

PASTURING SHEEP IN NATIONAL FOREST.

THE BRIGHT GIRLS OF ELMHURST.

By ROBERT DONNELL.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

ELMHURST academy, coeducational, is not a renowned seat of learning, nor is the charming village which holds it a university town. The institution, however, is of excellent reputation among secondary schools, and the village is known widely for its culture and advanced social condition. But the feature which has given it almost a national reputation is its remarkable endowment of shade. It lies embowered in an overarching canopy of greenery so dense and symmetrical in its outline that the fortunate village has been transformed into a veritable beauty spot, the theme of poets and singers, the inspiration of the artist and the delight of the casual tourist who steps aside from the broader highways to visit this charming New England byway.

How Elmhurst academy acquired its embowment of shade was told to a tourist who remained a few days in the village last summer by an elderly resident.

"Fifty years ago," she said, "I was a student at Elmhurst academy. Then, as now, both boys and girls attended. But in some respects the academy was vastly different from its present aspect. For instance, instead of having plenty of shade trees the grounds were absolutely bare of trees. It was a desolate looking campus, I can assure you.

"That was long before Arbor day became an institution in this country but nevertheless some of us girls conceived a plan whereby our beloved school became a shady bower. For several sessions there had been more or less talk of setting out trees or planting them, but nothing came of it. We girls—it was just fifty years ago last April—tried to induce the young men to get to work at odd times and plant trees about the grounds. They were too lazy apparently.

"Finally the girls called a caucus in one of the academy class rooms one afternoon. It was a secret session. A few nights afterward sixty-five of us met on the grounds at 10 o'clock, carrying spades and mattocks. We also carried a stock of elm seedlings and those of other varieties of trees. Since our caucus we had been reading up on tree culture. We set to work planting the little trees. We had our plan all carefully mapped out. The rows and groups as you see them now were laid out on a diagram, from which we worked at the direction of our chosen leader, who, I am a little proud to say, was myself.

"After we had been at work an hour or so the boys discovered us, though we were trying hard not to be visible or audible. About a hundred of them gathered about the academy grounds and made the night lively with catcalls and laughter at our expense. The boys offered various suggestions, all of which we rejected with scorn. We told them they should be ashamed of themselves for not having taken the initiative, and since we were amply prepared to do the work, and do it right, we wanted none of their tardy co-operation.

"We even refused to let them see us home. They predicted that none of the trees would come up, but our planting was a grand success, as you see. Of course it took years and years for the trees to grow large enough to make good shade, but the result of our night's work now speaks for itself."

A Ranger's Qualifications.
A forester's examination includes tests of his physical powers, of his ability to ride, shoot, handle pack horses and take care of himself in the woods and also of his knowledge of surveying, scaling timber and other subjects incidental to the proper discharge of his duties.

Laws Must be Enforced.

To-day I rose at four o'clock
To scan the morning sky
For Halley's comet, which I read
Was scheduled to pass by.
I saw it from the garden fence,
But, ah! its head was pale;
Its ancient brilliancy was lost,
And drooping was its tail.
"O, comet, why so pale and wan?"
I cried in accents pleading.
It said, "Just now an airship cop Arrested me for speeding!"
—Gertrude McKenzie in Woman's Home Companion.

"Like souls that balance joy and pain,
With tears and smiles from heaven again
The maiden Spring upon the plain
Came in a sunlit fall of rain.
In crystal vapour everywhere,
Blue isles of heaven laugh'd between,
And far, in forest deeps unseen,
The topmost elm tree gather'd green
From draughts of balmy air.

Sometimes the linnet piped his song;
Sometimes the throistle whistled strong;
Sometimes the sparrow wheel'd along,
Hush'd all the groves for fear of wrong;
By grassy capes with fuller sound
In curves the yellowing river ran,
And drooping chestnut buds began
To spread into the perfect fan,
—Tennyson.

Watkins Glen.

