Memorial Day.

The 30th of May was set apart by common consent in most of the states of the American Union for the decoration of the graves of those who died in defense of the nation's life and honor. Memorial day is the proper designation, not Decoration day, and the 30th of May is said to have been chosen because it was the date of the discharge of the last soldier of the Union army in the civil war. It is a legal holiday in all the states and territories except Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina and Texas.

April 26th is Confederate Memorial day in the states of Alabama, Florida, Georgia and Mississippi. The tenth of May is observed in North and South Carolina, the second Friday of the month is set apart in Tennessee, May 30th is observed in Virginia, and June 3d in Louisiana.

In some of the Southern and border states there are union services on May 30th, when honors are paid to the memory of soldiers of both armies and the Blue and Gray clasp hands in token of reconciliation. The loyalty and eagerness that the people of the South showed at the time of the war with Spain did much to heal the old wounds by demonstrating that there is now one country and one flag and that no section yields to another in patriotic devotion.

For several months he has been gradually breaking down in health and for the past five weeks he was confined to his bed.

In 1855 Mr. Hough was united in marriage to Caroline Horton of Owasco who survives him. He also leaves two sons, George of Winnipeg, Canada, and Lewis P. of Rochester.

The funeral was held at the late residence Tuesday afternoon at 8 o'clock. Rev. W. S. Lyon officiated and burial was made in Indian Mound.—Moravia Republican.

Where You Belong

In the June American Magazine David Grayson, author of "Adventures in Contentment," writes an article which he calls "On Being Where You Belong." In the course of the article the author makes the following diagnosis of what brings contentment:

"Every man is a magnet, highly and singularly sensitized. Some draw to them fields and woods and hills, and are drawn in return; and some draw swift streets and the riches which are known to cities. It is not of importance what we draw, but that we really draw. And the greatest tragedy in life, as I see it, is that thousands of men and women never have the opportunity to draw with freedom; but they exist in weariness and labor, and are drawn upon like inanimate objects by those who live in unhappy idleness. They do not farm; they are farmed. But that is a question foreign to present considerations. We may be assured, if we draw freely, like the magnet of steel which gathers its iron filings about it in beautiful and symmetrical forms, that the things which we attract will also become symmetrical and harmonious with our lives.

"Thus flowing with life, self-rendering to life, a man becomes indispensable to life; he is absolutely necessary to the conduct of this universe. And it is the feeling of being necessary, of being desired, flowing into a man that produces the infinite satisfaction of contentment."

Not by Might.

Adown the ages evermore
All men should know his name;
A house to God, the Infinite,
He would, himself, uphold.
He worked. A temple of proportions grand
Began to cleave the azure blue.
A tablet, deep-embazoned, set
In place, all-seen, proclaimed
The builder and his hope.
His temple in a dream he saw
With heavenly radiance shine;
The tablet glowed, its letters living fire,
But other name than his it held
As one who had done more
To rear the house than he.
Three times, successive nights, he dreamed
The selfsame dream.
He must the person find whose name
Upon the tablet, all ablaze he saw,
"What hast thou done to build yon walls,"
He asked. Reply the trembling woman made
"I wished so much some little deed
To do, in building God a house;
I could not hew the stones
Nor bring them from the quarry;
I could not place them to the line,
Nought could I do but one poor thing—
I could get the grass along the way
Gather and feed the tired horse
That struggling forward drew the stones."

Not the great deed is oft the blessed;
God counts that one alone
Most truly filled with love to Him
Tho' quite to men unknown.

THE COLONEL'S MEMORIAL.

By Francis Sterne Palmer.

It was a warm Memorial Day at the village of Burnby in New York; and the bright uniforms of the firemen and soldiers of the National Guard, who were in the procession marching to the burial ground, grew tarnished with dust. These were mostly young men, and they saw with sorrow the fading glory of their clothes. But the dark blue ranks of the war veterans moved on untroubled by the dust, which recalled other journeys they had made together, across sandy barrens in the South. To them, this placing of flowers on the graves of their dead comrades was a touching and sacred ceremony.

On arrival at the burial ground in the outskirts of the village the flowers were distributed, a clergyman who had been a chaplain in the war made a prayer, the address was delivered, and the National Guard fired a salute. Then the men wheeled into line and began to tramp back to the place of disbanding. The line of march was bordered by people—street urchins, who were already frisking in barefoot freedom, country girls whose bright faces bloomed out of dusty white dresses.

Two mounted aids, who rode by the sides of the column, wore an important air, though they had nothing to do save bow and smile to friends in the throng by the wayside. Colonel Marston, marshal of the day, mounted on a tall, black horse, rode behind the band of music which led acknowledging smiling salutations, the procession. He sat in the saddle, the chaplain and the orator (a man from a neighboring city) rode together in a carriage.

"Your marshal," said the orator, "does not seem to have many friends."
"No," returned the chaplain, "Marston's friends are chiefly among the veterans following him. It is only to please them that he consents to act as marshal. The men who served with him respect him and are fond of him, but since we were mustered out he hasn't made a success of life. Something happened to him in the war which was nearly as bad as being struck down by a bullet. This is what it was:

"One day, not long before Lee's surrender, Marston, then a captain, was riding with me along a Virginia road just inside the Federal lines. We met a lad on horseback in our cavalry uniform. Something made the captain suspicious, and he ordered the lad to go back with us to camp. No sooner had he spoken than the other put spurs to his horse and dashed off. Marston started after in hot pursuit; he thought his horse a good one, but now it seemed to stand still as the black colt, which the lad rode, leaped forward with wonderful speed. There was one resource left. A bullet was swifter than even a thoroughbred, and the captain drew his revolver and fired. He aimed at the horse, but the revolver must have sprung up, for in a moment more the rider swayed to one side and then fell. He was hit in the shoulder and, when the captain reached him, had fainted. When I came up, Marston was rolling back the lad's sleeve to examine the wound.

"A strange arm for a boy," he muttered, and then looked more closely at his prisoner.

"Well, the lad was a woman, and, as it proved, a very handsome one, too. She came to us we were bending over her, and took in the situation at a glance, and (as I afterward thought) took in the captain's character as well. He was Quixotic in his ideas about women; and she, seeming to divine this, treated him as if she, and not she, was the captive. Boldly she was a spy; but in those late days of the war spies were of small importance, and so, when she said had no papers about her, we did not take the trouble to have her searched.

"She was taken to the hospital, and in the course of the next few weeks the captain often saw her there. When she was convalescent, they took long rides together. She was a dashing woman of that blond type which is not uncommon in Virginia. All her family ties had been destroyed by the war. He pitied and admired, and soon they were married. Not long afterward, peace was proclaimed and Marston, a colonel now came back to Burnby, bringing with him a tall black colt, with a good pedigree, and a tall, yellow-haired wife.

"Marston's sister, his only relative in Burnby, did not give her brother's wife a cordial welcome. The wife was quick-tempered, and soon estranged her husband from his sister and most of his friends. After a few years of unhappy married life, the colonel's wife died, leaving no children. His former friends tried to be cordial again, but now that his wife was only a memory, he worshiped

The Colonel salutes the onlookers, her and would have nothing to do with the people she disliked. His sister married and had a family, but they have never been reconciled. He goes through the world grim and lonely."

A carriage, in which was a nurse and two children, was drawn up at the side of the road, waiting for the procession to pass. The horses were spirited animals, and as the band came near, the driver had difficulty in keeping them quiet. He got down from his place to go to their heads; as he did so, they sprang to one side, broke away and dashed off. The nurse screamed, and, holding the younger child in her arms, jumped from the carriage. The horses tore on; the older child, a girl of about eight, crouched on the awaying seat. One or two men tried to stop the runaway, but in vain. The child, kneeling in the carriage, looked about with piteous appealing eyes.

The band was quiet; the procession halted, and the chaplain sprang to his feet to watch the tragedy. Not far ahead was a sharp turn in the road; there the carriage would be upset. Just then the men in the band scattered something rushed through their ranks.

The thoroughbred was doing his best, but his joints were stiff and the running team were going at break-neck speed. As the old black horse stretched out his thin neck his eyes seemed to regain their youthful fire and his joints to grow supple. Now every leap brought him nearer the runaways. The turn in the road had not yet been reached, when the colonel bent down and snatched the child from the carriage. She lay faint and motionless in his arms, her yellow hair streaming brightly as a garland of flowers over his jacket's dusty blue.

The old horse came slowly back, the little girl a frightened bit of color on the colonel's arms.
"See," said the chaplain, "we have decorated the graves of dead soldiers. Here is the colonel's decoration."

He was heard by the ranks nearest him, and the men echoed his words.
"See," they cried, "here's the colonel's decoration!"

The chaplain leaned forward and spoke to the colonel.
"Do you know who it is?" he said.
"It's your sister's little girl."

