full craws and then more feed is given and they die from indigestion. If you want to feed them a little at night to get them to come home, throw out a little chopped onion. It is safer than grain.—Ranch and Range.

The Hopper System.

The hopper system of feeding dry cracked grains is a great saving of labor and chicks will thrive well if they are allowed free range. The food is constantly within reach and the birds are not inclined to overeat when too much is likely to be fed as in the case of feeding by hand at one time. All that needs to be done is to keep the hoppers filled and the fowls will do the rest. Provide one hopper of good sharp grit. If the fowls are not on free range the advantages of the hopper system are open to doubt.

Failure Among Poultry Raisers.

Failures are often the result of trying to build up a business with inferior stock—a sort of false economy, says Commercial Poultry. Better economize on your buildings. If you must economize, and use the money in procuring only the best and most vigorous stock obtainable. Good stock costs good money, but is cheaper in the end. Economizing in the purchase of foundation stock is "saving at the spigot and wasting at the bung-hole."

The "Peacock Throne" of Persia is the most extravagant thing of the kind in the world. Its value is estimated between ten and fifteen million dollars.

Steam and electric power employed in the manufacture of the United States amounted in 1905 to 14,441,544 horse power.

MARRY PLAIN WOMEN

MEN WORSHIP BEAUTY BUT OFTEN SELECT OTHERS AS WIVES.

In Proof Whereof Take a View of the Married Women of Your Acquaintance, Many of Whom Risk Shattering the Looking-glass.

Men will always worship beauty. They will like to be seen about with women who look like living pictures. They will sit by the hour and dote upon their ideal of feminine charm, and lead you to believe that no woman who did not look like Venus could interest them.

When, however, they come to marry, ninety-nine times out of a hundred, they will pick out for a wife some woman who hasn't the slightest pretense to prettiness, and never claimed to have. In proof whereof, take a look at the married women of your acquaintance, many of whom risk shattering the looking-glass every time they take a look into it.

The woman who knows that her face is plain, doesn't expect to be admired, and is so humbly grateful to every man who shows her any attention that she is perfectly willing to burn incense before him.

Hard knocks—for the plain woman gets battered about a good deal by life—teach her sympathy and understanding, so that, instead of being a queen to be worshipped, she is a man's best friend and comrade, ready to pity him when things go wrong, and rejoice with him when they go right, and at times to enter into his hopes and plans and fears.

Good looks don't count nearly so much as some people think. To appreciate this fact you have only to look about you and see the many extremely plain women who are making their husbands supremely happy. In fact, men who marry because of a woman's good looks alone are not so numerous as you may think.

A man likes a woman to be womanly. He does not want her interfering in things that don't concern her. And yet he wants her to be interested in what is going on in the world and if he loves her he thinks her opinion invaluable on all subjects, no matter how great.

Although an astute woman novelist has said that no man ever married a woman for her intelligence, this is certainly the most desirable quality in a wife, provided she understands the proper use of it and does not let her smartness and wit run away with her. The man with an intelligent wife surely has the best bargain, and the fact that so many men marry plain women would seem to indicate that they find in them intelligence and sympathy worth more than compensate for the lack of beauty.

It should also be noted that there is no woman on earth so fascinating as the ugly woman who is fascinating. She may not attract a man at first, but when she gets him she holds him—at least long enough to get him to the altar.

Novel Handbag.

Pickpockets will be up against a new problem when they tackle a woman with a pocketbook equipped with the safety lock shown in the illustration, the invention of a Pennsylvania man. This novel and useful construction of a handle can be employed in connection with any type of form of bag, valise or other portable receptacle. There is no possibility of the bag being opened without the knowledge of the person carrying it. The handle is in

MOVABLE HANDLE LOCKS BAG.

The sections which are hollow, and have locking latches operating in connection with a catch in the interior of the bag. To open the bag the outer hollow portions of the handle are swung outward, releasing the latches. The bag is then opened in the usual way. Obviously it would be impossible to open the bag without removing the hand from the handle. Naturally pickpockets could not open the bag without detection.

Corn Fritters.

One cup sweet corn, grated raw from the cob; 1 egg, 2 tablespoonful sugar, 1-2 cup milk, little salt, 1-2 teaspoonful baking powder. Add flour enough to make soft batter; fry in pork fat, or drop in lard.

In order to make a walking skirt of a correct length, namely, just to clear the ground without appearing too short, measure the person to be fitted from the waist line to the ground, and then deduct one and a half inches.

ALCOHOLISM AND COMMERCE.

A Powerful Temperance Lecture in Comparisons.

A very suggestive report has been made to our government by the American consul at Roubaix, France, on the growth of alcoholism in France. It has always been the impression that the wine-drinking countries were, on the whole, the most temperate, and that drunkenness was most prevalent in those nations where wines and other light beverages were not an accompaniment of the daily dinner, but where whiskeys and brandies and other heavy alcoholic drinks were paraken in large quantities. It appears, however, from this report that France ranks first among alcoholic nations, and that the evil of habitual drunkenness has become so great in that country that a congress was held in Paris in October last for the purpose of taking measures to decrease the evil.