The nurse, who with the younger child had escaped unhurt, stood by, and the colonel gave her the little girl. She seemed half reluctant to leave her perch on the tall, black horse.

After supper, as Colonel Marston was sitting alone in the twilight of his room, a note was brought him. Years before the handwriting had been familiar. The note said:

"My little girl wants you to come to see her this evening. Will you?"

The colonel became absorbed in thought.
A little later his housekeeper was filled with wonder. She saw him leaving the house, dressed as if to make an evening call. Such a thing had not happened for years.

Memorial Day Discovery.

The earliest of Memorial Day happenings, three centuries and a quarter before the holiday was first to be officially declared, was the landing in Florida, on that date in 1539, of that picturesque, pitiless adventurer Ferdinand de Soto. Cabot had touched the coast in 1497, Ponce de Leon had landed there on Easter Sunday, 1512, giving it the name which it now bears, but it was to be left for this Spanish "gentleman of Elvas" to conquer the land in the name of "Charles the Fifth and Christ" and to establish there its first white colony. He was to spend there the wealth which he had won the Pizarro in Peru, and he was to lay down there his life whose sole passion was for gold.

Strangely enough, it was on the 30th of May again that de Soto first crossed the mighty Mississippi. A month earlier he had come upon it—"a mile broad, I should say, its strong and muddy current forcing a deep channel beneath it as it flows southward to the sea with its burden of ravishing timbers"—and it had taken weeks to build boats capable of carrying over the horses of the expedition. This was in 1541; a year later, having explored the stream northward, Chevalier Ferdinand had been buried in its "strong and muddy current."

South African Memorial.

In South Africa, and to those who fought bravely but fruitlessly for the Transvaal Republic, May 30 stands for an event clearly foretelling the defeat of their loved cause. On that date, in 1900, "Oom Paul" Kruger started on his flight from Pretoria, the capital of a republic dying in its fifty-second year. He had come in from the front three months before; his Cabinet had met and sent forth to the world that plea for intervention which was to amount to less than the paper it was written on; the Volksraad had met and adjourned to no helpful purpose; Driefontein had been lost, Mafeking relieved, the Orange Free State annexed. These things had broken the patriarchal old man, and when the news came in of the death of Gen. Joubert, it is said that he gave up all hope, starting on to Waterboven in an official retreat which practically laid the flowers upon the grave of his country.

PLATO AND CHRIST.
May 31, '08.—(John 20:1-18.)

The Vision of Er forms the conclusion of the last book of Plato's "Republic."

It is well worth the study of any one who hopes or believes.
In it Plato imagines one Er, a Pamphylian hero of about his own time, who was slain in battle. Ten days afterward when they would bury the dead they found his body still undecayed. He was put on the funeral pyre, but before the torch was applied he revived and told the vision he had seen while the soul was out of the body.

He had seen the souls of men taken before a judgment seat, carrying on their foreheads the records of their deeds, and sent away to bliss or woe according as the record ran. After centuries of life in another world the souls of men again were taken before the three fates, and were allowed to choose their lot for a new incarnation on earth.

Such was the vision of Er, as told by the wisest of the Greek Philosophers. Plato had gathered all the arguments he could invent to support what all men craved, but they were not enough. He wanted a revelation from the outer world, but he could not find it; so he put what he dreamed of or could best conceive, into this fable of a resurrection—a man who had died and who had returned to human life.

Such was the best lesson, the true lesson of the wise philosophers before Jesus Christ. But what Plato only dreamed and wished, the Christian faith has—not a dream, not a fable, but a fact, a history. The resurrection of Jesus Christ is the best attested fact in human history. We read the blurred and shadowy vision of Er with interest; we thrill and exult in the glorious reality of the 15th chapter of 1st Corinthians.

The one is Paganism groping at the light; the other is Christianity in the blaze of noonday. The one is the seed; the other is the fruit. The one is the dream; the other is the awakening. The one is vision; the other is reality.

In a Scottish valley beside a little brook, where there was no kindly soil, a Highlander once planted a tree. Of course, it wilted and drooped. But suddenly to the surprise of everyone, it took a new start in life and bore rich fruit. What was the source of its new life? That was the query put by all who knew it. An examination revealed the secret. With a marvelous vegetable instinct it had sent out a shoot which ran along and over a narrow sheep bridge and rooted itself in the rich loam on the other side of the brook. From this rich loam it drew its new life, which manifested itself in bud and blossom and luscious fruit.

And so it is that the Resurrection bridges the River of Death that flows between earth and heaven; and the souls of men who see and know this send out the shoot of faith, and this shoot, running over the bridge of resurrection, roots itself in the realities of the other side, and draws eternal strength from the fullness there.

Nature itself is full of the symbolism of this great truth. Look at the day buried in the darkness of night, rising again in the morning. I have stood on a lofty mountain top and seen the sun rise. On the top of the mountain was a crown of flashing gold, while all beneath was rolling, writhing, contorted cloud and fog. But after a while the arrows of light shot from heaven, began to make the gloom of the valley strike tent.

The mists went scurrying up and down like cavalry in wild retreat. The fogs were lifted and rent and whirled. Redder and redder grew the eastern banners of flame. Leaping cohorts of fire filled the sky. Darkness receded sulkily into the valleys and the sunlight captured one after another of the distant crests. The mountains, in encircling amphitheatre, tier over tier, peak backed by higher peak, seemed assembled in silent surrender to the King of Day. And he crowned them with glory as a reward. The whole valley became one grand illumination. The green fields looked up. The river unrolled itself, and there were little white flocks of villages lying amidst the rich pastures and golden grainfields stretched out.

So in Plato's day there hung over all the graves, and sepulchres, and mausoleums of the ages, fogs and darkness unlifted by a single ray—darkness that no human lamp could penetrate. But when from above the Sun of Righteousness arose, the dense fogs of Goubt were cleared away, and now all the valleys of the dead are bathed in the full light of the morning of the resurrection. And the fogs can never capture and hold the world in their cold embrace again the light now shineth.

Plunged to the heedless winds,
Or on the waters cast,
The martyr's ashes, watched,
Shall gathered be at last,
And from that scattered dust,
Around us and abroad,
Shall spring a piousness seed
Of witnesses for God.

THE OLD FASHIONED WAY OF BANKING has been ours for twenty years. No matter what others may do we do not change. The old fashioned way of doing things in banking has always proven to be the best. The old time friendships, the old some, the old memories and the things we love, and the old fashioned bank we never can forget. Some folks change their ideas or methods from the old to the new once in a while but somehow after a time they wander back to the old home where they feel acquainted, where the hand clasp is firm, the look from the eye is straight, and they feel secure. In these days of speculation and extravagance, of storm and stress, it behoves every man and woman to stop and think. Saving is but a habit, acquire it, and teach it to your children and your friends.

THE DUCHESS' COUP.

I was sitting by the river with the duchess. She was deep in thought. I was not thinking more than I could help. Across the sparkling water the trees were green and gold, with here and there a gleam of silver or a band of black. The birds were wooing ardently in the tree tops; indeed, one practical fellow seemed already to be making furniture for the home, or, at least, sawing the necessary wood. There was scarcely a breath to move the rushes, and the fish slumbered peacefully in the cool depths of the river, or glided slowly beneath their water lily sunshades.

But the beauty that surrounded her brought no peace to the mind of the duchess. "It's such a suitable match," she remarked, rousing me from a reverie.

"Perhaps Lady Marion might not think so," said I, aware of what was troubling my companion.

"Fiddlesticks! She's a sensible girl!"

"Marriages are not made—by being sensible," I remarked.

"That's your opinion."

"Not exclusively. Your husband told me—"

The attitude of the duchess warned me to desist.

"Besides, he is much older than Marion, and immensely rich," I continued. "Her motives might be mistaken."

"Winterton himself is the chief difficulty," she said, presently. "He wants stirring up."

"If they were together, under suitable conditions—"

"Moonlight?" I suggested.

"I've tried that."

"Mixed with music?"

"I don't see how it could be arranged."

Then a brilliant idea flashed into my brain.

"Have Peter Macnulty play to them!" I cried.

The duchess sat up.

"You are really a wonderful man, Massingham. Just when I'm thinking your mind is permanently gone you sparkle like this. Mr. Macnulty is the very man."

"With the man in the moon to help."

"But how are we to mix them?"

I thought for a moment, and then set my scene.

"Winterton and Marion must be inveigled on to the terrace; you and I will be seated in a dark corner of the room."

"I shall feel like Guy Fawkes!"

"The moon, luckily full just now, will be in its usual place; and in the far end of the room Macnulty will play soft love-music as no one else can play it—shaping destined with his finger tips—the deus ex piano!"

"It's magnificent!" cried the duchess, as I sank back exhausted in my chair. "But how are we to get Macnulty?"

"I know his address in London. Write to him. The duchess rose.

Then I began to think of Peter Macnulty. A little man, inclined to stoutness, with a merry laugh and bright eyes; a good companion and a thorough sportsman. He had faced a tiger together and Macnulty found his shoulder just in time to prevent unpleasant consequences for me.

But Macnulty shooting tigers was just a quiet, plucky little English gentleman, with a certain dry humor and forgetfulness of self that made a capital companion. There are (it is a matter of congratulation) thousands like him in this little island of ours. But Macnulty at the piano! Then you forget the plump little body, and the shock of red hair. And when he had done with you—when he had made you laugh and cry, and love and hate, and stirred and tickled your very soul with his music—then he was your master, and you could never think of him in quite the same way again.

answered. "I've been with the Southboroughs."

"I had an invitation."

"We'll go back together this evening."

"But I refused it. I think of running over to Paris the end of the week."

"From the frying pan to the fire. London's hot enough—besides, the duchess wants you at Eccleston."

"It's very flattering!"

"You're a charming young man when you're nicely dressed. She is very fond of you."

Macnulty roused the sugar in the bottom of his glass to a sense of its duty.

"Is—Lady Marion there?" he inquired presently.

I thought a moment. There was a meaning in that question that might explain his mysterious refusal. It had not occurred to me before.

"What's that got to do—"

"Oh, nothing—nothing!" said Macnulty, jumping up from his seat. "Come out and lunch with me."

With my dinner trembling in the balance, I thought the suggestion excellent.

There is no doubt that a good meal undermines a man's moral character. He feels comfortable and peaceful. He wants to know why he shouldn't do the thing he ought not, and finds he has forgotten the many reasons that had suggested themselves before luncheon. Probably, if no one stops him, he does it.

It was so with Peter Macnulty. We caught an afternoon train to Eccleston.

The duchess had evidently determined to act promptly. Macnulty was carefully fed (I had no reason to complain myself), and when the moon climbed over the treetops, she saw us all assembled in the great drawing-room that looked out on the stone terrace where in olden days many women had waved adieu with dainty kerchiefs to their knights riding in the war, there to do great deeds for their love.

The duchess displayed considerable skill in arranging her tableau. Winterton and Marion were lured on to the terrace (by a suggestion that the park was well worth looking at in the moonlight). Macnulty was seated at the piano, and the duchess herself took a seat by my side.

But then matters went awry. After playing a few soft, low chords and letting his fingers run gently over the keys for a minute Macnulty broke suddenly into one of the wild, grand melodies of his native land. There were the shrill of the pipes, the shouts of the tribesmen, and the clang of their broadswords—all the wild barbarism of a fierce battle of the clans.

It stirred the blood in my veins. I too, grasped a slaymore, and bounded over the heather, filled with a wild lust of slaying. There was a kilt around my waist, and I felt the sharp sting of the heather on my bare knees. I would shout and kill—kill—and my arms would never tire while the wild shrieking of the pipes rang in my ears.

Presently I looked up. The duchess was standing by me, with her hand on my shoulder.

"This will never do," she whispered. The music had not moved her. Possibly she found it difficult to imagine herself in a kilt.

I looked out on the terrace. Winterton was tapping with his foot and looking at the moonlit country.

"Tell him to play something soft," said the duchess.

I rose obediently and walked across the room.

"They would like it more," I said, softly.

I was determined he should know what he had to do.

Macnulty's face grew very grave.

"Did she ask for it?"

He was thinking of Marion. I substituted the duchess.

"Yes," said I.

Then Macnulty began to play, at first softly, as of a lover thinking; then louder, in a passionate appeal. I saw Winterton's hand steal slowly toward Marion's and close over it. (The duchess leaned a little forward in her chair). But the hand underneath was gently twisted away, and Marion rose.

I could see her lips move, and then she came through the doors into the room. Her mother gasped audibly, and for a moment I thought she would have barred her entrance, but she sank back again into her chair. In the dim light I could see her expression. I was sorry for that.

Marion walked to the piano, but Macnulty continued playing as if he did not see her. But it was no longer music that he played; it was the man himself speaking, a passionate torrent of words.

SOUR MILK IS HEALTHY.

The Use and Origin of Curdled Milk Older Than History.

Nothing is older than curdled milk or sour milk, and nothing seems newer than the application which has been made of it.

Civilized people are the only ones to drink milk fresh or boiled, while fermented milk is almost the only kind used outside the pale of civilization. The use and origin of curdled milk are older than history.

Later the Greeks and Romans also recognized the strengthening and tonic effects of sour milk, and they performed veritable cures with the special kind of curdled milk called "schiston."

In our times fermented milk is in common use as a daily diet in Eastern countries. In almost all these countries, besides being used as a food, sour milk has played and still plays a great part in empirical medicine.

Sour milk, after being recognized as a wholesome food possessing medicinal properties, has been proclaimed by some people as a remedy for prolonging human life.—Medical Journal.

French Thrift.

From time to time the English workingman has the French peasant's thrift thrown in his face. The French peasant may not be able to find "sermons in stones, books in the running brooks," but he can and does find food in everything. He and a large family could live on what an Englishman in the same position wastes. People, however, seem to forget that the habits of the Englishmen are determined by their climate.—Lady.

Lady Gamblers.

The number of suicides which have taken place lately among business men and speculators in America carries a warning note to women, who, unfortunately, are many of them, bitten with the love of gambling. Nothing is so fatal or insidious as speculating in stocks and shares, and women, from their circumstances, are peculiarly liable to be misled and cheated.—London Graphic.

Restlessness.

More restlessness is not a matter for which physicians are often consulted. It is, on the face of it, an unimportant malady, but when it exists in sufficient intensity to form the subject of complaint, and to induce the sufferer to seek advice, it is usually found to be the superficial indication of a grave underlying condition.—Hospital.

The Haddock's spots.

The haddock has a superstition attached to it. On each side of the shoulders near the gills is a dark spot, fabled to be the impression made by the finger and thumb of St. Peter when he took it up and found the penny in his mouth to pay tribute to Caesar with.

An Expensive Plant.

The ivy plant which established itself in a crevice of the tower of St. John the Baptist church at Yardborough, Lincolnshire, England, undermined the foundation and lifted stones out of place until it cost over $3,000 to make repairs.

Good Swimmers.

All German soldiers must learn to swim. Some of them are so expert that with their clothing on their heads and carrying guns and ammunition, they can swim several hundred yards.

About Freckles.

Freckles may be hereditary. Cases of freckles all over the body are mentioned. Food is not supposed to cause them. Sun and wind makes some faces freckle.

Forests of England.

It is difficult in England to arouse an interest in the preservation of forests because of the universal substitution of coal for wood as fuel.

Exhausts the Soil.

The growth of a number of successive crops of the same plant has been lately found not only to exhaust the soil for that plant, but to develop an active poison for it.

American Oak Staves.

Spanish grape growers prefer American oak staves for barrels, claiming that no other wood is so good for the preservation of fruit.

The Lick Telescope.

The great Lick telescope will pick out a star so small that it would require 30,000 of them put together to be visible to the naked eye.

The art of glove cutting requires great skill, and in France some of the best workmen are paid $100 a week.

Small Savings and Investments.

While the advisability of setting up postal savings banks is being considered it is well to look beyond and think of the future of the savings gathered through Uncle Sam's agency, assuming that such banks are to be opened. It seems to be the experience in France that the government savings banks are used by the thrifty as places of temporary deposit and that the accumulations in time go into interest bearing bonds within their reach and known to be as good as gold. It is a passion with the French to own something which keeps growing in value. Probably it is a hereditary trait, dating back to the period when all the land in France was owned by the nobility, who refused to sell. Since the great revolution the number of small landowners in France has increased wonderfully, but yet immense sums of money find their way annually "from the stockings of the peasants," as the saying is, to government treasure chests in exchange for securities which the owner can handle and keep by him.

Encouragement to thrift should go the length of placing means of acquisition within reach of the humblest wage earner. Instead of limiting bond issues to $1,000 certificates there might be certificates of $100, and the one who began saving would look upon that as a prize to work for. That secured, another would be wanted and so on. Investment in projects based principally upon hot air and printer's ink can be started as low as $5, and the manipulators see to it that other sums are added "before the stock goes up." The $100 certificate when secured is found to be worthless paper. The numerous frauds foisted upon the small investor in this country serve to prove that millions could be gathered annually for sound securities in small denominations and the scandalous waste due to "easy money" curtailed if not wholly abolished.

Bank of the Small Trader.

The Bank of France, as shown by a recent report of its governor, had an increase of business in 1907 over that of the previous year amounting to $400,000,000. The Bank of France is especially the bank of the small trader and the agriculturist. The average value of the bills discounted by this institution last year was a trifle under $150, and nearly one-half of the whole number of bills discounted, and this includes the business in Paris itself, was of value, individually, under $20. Doubtless the average value in the country branches was still lower than in Paris.