It appears from statistics presented by our consul that the consumption of alcoholic beverages per capita in France is 4.81 gallons, in Switzerland .63, in Germany 2.44, in England .33, while the United States ranks lowest in the list of great nations, with a per capita consumption of 1.37 gallons. According to this statement the most abstemious countries are Canada, Finland, and Norway. The consumption of alcohol in France in the last ten years has increased in alarming proportions, while in England and in the United States there has been a steady decrease, and to this fact foreign observers attribute in part the increasing commercial supremacy of the United States.

This is a more powerful temperance lecture than any sermon could possibly be. It proves that temperance is one of the causes of a nation's strength, and that excess in alcoholism, if general among the people, is a cause of commercial decay. It is gratifying to know that this country ranks so well in this respect among the other nations of the globe. It is a matter of common observation that the excessive use of alcoholic drinks has certainly decreased in business circles in the past ten or twenty years. In many establishments the rule is established and rigidly enforced that all employees, high and low, shall not be seen in saloons or partaking of alcoholic drinks in public. Drunkenness, which was formerly a very common thing in ranks of business, is now regarded as a disgrace, followed generally by dismissal or exclusion, and certainly by loss of credit. A man who is known to be an habitual user of alcoholic drinks and a gambler loses his standing at the banks and the confidence of his associates. How far this improvement in the morals of the people, as regards the use intemperately of alcoholic beverages, has extended to the working classes, it is not so easy to estimate, but so far as observation goes there has certainly been a considerable improvement in that direction. Certainly we could not have made the immense strides industrially that we have in the past seven years unless the great masses of our skilled workmen were temperate.—Wall Street Journal.

To Make Alcohol Undrinkable.

As the liquor business of Russia has, in the interest of temperance, been assumed by the Government, the problem of how to make alcohol undrinkable is one of considerable importance, financially as well as industrially, and the Minister of Finance, with characteristic Russian liberality, offers a premium of fifty thousand roubles, or about twenty-seven thousand dollars, for a substance satisfying all the conditions of the programme. Each competitor must submit a memoir, setting forth the experiments which have led to his discovery, and giving the composition, properties and methods of manufacture and use, together with a sample of not less than ten kilogrammes weight, of the substance. If several meritorious preparations are submitted, the premium may be divided among their inventors, and all inventions receiving premiums are to become the property of the government.

SOUGHT CELL AS A DRINK CURE.

An Old Indian Fighter Asked to be Locked in Station.

A fine looking man, tall and straight as a ramrod, weighing more than 200 pounds, but with clothing that showed long wear, walked into the Tenderloin Police Station last night and asked to be locked up. He said he was Daniel Cooney, fifty years old, and that he arrived here from Chicago two days ago. Struck by his appearance, the Sergeant asked him why he wanted to go to jail.

"I've been drunk for a year," was the big man's reply, "and I can't seem to steady up, so I've come to the conclusion that if I am locked up for a while I can get on my feet again."

He said he had been a private in the Fifth and Seventh United States Cavalry and had been a frontier soldier for the best part of his life, having been a member of the rescue party which tried in vain to save General Custer from the massacre on the Little Big Horn in the early '70s, and having served later under Generals Brooks, Miles, Lawton and Chaffee in many fights.

The sergeant, starting with a dollar of his own, began to raise a collection for the old soldier. But with tears in his eyes he waved the money aside. The sergeant dissuaded him, however, from his purpose, and he finally was taken over to Bellevue to be straightened out.—New York Times.

A NOVEL EXPERIMENT

HOW "THE LADIES" FARM PROVED A PAYING VENTURE.

Two Charming and Attractive Women Establish Themselves as Farmers in Spite of Many Adverse Criticisms.

Not a thousand miles from here, live two charming and attractive women whose story is full of interest. Both are blessed with every social quality, are most engaging in presence and are possessed of that suavity of manner that bespeaks their gentle blood and worldly polish. They met with loss of fortune when barely entered into the third decade of their years. Seriously put to the task of deciding how to best use the slender remnant of money in their possession, they began a thorough examination of the business ways and means open to women, and sought to learn the varied experiences of those who had prospered as well as those who had failed. At last they came to the conclusion that with their personal views, inclinations and native predispositions to retaining the protection of a home, as well as of love for the country, they decided to purchase a small farm and to work it.

Then came the search for the farm, and looking up the details of the sort of farm they would have to learn all about. This took some months of hard study and much gleanings of information, together with cautious financial calculations. It goes without saying that family and friends did their very best to oppose the undertaking. They enthusiastically pointed out the wreck their young friends would make of themselves physically and financially, and held up their social ostracism as the final terror. To all these tirades the young women gave a patient ear, philosophically sure that all women who step out of the routine of feminine calling have to encounter that sort of opposition.