It is often said that there is no money for a bank in handling small transactions. If so, then the Bank of France is an exception, for its dividend last year was at the rate of 17 1/2 per cent per annum. Clearly, then, catering for the small trader and the very small agriculturist is profitable business for one of the soundest, perhaps the soundest, banking institutions of the world. It would be difficult to find elsewhere a more successful institution, taking it from all points of view, than the Bank of France, and in the experience of this bank we have the strongest possible argument for a financial system in this country which shall encourage banks to engage especially in furnishing working capital for the small trader and the small agriculturist.

The Canadian Camp club has petitioned congress to save the trees. Bravo! If we keep on using up the wood to make paper there will be no place for game to hide in, and the gay hunter will have no excuse for going forth and making weird noises on a homemade piccolo under the impression that he is calling the long snouted, meek eyed moose.

Mme. Schumann-Heink gets herself naturalized because, she says, America has brought her luck, fame and fortune. Well, in exchange for the privileges of citizenship America gets a mighty fine contralto voice and eight healthy children. Both parties to the deal should be satisfied.

John Hancock a "smuggler," Samuel Adams a "defaulter," Abraham Lincoln a "ward boss," and so on. What should we do without all these smart historical sleuths working in the graveyards?

We're going to have an arbitration treaty with Switzerland. That will prevent our navy ravaging the Swiss coasts and the sailing of a Swiss army to retaliate upon ours.

A new gun has been invented which, it is claimed, can fire 2,000,000 bullets a minute. Expert dodging may yet have to become a part of army maneuvers.

Women's Strength.

It seems that the doctrine set up by the United States supreme court in its latest decision limiting the working hours of women may become the public policy and practice of the whole land. The court reached bed rock when it declared that woman's "physical structure and a proper discharge of her maternal functions—having in view not merely her own health, but the well being of the race—justify legislation to protect her from the greed as well as from the passions of man." The particular law which the court upheld had for its primary and its exclusive purpose the protection and welfare of the individual and society.

In twenty states of the Union laws have been enacted to restrict the factory hours of women to ten in one day. In upholding these statutes the supreme court treats them as proper police regulations, and it must be a rare instance when such a law is conceived with a view to limit freedom of contract. The court of appeals upset the New York law making ten hours the limit for women on the ground that it discriminated with respect to the liberties of persons or of contract. This adverse ruling has yet to be reviewed by the supreme court, which has repeatedly held in effect that private interest is subservient to public interest and that all rights are subject to such regulation as may be "essential to the safety, health, peace, good order and morals of the community." The application of this principle in the recent decision makes woman the ward of the state and places her under the fostering and special protection of the law in the interest of the human race and posterity.

A Good Stroke of Business.

The display of our sixteen warships could not have been needed to impress the thinking men of South America that the United States will be able when the time comes to uphold the Monroe doctrine. All the world knows that the position this country occupies among the powers today is not an accident and that what appears to be, simply because of its magnitude, perhaps, ostentatious greatness is not a sham. But the social visits between the personnel of the navy and the people of South American cities opens up another aspect of our relations with the Latin Americans. We have heretofore been almost industrial strangers to the people south of Mexico. Some of the European nations, notably Germany, have pressed their commercial interests while we slept. In Chile and Argentina the Germans in force are engaged in general trade and in banking, while in Brazil these people exert an important influence in governmental and trade affairs.

Now that the citizens of the big ports have seen our representatives on the social side it will be strange if they do not wish for a further acquaintance. Trade follows the handshake and the cordial greeting, for people live by buying and selling, and they always want something new. If this government is to protect the political interests of the South American states, this people should share equally at least in the trade of those states. The situation can be improved, and the time to act is while the people down there still cherish pleasant memories of the visits of our sailors.

A Long Way to "the Woods."

An Australian corporation has just received a concession from the Russian government to take out 30,000,000 feet of timber a year from a forest in Siberia, 900 miles from Vladivostok, to be delivered in Melbourne, Australia, approximately 8,000 miles away. It is likely that no lumbering operation of recent years more strongly illustrates the pinch in the timber supply in all parts of the world.

The news of the concession, told in an American lumber journal, is accompanied with a suggestion of the difficulty that all countries may have to encounter in getting the wood which they need in the future. Every year timber cruisers are going farther and farther afield and cutting trees which, in former times of abundance, they passed because of the inaccessibility of the forest. Forest experts in this country say that the hope of the United States for a steady supply of timber lies in the application of forestry to all timber lands, private and public, and the careful study of the economical and better utilization of product. And at best a severe shortage in twenty to twenty-five years must be expected.

Not so many abusive valentines were sent through the mails this year as formerly. The peculiar form of brain fog that has prompted their use hitherto finds expression now in letting loose an avalanche of picture portraits.

Skeletons now harbored in prohibition territory will have to move over a little closer to make room for a jug or two in the closet.

It is just a hundred years since hard coal came into use. Other ways of spending money may be older, but not more effective.

Every man has a right always to live where he pleases, but not always to live as he pleases.

Miners' Wages in Germany.

Some years ago the miners of the Ruhr coal district, one of the most extensive in the German empire, suffered a reduction in pay and within the past year have succeeded in getting even better rates than those prevailing in 1900, the period of high wages. Conditions are still unsettled, however, according to a recent statement from United States Consul Dunlap of Cologne.

Owing to the high prices for coal the official reports regarding wages of miners in the Ruhr district for the third quarter of 1907 were awaited with considerable expectancy, there being close connection between the wages paid miners and the prices at which the product is sold. To the public demands for a reduction in the price of coal the mine owners reply that it is impossible, owing to the high wages paid miners, which are still increasing. Besides that, the new laws regulating the payment of sick benefits and pensions to disabled miners and their families will, even if rejected by the miners, considerably increase the expense to the mine owners by many million marks. At the recent meeting of the national miners' congress in Berlin the leaders of the miners' unions in the Ruhr district complained of much want and misery among their members.

The German miners last year earned approximately $1.50 a day and other workers in the mines about $1. These rates were an increase over those of 1905 of about 26 per cent for miners, 20 per cent for other workers underground and 14 per cent for laborers.

German mine workers are required to pay large sums for the purpose of invalid and accident insurance. To these funds the mine owner is required by law to contribute as much or more. Taking these facts into consideration and also the fact that the new law regulating these funds will add nearly $2,500,000 to the expenses of the mine owners in this district, an increase in the cost of fuel to the consumer is most probable.

The number of adult employees in the Ruhr district increased during the second and third quarters of 1907 from 288,833 to 292,309.

American Rights in Russia.

Recently the state department at Washington declared officially that the United States dissents from Russia's well known views as to the criminality of those of her subjects who have or may become American citizens and the right of the czar to punish them when caught on Russian soil without his express permission. This is a decision following upon another of the same purport which has aroused protest in this country. Nearly a year ago the state department issued a circular to the effect that it would not "issue passports to former Russian subjects or to Jews who intend going into Russian territory unless it has assurance that the Russian government will consent to their admission." This circular further explained that a passport under such circumstances was a document tending to mislead the holder since it does not really protect from hardship and even imprisonment.

In the recent note dissenting from the Russian view the secretary of state added the warning that "an American citizen formerly a subject of Russia who returns to that country places himself within the jurisdiction of the Russian law and cannot expect immunity from its operations." It is made clear that the applicants for the passports take all the risk as to whether their return will be assented to by Russia. There seems to be a clash here between the international and the domestic law, and it will not be settled until there is a naturalization treaty between the United States and Russia.

The more the Japanese become acquainted with the resources of their part of the island of Sakhalin the better they are satisfied with the bargain that gave them possession of it. The fisheries are proving very profitable, and coal mines of value are being developed. The Japanese population now numbers 30,000, and during the fishing season it is much larger. The vigor displayed by the new occupants of Sakhalin indicates what will happen in Korea when Japanese energy has full play.

Among the fresh evidences of Spain's revived commercial activity is a report which states that Spanish trade with South America is rapidly increasing. In some lines of manufactures Spain has captured already the lion's share of the trade, and in other lines her enterprise and energy are making inroads upon the trade enjoyed by other European countries and by the United States.

The 108 young men who graduated from West Point last week may find "standing and waiting" to their liking, but it might be advisable for them to take a horseback ride occasionally to keep in good standing with the commander in chief.

Work, said a clergyman the other day, is the common lot of man. The only trouble is that there is not a lot of work for common man at present.

LIVE STOCK

FEED RACK FOR CATTLE BARN.

Giving an Illustration of a Feed Rack for All Purposes.

The accompanying illustration shows a feed rack for the cattle barn which for all purposes cannot be excelled. The rack is placed in the center of the barn so that the stock can eat from all sides, and if need be the stock can be divided and yet have access to the rack.

It is made six feet wide and as long as the barn will allow, leaving room to drive around when hauling out the manure.

The bottom of the rack should be about 2 feet from the ground with a tight floor for feeding grain or any fine feed. The sides should be constructed of 2x4 pieces placed in a slanting position and firmly spiked together and to the main frame so that a V shaped opening is made through which the cattle must reach for their feed. The lower spaces are boarded up and the upper spaces or openings should commence from the floor.

In that rack hay and straw can be fed with almost no waste, and for feeding shredded fodder it has no equal, as it gives plenty of room for shifting the feed about. A door can be made in one end for convenience with a V shaped opening so that no space is wasted.

I find that cattle of different ages and sizes eat in peace from this rack, as they have their heads inside and do not seem to notice the others.—Prairie Farmer.

Pasturing Hogs and Feeding Beans.

The hog will make a pound of food on less grain than almost any live stock and he is a great utilizer of farm waste; nevertheless, no man should attempt to raise hogs—as a business even in a small way—without adequate pasture.

Experiments from Mississippi to Michigan are noted in pasturing and feeding, including the use of alfalfa, clover, cow-peas, cull-beans, corn-meal, etc.

In connection with cull-bean feeding it is suggested that salt is an appetizer and renders the food more palatable and it also possesses laxative qualities. For pen feeding it is stated that it is best to have the water content of the ration below the daily requirement, and then let the animal have access to water at will, or supply it regularly.

If the food is excessively sloppy, the pig is compelled to consume unusually large quantities of the ration in order to satisfy the body needs. This distends the stomach, unbalances the whole digestive system and makes a paunchy, ill formed animal, which at slaughtering time yields a very low per cent of profitable carcass.

Breaking Bad Stall Pullers.

A correspondent furnishes the Prairie Farmer with another plan for breaking horses that are inclined to pull and break their halter when fastened in the stall. Two straps are lightly attached to the two forelegs just above the knees. These are attached by a rope which passes through a ring in the stall. If a horse endeavors to go back suddenly he finds that the harder he pulls the greater the tendency to draw his forelegs from under him. A few attempts by even the worst halter puller and he will be broken of his vicious habit.

Feeding a Horse.

What does it cost to feed the work horse during the year? It is claimed that when timothy is worth $18 per ton; wheat bran, $17.50; corn, $22; dried brewers' grain, $17; and gluten meal, $23; per ton, that a horse can be fed during the six months when the hardest work is done, for $31. During the remaining six months the cost of feed is put at $24.10.

Remove Side Tusks of Pigs.

Not one farmer in 40, we presume, removes at birth the little side tusks of pigs and yet it is the right thing to do. With a thick glove on the left hand and a pair of nippers it is only a moment's work and it saves the old sow much needless pain and worry and saves the life of many a pig.

We often hear a good-tempered bull called the "pet of the farm," and children are allowed to play around him, and even ride him through the yards. This is dangerous. Many have been injured by trusting the bull too far. I have never yet seen a bull that I would trust behind my back, unless he was securely fastened.

It will require seven pounds of skim milk to equal one pound of lean beef for flesh-forming qualities.

OXEN BUILD THE RAILROADS.

As Well as Do Most of the Farmwork in Eastern Canada.

The ox as a beast of burden has about had his day with the American farmer. He is raised by wholesale, killed by wholesale and distributed through the world as beef, but he doesn't have to work.

Up in eastern Canada, however, he does a big stunt of work before he is eaten. In Nova Scotia, especially, oxen are still used for all sorts of farm work.

They plough the fields, haul the hay and apples and potatoes and cart in the firewood from the forests. They are slow, it is true, but there is time and to spare in those parts.

Of late the ox has been helping to build the railroads in Nova Scotia. He is found to be very useful in grading the roadbed, which calls for a lot of short haul work. The oxen are yoked in pairs and as many pairs can be used tandem as are necessary to any given job. They are patient and untiring.

Reads Like It's True.

A Stroud farmer on route one has taken out a patent on an electric motor fastened on a cow's back, the electricity being generated by a dynamo attached to the cow's tail, says the Stroud inventor. It strains the milk and hangs up the pail and strainer; a small phonograph accompanies the outfit which yells "So!" when the cow moves; if she kicks a hinged arm catches the milk can and slams her over the head with it.—Lincoln County (Okla.) Journal.

The Cold Bath.

The daily cold bath is an ideal spring tonic as well as one of the most important of all measures for preventing disease. Many a weary seeker after health would do well to throw away drug tonics and try the cold bath, taking care, however, to secure a good reaction. The result in the way of renewed life and energy would be surprising.—Good Health.

Robbery in China.

Armed robbery is still rife in the Kwelin district of China, despite the efforts of the authorities to suppress it. Over four hundred executions of offenders for this crime have taken place in this district alone during the last twelve months.

Fishing Rod Wedding.

All the guests at a wedding at South-end-by-the-Sea, England, brought fishing rods, and the bride and bridegroom, both members of the Scottish Angling Society, passed beneath an arch of fishing rods on leaving the church.

Numerous Friends.

M. Dutuit, who died in Paris in 1902, left a large part of his wealth to all those who could legally claim kinship with him. The court has just rejected the claims of the seven hundred and forty-seventh "friend."

Origin of the Rubberneck.

Women of the ivory coast, of Africa, lengthen their necks by wearing iron rings. Every year they put a new ring around the neck, which they can stretch so far that it is nothing unusual to find it as long as the face.

Dynamite.

Gelatine dynamites are more difficult to explode than the ordinary brands, and require quintuple force caps or double-strength fuses to develop the full force.

A Great Structure.

London has completed the steel structure of its great stadium where the Olympic games are to be held. It is designed to accommodate 70,000 spectators.

Newspapers in China.

The growth of public spirit in China is evidenced by the great number of newspapers which have sprung up since the close of the war with Japan.

The Lantern Fly.

Among the curious insects of the Malay peninsula is one called the lantern fly, which is remarkable for its sudden leaps made without the aid of its wings.

Britain's Fish.

The value of all kinds of fish landed in England and Wales in one year is over $35,000,000, and the number of men and boys employed over 40,000.

New York's Ferries.

There are 32 lines of ferries plying between Manhattan and nearby shores, carrying a daily average of 268,800 passengers.

A Giant Lobster.

A lobster caught at Cape, Me., measured 37½ inches from tip to tip and weighed minus one claw, 17½ pounds.

Persian Laughter.

In Persia the men who laughs is considered effeminate, but free license is given to female merriment.

After a few years of married life a fellow gets used to being woke up to be asked why he doesn't go to sleep.

The human eyes are rarely of equal power in the same person.

Memorial Day.

Flutter of flag and beat of drum
And the sound of marching feet,
And in a long procession the soldiers come
To the call of the bugles sweet.

And the marching soldiers stop at last
Where their sleeping comrades lie,
The men whose battles have long been fought,
Who dared for the land to die.

Children, quick with your gathered flowers,
Scatter them far and near;
They who were fathers and brothers once
Are peacefully resting here.

Flutter of banner and beat of drum
And the bugle's solemn call,
In grand procession the soldiers come—
And God is over us all!

Death Days of Pope and Voltaire.
May 30 is also the death day of two of the most famous sons of the eighteenth century—of Alexander Pope, the witty poet, and of that satirical Voltaire, who was poet, too, but also philosopher and historian.

Within eight days of the date when he had arrived in the world (May 22) fifty-six years earlier, Pope died of asthma at his country home at Twickenham, where now dwells that journalist-parliamentarian Henry Labouchere. It was the end of a life of contradictions—a mighty intellect in all its intonations and a temper waspish every other moment, he announced insensibility to that very criticism which actually hastened his death, a studied affection of superiority to those born great, yet boasting of nothing so much of his titled friends Swift and Bolingbroke, Gay and Prior, and Peterborough. This was "the great little Pope," who practically invented the poetic epigram, who wove the web of wisdom with the warp of wit into six poems which are more quoted than any other half dozen in the language, and who made his final exit from the stage of courtiers and critics on Memorial Day, 1744.

Francois Marie Arouet de Voltaire, who died thirty-four years after Pope, though on the same date, has come to be regarded as one of the enigmas of all time. Victor Hugo saw in him a poet, but also and to greater extent an apostle. Lord Brougham, on the other hand, scrawed him credit for reasoning power; to him Voltaire was but a witty scoffer. Carlyle, writing from the studios quiet of Chelsea, branded him with a single line: "That withered Pontiff of Encyclopaedism." And night-capped little Cowper summed him up in the couplet:
Lived long, wrote much,
Laughed heartily—and died.

Each phrase of this touches a keynote. Voltaire was eighty-four when he dropped his favorite Juvenal, turned his thin face to the wall, and fell asleep for the last time. He had written so much that no other author has shown himself so versatile and few so productive. He had laughed heartily, indeed, though according to Canon Kingsley it was out of sheer self-defense from the ardent folly all about him—and he had died, he too, on Memorial Day, 1778.