Finally there came a day when a suitable twenty-acre property was found and purchased. It was located in an extremely desirable part of the country, within a few miles of a well known town with every advantage. Socially, they had the good fortune to be known, having friends who summered in that vicinity, living in homes of their own. The house on the property was well built on the Southern colonial style, and by no means in bad order. Stables and outhouses, in like manner, were in fairly good repair, so that the outlay for repainting and refitting the whole was far below their anticipations.

Their scheme of farming consisted in raising food for a few cows and two horses, and the making and raising of a large vegetable garden, to supply a summer clientele. The raising of chickens and squabs was, however, to be their chief work, and the most remunerative, while the selling of milk, butter and eggs, was to be carried on the year round.

A name had to be given to the farm, and out of the dozen slips drawn from a small basket on the evening of their house-warming, when a few of the nearest of kin were asked out from town, "The Ladies" came out victorious, having been the choice in reality of the farm-owners from the very beginning. The kinfolk of necessity had to acknowledge the miracle wrought by these wonderfully earnest and clever women, and as they passed from drawing room to dining room, library and small conservatory to the upper chamber story, fresh and sweet in white muslin and chintz, but fitted with all needful modern comforts, they gave in with frank confession that a modern farmhouse such as this was a supreme revelation.

What the situation demanded of the ladies to do they cheerfully did and said nothing about it. They met discomforts as the price they had to pay for blessings that were not to be had unless at that cost, pledging themselves never to grumble or find fault with adverse circumstances that were unavoidable. The consequence was they were habitually brimming over with good spirits, always quick and alert, winning admiration and respect from their equals as well as inferiors.

Care of Teeth.

Brushing the teeth is not a simple operation and few persons do it correctly. To remove accumulation of foreign stuff and acid collections so they will cause no decay the bristles must be rubbed up and down and not across the teeth. In cleaning the heat plan is to brush the upper teeth with a downward motion and the lower ones with an upward movement. By this process any substance between or at the side of the teeth is removed, while the centre is also cleaned.

Should stains, etc., appear on the enamel use powdered pumice stone about once in six weeks, to remove them.

Put on the pumice with an orange wood stick that has been previously dipped in lemon. Rub the teeth evenly with this, then rinse out the mouth to remove the powder that if left on the gums or teeth would surely scratch the dentine in the same way rub on powders, cutfish bone once a week.

"And when he had paid his little fifteen dollars, and had opened the box in St. Petersburg, if I remember rightly, he found in addition to the precious contents a note from me that explained, 'This is the load that rolled off my heart on receipt of the news of your good health.'"

The Value of Old Men.

America is the young man's country, we are told, because so many of the conspicuous figures among us are young men. The thing is said conventionally, as if there were some moral virtue in being young; as if, too, the greatest tragedy in American history was not the death some forty years ago of a half million men in the prime of life, which deprived our generation of its wisest counsellors. Experience is the only school which gives a degree-honored of all men, and a man of three-score, with the vigor of life still in him, should be the most useful citizen of a community.

The awful catastrophe at Baltimore furnished a splendid instance. The conflagration had been raging for 12 hours. Chief Horton, of the Fire Department, had been disabled by a live wire. The fighters were without a head. Then William C. McAfee, veteran fire chief, retired for age and accounted an old man, offered his services to the mayor. They were accepted. Donning his oilskins and grabbing his trumpet the old chief went into action. At once the men knew they had a leader. They needed one. The fire was roaring down the river bank, where were some great rosin works filled with turpentine. And as they went so must go East Baltimore.

"There'll be hell to pay if the fire gets into that rosin," yelled McAfee through his trumpet. "If enough of you men will follow me, we'll go in there and dump the whole outfit into the bay."

They followed the leader and they saved East Baltimore. — Leslie's Monthly.

Dogs kept exclusively for guiding blind persons or for tending sheep or cattle on a farm are exempt from taxation in Great Britain.

The World About Us.

We are glad to see the State legislatures waking up to the need of better pay for the school teachers. Within the past twelve months several of them have passed laws increasing the compensation materially and placing a minimum so that an accomplished young woman teaching in the humblest school may now have the proud satisfaction of receiving somewhat better wages than a farm hand. In many, but not all of the large cities, the pay is much better than it was, and it is safe to say that within the next year or so the situation will be improved in every part of the country. Of course the best that is done will be far less than what should be done, but it is a fine sign and a welcome promise that the most competent and least compensated of our public servants are receiving attention from those who handle the people's money.

An aroused public sentiment has something to do with it, but a large part of the explanation arises from very practical considerations. There is wider demand and higher pay for expert women of mental gifts and training, and many of these are to be found in the school ranks. Now as women comprise more than three-fourths of the 470,000 public school teachers of America, it is quite necessary to do something to keep the better of them in the work, and thus outside competition is helping the whole teaching force of the country. —The Ladies' World for April.