The Soldier's Heritage.
If ever the morning stars sang together and the sons of God shouted for joy, it was when this made a great free republic in fact as well as in deed. Cherish it, live for it, be prepared to die for it; nourish it so that it will endure, that it may be the faithful custodian to your children and their children after them; make it worthy of the generations who are going in the future to possess it. So, guarding this spirit, the circling centuries shall wheel above our country in all starry splendor, crowning it with the honors of age, without robbing it of the grace and beauty of youth. It shall stand, and at the last day, when the roll of the nations shall be called, when Egypt shall come up in the dusky garments of the night; Greece radiant in the glory of intellect.
England clad in the image of law and splendor of commerce; America shall come up robed in truth, sanctified with peace, girdled with the stars of the Union, and bright with the diadem of freedom.—Newton Booth.

AT THE CALL OF DUTY.

The American Soldier Perished that the American Nation Might Live.

At the call of duty as each understood it, they abandoned all hope and fruit of life, and cast all into that steady, ardent, deadly struggle for supremacy. How magnificent the sacrifice, how sublime the self-abnegation! As the springtime clothes with more than kingly raiment the length and breadth of the continent, so simultaneously came these flowers of the people's hearts to the work of the soldier. By day and by night, through forest and over desert, over mountains and swamps and rivers, suffering physical tortures not to be expressed in words, burned by summer suns, frozen by winter frosts, hungered and athirst, often half-clad and half-shod, wasted by disease and shrunken by unthought exposures, they crowded with emulation and posting eagerness to the banners of their choice, and in camp and hospital, in skirmish and set form of battle, in solitary outposts and in the hurly-burly of shot and shell, and the dust and smoke of fields encarnadined with the glorious blood of their youth, they came to death as to a feast, and perished that the American Nation might live. Who shall be heard to say that we who survive them, and all the generations yet to come, shall not continue forever to give them our grateful remembrances, and the tears of regret at their untimely taking off, and heap the choicest garlands that human hands can weave upon the blessed grass, beneath which they rest from their labors and await the revivelle of the archangel of the resurrection.—W. H. L. Barnes.

An Effect of Memorial Day.

One of the incidental effects of the observance of Memorial Day, but one which will survive long after the last veteran of the civil war has been laid in his grave, is the universal practice of decorating the graves of the dead. Formerly most cemeteries, especially in the country districts, were dreary and repellent in appearance, shunned alike by children in the day time and by superstitious adults at night. People usually visited cemeteries or graveyards, as they were commonly called, because they had to, rather than because they liked to.

Now all this is changed. Cemeteries at the memorial season, have become veritable flower gardens, and this applies to the plots in which no soldiers are buried quite as much as to those in which the veterans have found their last resting place. All cemeteries and all graves are better kept and more frequently visited than before the introduction of this custom. Nothing has done so much to relieve the popular mind of much of the sense of gloom which formerly attended the resting place of the dead.

The flowers that are laid on the graves on Decoration or other memorial days fade, but those that are planted, bloom and brighten the enclosures all the season through. The majority of people no longer regard a visit to the cemetery with dread, but plant these tributes of affection to their friends who have gone with a far more cheerful feeling regarding death and the grave than before the establishment of this now universal custom.

Disbanding the Army.

It was on May 23, 1865, that the men who had settled the double question of slavery and secession began their famous march down Pennsylvania Avenue from the Capitol to the White House, where they passed in review before President Johnson and General Grant. At their head was Sheridan's cavalry, escorting three corps of the Army of the Potomac, commanded by Meade. The next day four corps of Sherman's army—65,000 men in all, who had marched from Atlanta to the sea—followed their brilliant commander down the great avenue that links the legislative department to the executive.

The lapse of years more than the average life of a generation, yet thousands of men who marched then will march to-day.

When the grand review began on May 23, 1865, the volunteer armies of the United States numbered a million men. By August 7 more than 640,000 had been mustered out, and by November 15 fully 800,000 soldiers had returned to the pursuits of peace. No other nation in the history of the world ever accomplished such a revolution from a military to a civilian state.

When the great military achievements of the United States are recalled to-day the disbandment of the volunteer army must be counted among the greatest—or, as Goldwin Smith once described it, as "the most truly magnificent and wisest thing in history."

Collection at Gettysburg.

The States have spent $2,000,000 for regimental monuments at Gettysburg, where the work has been going on for twenty-five years. Where such a memorial was to be put up the State contributed a certain amount of money and the survivors of the regiment furnished the balance.

With the exception of Gettysburg, all of the battlefield parks are very new, and far from complete, the work is being actively prosecuted and hundreds of thousands of Americans who visit the historic fighting grounds are inspired with an ardent love of their country and an eager desire to serve it by contemplating imperishable structures which record the deeds of those who fought for glory and for freedom.

THEIR HONEY EXPEDITION.

Franks Indulged in by Yankee Boys to Outwit the Farmer.

Every man in our company had a weakness for honey," said a veteran of Company A 55th Illinois Infantry to a group of comrades in recalling incidents of war days. "In fact," he continued, "they loved honey to such an extent that they frequently risked their lives to procure it. We had moved down into Memphis from a position we had been holding on the outskirts of the town for several days, and on our way in we discovered a farmhouse owned by a Southern gentleman who had little or no use for Lincoln's soldiers. This man was a bee fancier, and had an abundance of honey in his storehouse. When we learned this we went up and tried to purchase some of it. 'No, sah,' he declared, 'Lincoln's soldiers can't have any of my honey; no, sah!' Then he turned and walked away, leaving our boys standing in the road.

"Well, that night a raid was planned by the boys. They first drew lots to see who should compose the expedition. When four men had been chosen they laid their plans. First of all they were to black their faces, put on ragged clothes and then go to the farmhouse and get the honey. On their arrival they were met a big bloodhound. A shot from one of the guns silenced the animal. Then the owner put in an appearance. He was seized, his gun taken away, placed in the center of his back, and then his hands tied behind him and over the gun. Then he was bucked up to a tree and left there. They boys then got into the honey. To make matters safe, they left a small kettle of it in front of Captain Dave Stewart's tent. The next day the owner of the honey came into camp and declared that our company was nothing but a set of thieves.

"Captain Stewart became indignant and asked the man if he could identify the thieves. He replied that he could. Then the entire company had to run the gantlet, but as the men now wore the blue uniforms and were not blacked up, he failed to identify them. When he had left, Captain Stewart said: 'Boys, don't let your fondness for honey get the better of you again.'

Victory for the Blue and Grey.

Unlike any other conflict in history, both sides won in the war of 1861-65. To the North it brought the triumph of "liberty and union, now and forever, one and inseparable." To the South it brought emancipation from conditions which threw it outside of the current of the world's interests and activities, and it has resulted in a social and industrial expansion greater than has been achieved by the rest of the country. The real victor at Appomattox was the South and not the North.

This year on Memorial Day there will be a greater fraternization of the old soldiers of both sides than has been seen before. We of the North and of the South can now unite in decorating the graves of the soldiers of both sides. The war's passions and prejudices have been buried so deeply that no issue or exigency of politics can ever resurrect them. Its memories are those of valor and American manhood on each side, in a cause which each believed to be right.

To the whole country this Memorial Day has a larger significance than ever before. It will arouse a greater interest than was ever excited in the past. Death has been busy among the veterans during the year, and many additional graves will have to be decorated. Floral tributes in greater volume than had been seen thus far are in preparation for the holiday. Below as well as above Mason and Dixon's old line the occasion will have a larger interest than has been aroused heretofore.

Memorial Day.

Memorial Day holds a peculiar place among those set apart for special purposes by the people of this country. Though consecrated to the memory of those who fell on the field of battle, it yet is not the "Miserere" which is sung. The note of thanksgiving sounds beneath that of sorrow and the springtime awakening is significant of the new life and glory of the Nation.

Credit to Clara Barton.

Much credit is due to Clara Barton, founder of the American National Red Cross, for the identification of Northern dead in Southern graves.

DANGERS OF OCEAN CABLES.

Animals Which are a Constant Menace to Submarine Lines.

The vicissitudes of a submarine cable are many, says the "Magazine of Commerce." It may be torn by an anchor, crushed by a rock or seriously damaged by a coral reef such as abound in the tropics.

Some of the growths often found on a cable tend gradually to decap the iron sheathing wires.

Then, again, a cable sometimes scyvers by a seaquake. It may be fatally attacked by the snout of a sawfish or by the spike of a swordfish. But perhaps the little animal that makes itself most objectionable from the cable engineer's standpoint is the insignificant little teredo nautilus.

This little beast is intensely greedy where gutta-percha is concerned, working its way there between the iron wires and between the serving yarns. The silica in the outer cable compound tends to defeat the teredo's efforts at making a meal of the core, and this defeat is further effected by the core being enveloped in a thin sap of brass.

But where the bottom is known to be badly blasted with these little monsters of the deep the insulator is often composed of india rubber which has no attraction for the teredo and possesses a toughness, moreover, which is less suited for its boring tool than the comparatively cheese-like gutta-percha, which it perforates with the greatest ease.

Terrors to Silk Hats.

Any one who has ever caught a glimpse into the recesses of the average cloak room at a function where there were many men present must give a sigh for the days when it was fashionable to wear a crush hat. To see one of the attendants making his headlong way through one of the aisles with a bundle of coats over his shoulder, leaving a trail of silk hats knocked off their pegs and lying on the floor, is to wonder how any man ever gets his own tile back and also throws some light on why a silk hat looks so badly after it is returned to its owner from the tender "care" of the cloakroom berserker. Carefulness seems to be a thing entirely unknown to one of those hobbler-hoys.

Flying Machines.

Prof. Carl Barus of Brown University offers the suggestion that the desired maximum of power, combined with minimum weight in an engine designed to drive a flying machine, might possibly be found by employing, instead of steam or gas, an explosive energy, utilized by a modification of the rocket principle. The problem, as he points out would be to reduce and control the rapid expenditure of energy. This, he thinks, might be accomplished by the cold storage of chemical substances which combine with violent expansive force at normal temperatures, but are inert under the influence of intense cold.—Youth's Companion.

Headache from Eyestrain.

Basing himself on his records of nearly 1,300 eye examinations, Dr. S. W. S. Toms claims that 90 per cent of all those suffering from reflex or neuralgic headaches have ocular defects. Over 600 of the patients examined were altogether unaware of their defect. Fully half the cases were of only slight refractive errors or muscular unbalance, and it is in these cases in which ciliary spasm is the direct factor in causing headache in persons whose occupations call for near vision that accommodative asthenopia results.—Family Doctor.

Where He Stood.

The woman was showing the artist her diamond pin.

"How much is it worth?" he asked.

"A hundred and fifty dollars," she answered. "What would you do if you had a diamond pin that was worth a hundred dollars?"

"There's one thing certain," he said. "I wouldn't have the diamond pin."

Fireless Stoves.

Fireless stoves, or self-cookers, as they are variously known have been in use in Germany for a number of years. These cookers are used as follows: After a thorough heating the food to be stewed or boiled is placed inside the box, sealed and left for a sufficient time, when it is opened, and the food cooked by the retained heat, is ready to serve.

Bank of England's First Safe.

In the Bank of England's museum may be seen the old oak chest which was the Old Lady of Threadneedle Street's first strong-room. It is a little larger than a common sea man's chest and in this the bank stored its cash, notes and valuable papers.—Strand Magazine.

As to Butter.

Great Britain consumes more butter than any other nation. The average per head is 13 pounds per year, as against eight pounds in Germany, four pounds in France and two pounds in Russia.

"Stung."

The word "stung" has now come to mean such a variety of things in the vernacular that the busy little fly, the wasp, the hornet, and their ilk, have especial need to think twice before they act.

HAMMERED

BY Herbert Maxwell

The Stock Exchange functionaries were seen approaching the stands from which the announcement of failure is made, and the usual awed hush instantly fell upon the turmoil of the markets.

"It is my duty to announce that George Mansfield Hamilton has failed to meet his engagements."

George Hamilton was sitting in his one-room office making out his statement of accounts for the committee. He was quite alone, for he had already known his failure to be inevitable the evening before, and had promptly paid off and dismissed his clerk and office boy.

"She Found a Man Seated at a Table." He had written Miss Baagert Penton, informing her of the impending catastrophe, and suggested that she and he should consider their engagement at an end.

While he was poring over his accounts and trying to draw up a clear statement of his position the door opened and Margaret came in. "Am I bothering you, George? I expect I am, because we are not engaged any more, apparently. Yes, I've had your horrid letter. No, I don't want to discuss it. If I'm released, I'm released, and there's nothing more to be said.

"No, you're not bothering me, Margaret, because I should like you to understand exactly what's happened. I have not been cheating or defrauding people and I think I may fairly claim to be considered the victim of undeserved misfortune. I have been let in by one of my clients."

"Explain to me exactly what that means," George.

"It means that my client has bought shares he can't pay for."

"Then how very silly of you not to have had the money from him before you bought the shares!"

"Quite so; I can see that now. But that is not the way one usually does business on the Stock Exchange. One has to trust one's clients."

"You ought to know them very well before you trust them I should think. Did you know this one very well?"

"His name is Robert Anderson and he lives in rooms at 90 Russell Square."

"How did you get to know him?"

"He was introduced to me by another client."

"Who was that?"

"Hargreave Fenner."

"And I introduced Hargreave Fenner to you because he was very rich, and seemed as though he must be a most useful and valuable client."

"He has been. He has brought me a lot of good business."

"At all events you wouldn't have bought shares for him if Hargreave Fenner hadn't said he was all right?"

"Certainly not."

"Then it seems to me that Hargreave Fenner ought to pay. Have you seen him?"

"No; he's out of town. But Robert Anderson wired to him for help, and the reply was that he couldn't manage it, and was very sorry."

"Is it true he couldn't manage it?"

"Not strictly true, of course. He could lend me the money I want to put me straight, over and over again without feeling it if he cared to."

"Is it true he is out of town?"

"That I can't tell you."

"Thank you, George; now I understand everything, and on the whole I am inclined to think that you are the victim of undeserved misfortune, and that the blame for your being hammered really rests on me."

"Upon you, Margaret."

"Robert Anderson let you in, Hargreave Fenner had sort of guaranteed Robert Anderson. I had sort of guaranteed Hargreave Fenner, and therefore I have sort of let you in. That's how the argument works out. No, I don't suppose I shall be able to do anything, but I'm going to try. How much money do you want to put you straight?"

"Roughly speaking five thousand pounds."

"Five thousand pounds is what Anderson ought to have paid you?"

"No; nearer ten thousand. But I have some money of my own, and only actually want about five to put me straight."

"Then if you don't use your own money you want ten thousand?"

"Correct, Margaret."

And Margaret Penton nodded and smiled and left as abruptly as she had entered.

She found a man seated at a table on which his elbows rested. His head was bowed forward and supported on his hands. At his side was a black bottle which was three-quarters empty. Obviously, Mr. Robert Anderson had been tipping.

"Ah, Mr. Anderson," she said, with her usual directness, "you have been trying to drown your qualms of conscience in drink, and you haven't succeeded. You are at this moment suffering poignant remorse for having aided Mr. Hargreave Fenner to ruin Mr. Hamilton. You've been genuinely crying, haven't you, now?"

"Now, please tell me all about it. Did he tell you why he wanted to ruin him? I don't suppose so, but I'll tell you. He wanted to marry me, and knowing that I am already engaged to Mr. Hamilton, he thought by ruining him he would prevent the match and so get a chance of marrying me himself. Wasn't it mean?"

"I regret, madam—I regret extremely; that you should have found me in this disarray," he said, with an indistinct assumption of some of his old dignity, "for there were times not long ago, when I should have been able to receive you in a manner worthy of your beauty and your social position. I am not what I was, madam."

"You have already helped me a great deal," cried Margaret gayly. "And now about our business. You know you bought certain shares on the Stock Exchange through Mr. Hamilton, don't you, at a cost of nearly ten thousand pounds? I am certain you can remember if you try."

"I remember perfectly, madam—perfectly," said Anderson, after a successful struggle at recollection. "Hargreave Fenner advised me to buy them. He said they were a sure thing. He said I should be able to buy out of the profits more liquor than I could use in a hundred years. I remember it distinctly."

"But there are no profits, Mr. Anderson and you haven't paid for the shares, and you owe Mr. Hamilton ten thousand pounds, which he has had to pay and it has ruined him."

"Dear me! Ten thousand pounds! And Hargreave Fenner told me—"

"Yes, that's it. Hargreave Fenner used you as a catspaw to ruin Mr. Hamilton because he wanted to prevent my marrying him in order that he might marry me himself. And it was a horridly mean trick, and I hate him, and you must help me to make him pay the money. I am sure you understand," cried Margaret breathlessly.

And Robert Anderson did understand. "We will go to Hargreave Fenner and talk to him, madam," he said, with extraordinary dignity, and Margaret thought it was the most touching thing she had ever witnessed in her life to see the tragic efforts he made to smarten himself up and render himself fit to accompany her.

Then he offered her his arm and escorted her downstairs with the air of a courtier escorting a queen, and helped her into the brougham, and so they were quickly whisked away to Mr. Hargreave Fenner's luxuriously appointed flat.

"Hargreave Fenner, I regret to have to state that you are a low blackguard. You are even a lower blackguard than I am, and I can think of nothing worse to say about you—than that this lady has made me understand why you recommended me to buy certain shares from Mr. Hamilton and why you told Mr. Hamilton that I was all right for payment."

"So now you've got the option of having your head broken with a poker, and your dirty mean trick exposed to your own and this lady's friends, or of writing a check for ten thousand pounds in favor of Mr. Hamilton, and handing it over to this lady to give to him. Choose!" And Robert Anderson advanced upon Hargreave Fenner, and whirled the poker aloft.

And Hargreave Fenner seemed to realize that this was no time for temporizing. He produced his check book and wrote his check, and Margaret and Robert Anderson fed with it in the motor brougham, and gave it to George Hamilton who was still worrying over the statement of accounts he was drawing up for the committee.

And George Hamilton flew around to the various firms who were his creditors and paid them in full, and the creditors in their turn rushed into the house and reported the facts to the committee.

And the result of all this flying and rushing was that George Hamilton's case constituted a record, for while many men are hammered and subsequently reinstated, he enjoyed the unique distinction of being hammered and reinstated on the same day.

Mr. and Mrs. George Hamilton are the happiest of happy couples, and not least happy in the knowledge that they have weaned their friend Robert Anderson from his besetting weakness and converted him into a useful member of society.

QUEER ANCIENT CUSTOMS.

Touching a Suicide's Hand Was Thought a Cure for Sickness.

In former times it was a common notion that, if a sick person, could only touch the hand of a suicide, he or she would be cured.

This superstition was especially common in the west of England; in Cornwall, touching a suicide's hand was said to have once cured a young man who had been afflicted with many tumors from his birth. A similar superstition regarding the touch of executed criminals has been widely prevalent and has often been recorded.

Robert Hunt, in his "Romances of the West of England," says that he once saw a young woman led to the scaffold at Newgate to have a wen touched by the hand of a man who had just been executed.

At Northampton of old the hangman is said to have had a regular fee for according a similar "privilege" to the sufferers from like disorders. Even the coffin of a suicide may have curative value.

There is a Devonshire belief to the effect that, if any one suffering from disease can manage to throw a white handkerchief on such a coffin at the time of its interment, the disease will vanish as the handkerchief decays.

Much superstitious value has been attached to the knots of the ropes used either by a suicide or in the execution of a criminal.

Clean Your Glasses.

You who wear spectacles must understand that you cannot see to advantage through greasy lenses. The common habit is to wipe eye-glasses or spectacles with a silk handkerchief carried in the pocket. The finger tips always exude a delicate oil. This gets on the handkerchief and from the handkerchief goes on to the lenses. Presently there is a smear of grease and people complain of dimness of vision. Drop the handkerchief; get some very fine tissue paper cut into small sections, wipe your glasses with two or three pieces and throw them away.

Shoddy.

Shoddy! The word stands for everything that is mean, and contemptible, false, and make-believe. Yet the product known in the world of business as shoddy is one of the most useful inventions of the nineteenth century, and deserves to rank with steam and electricity, anesthetics, the bicycle and other discoveries that have made life worth living, improved our health, and lengthened our days.—World's Work.

Newspapers in The U. S.

In 1810, nearly a century ago, there were 35 newspapers in the United States. In 1905 there were 26,422 printing and publishing houses in the country. These represented $385,008,604 of invested capital and turned out products valued at $496,061,137. The growth for the five years since 1900 doubled the growth of the ten years previous.

Right Handed Men.

According to authorities from 85 to 95 per cent of the men in civilized lands are right-handed and have developed the low right shoulder. This, however, is no new phenomenon, for even the ancient Greek sculptors had noticed it and posed their subjects so as to make them appear more symmetrical.

Peat as Fuel.

There is a strong organization at work in this country developing the use of peat as fuel. It is now utilizing many acres of swamp lands which are being reclaimed for agricultural purposes. The by-products of the industry are very promising.

A Prosperous Town.

Waycross, Ga., with a population of 9,000, has no poorhouse, nine out of ten of the white population own their homes and 93 per cent of the children attend school. The saloon license has annually for the last 16 years been fixed at $32,000.

New York City's Banks.

Twenty years ago the fact was made much of that New York City possessed one hundred banks and trust companies. Today, however, the greater city has no fewer than 212 institutions of this character.

Greatest Heat and Cold.

The greatest heat is never found on the equator, but some 10 degrees to the north, while more severe cold has been registered in Northern Siberia than has been found near the Pole.

Rolling Stones.

Taken in Marriage.

Men of talent generally fix upon ignorant and stupid women for their wives; while stupid men almost invariably alight upon clever women.

English Predominates.

Two-thirds of all the letters which pass through the postoffices of the world are written by and sent to people who speak English.

Taking into Consideration.

Taking into consideration the proportionate weight, the wing of a bird is twenty times stronger than the arm of a man.

Wonderful Eczema Cure.

"Our little boy had eczema for five years," writes N. A. Adams, Henrietta, Pa. "Two of our home doctors said the case was hopeless, his lungs being affected. We then employed other doctors, but no benefit resulted. By chance we read about Electric Bitters; bought a bottle and soon noticed improvement. We continued this medicine until several bottles were used, when our boy was completely cured." Best of all blood medicines and body building health tonics. Guaranteed at F. T. Atwater's, King Ferry, and J. S. Banker's, Genoa, drug stores. 50c.

Every farmer and business man should use envelopes with his name printed on the corner. It insures the return of the letter if not delivered. One hundred fine envelopes printed for 75 cents. Order by mail or call at The Tribune office.

How Many Opium Cures

Being Distributed Free by a New York Society. Cooperating with missions in Malaysia, the Windsor Laboratories of New York have secured a supply of the wonderful combrum plant, which has done so much to revolutionize the treatment of the opium habit. ### An Attractive Number.

The Ladies' World for June is the most attractive number of this periodical that we have yet seen, and there is small wonder at its popularity when so much that is good is offered for so little. There are three notable special articles in the number, one of them describing the Bryan family life at Fairview, and another the growing up of Ethel Roosevelt, the young lady of the White House, while the third has some remarkable pictures showing the ways of a bird with its young. The fiction is unusually good, a new serial story, called Rosamond the Second, by Mary Mears, being the chief feature. The household departments of this publication seem to us more practical than those in any other of the women's magazines, and no doubt they are thoroughly appreciated by the home-workers, who will also see a number of very pretty fashions for all members of the family, with good plain instructions in dressmaking. The make-up and illustrations throughout this number are excellent.—[New York: Fifty cents a year.]

some freight.

The volume of freight sent by water from New York can better be realized when one considers the fact that 1,350 tons are loaded on ships every hour.

Speed of the Falcoa.

Trained falcons to carry despatches in time of war have been tested in the Russian army. Their speed is four times as rapid as that of carrier pigeons.

In Germany.

In Germany, all workmen, servants and clerks above 16 and getting less than $500 a year are obliged by law to insure against old age.

Blondes and Brunettes.

Statistics show that though fair haired people are a rule less strong than those who have dark hair, yet the former live longer than the latter.

Marry Young.

Marriage at an early age is frequent in Mexico. Recently a boy of 16 and a girl of 14, were married in the capital.

Every year there are said to be 500 deaths from hunger and destitution in London.

A Card of Thanks.

To the Editor:

Will you please convey our sincere thanks to your readers for their generous co-operation in our efforts to secure work for the unemployed men of New York City?

Through the medium of the newspapers we have, up to the present time, succeeded in placing over 1,000 men—a success unprecedented, and which would have been altogether beyond our reach, were it not for the free insertion of our notices, so generously accorded by newspaper men throughout the country.

On behalf of the workless men we beg to express our gratitude to the newspapers for such valuable aid, as well as for the personal sympathy and monetary help so kindly sent us by the editors themselves.

Very sincerely yours,

JOHN C. EARL,

Financial Secretary.

Free Labor Bureau of the Bowery Mission, 92 Bible House, New York City.

Woman's Home Companion.

Five hundred photographs of President Roosevelt, all assembled in one big double page picture, 18 by 19 inches in size, is an extraordinary feature of the June Woman's Home Companion. The five hundred photographs were taken in almost every state in the Union, at all periods of Roosevelt's public career, and show his wonderful versatility and energy.

In the June Companion appear the first chapters of Harvey J. O'Higgins' great story, "A Grand Army Man," based on Belasco's famous play of the same name, in which David Warfield starred all last winter. Other fiction in this delightful summer magazine is by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, Zona Gale, Charlotte Perkins Gilman, Temple Bailey and Clinton Dangerfield.

Kellogg Durand, who of late has spent much time in Russia, tells the dramatic and thrilling story of one of the bravest girls of the Russian Revolution. Margeret E. Sanger writes on the American woman as a social engineer. Dr. Edward Everett Hale devotes his monthly page to some working rules of life. Grace Margaret Gould, the fashion expert, gives many practical suggestions for summer dressing. Sam Loyd's Own Puzzle Page is a mine of interest for the puzzle lover.