The United States Geological survey has just issued a new folio (No. 169) of the geologic atlas of the United States, describing and mapping an area in south-central New York called the Watkins Glen-Ostatonk district. This area covers about 1,770 square miles in Chemung, Tompkins, Tioga and adjacent counties and includes the cities or towns of Elmira, Ithaca, Owego and Watkins and part of Waverly. The authors of the folio are H. S. Williams and R. S. Tarr, professors at Cornell university, and E. M. Kindle, of the Geological survey.

The text of the folio discusses the topography, the geologic strata and structure, and the igneous rocks. The glacial deposits and the results of glacial action are described, and a chapter on the geologic history outlines the changes that have taken place in the area from the earliest known geologic time to the present. The mode of origin of the picturesque gorges and many other striking topographic features of this region has been a theme of much discussion among geologists, particularly as to the part played by ice and water. Professor Tarr considers in detail many of these features and presents the latest scientific judgment concerning their origin.

A chapter on the economic geology of the region includes accounts of the deposits that are available for use, of the underground and surface waters, and of the soils and forests.

The folio contains six topographic and geologic maps and thirty seven illustrations, including geologic sections and half-tone plates. It can be obtained from the director of the survey at Washington in either folio or octavo form. The size of the folio is about 18 by 22 inches (the size of the maps); that of the octavo (242 pages) is about 6 by 9 inches, the maps being folded within a pocket. The price of the folio in either edition is 25 cents.—Government Reports.

Needs of Outside Interest.

"Only the woman with useful interests outside her daily routine of homely duties in her home can escape the pitfalls for the devoted wife and mother," says Isabel Wilder in Woman's Home Companion for May. "The woman who lives only in the lives of her husband and children, and sees the world only in the relation it bears to them, is the woman to whom in some form her children and husband must sacrifice themselves. If during the years her children need her constant care she finds in that her sole reason for being, in the years to follow, when they need her care no longer, she will find she has not the wisdom of a wide experience and the serene quality for companionship that happy self-expression alone can give, and which would make her both needed and wanted in their later lives. The dependent woman has always that quality of fear that makes the jealous and exacting wife and mother who sees in every new relationship of husband or child a menace to her place in their lives and affections.

"The independent woman is the woman who lives by means of her own resources of 'mind, body and estate,' who finds through well-trained powers, always at her command for service to her family or society, a serenity and poise which make her fit for the highest and sweetest companionships and the most ideal home and social life. If these are denied her a place will always be found waiting her where useful service with wisdom and calm capability is needed."

Mosher—Stamp.

The wedding of Miss Jane Stamp, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Stamp, of Aurora, and Mr. J. Howard Mosher, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson Mosher, of Poplar Ridge, took place at the home of the bride's parents at Aurora on Wednesday, May 4.

The house was very prettily decorated for the happy event, ferns, apple blossoms, lilacs, tulips, and other spring blossoms being used in quantities. The corner of the parlor, where the bridal party stood during the ceremony, was banked with apple blossoms and ferns.

Miss Blanche Smith played the wedding march from "Lohengrin," and Rev. G. P. Sewall, pastor of the Presbyterian church of Aurora, performed the ceremony, which took place at 4 o'clock. The bride was attended by Miss Myrtle Tompkins of Newfield, and Mr. Chas. Stamp, brother of the bride, acted as best man. The bride's gown was of white messaline silk and she carried a bouquet of white roses and carnations. The bridesmaid wore pale blue lansdowne and carried white carnations.

After receiving the congratulations and best wishes of the guests, the bride threw her bouquet into the assembled company and it was caught by Miss Edith Hunter of Genoa.

Cateress Smith of Aurora served a wedding supper to the company of eighty-three people.

The bride was the recipient of many beautiful and useful gifts, including sets of silver, rugs, linen, set of china dishes, tables, couch, and many smaller gifts.

Mr. and Mrs. Mosher left on the 7:20 train from Aurora for a wedding trip, and on their return will go to Ludlowville, where Mr. Mosher is employed in the Ford store, and where they will at once go to housekeeping.

The young couple have the best wishes of many friends for a happy and prosperous life together.

—Charles Warren arrived home Friday last on a three weeks' furlough. He is now spending a few days with Rochester friends. The "Connecticut" is at present at Hampton Roads, having just come up from Cuban waters.
—A large congregation listened attentively to the sermon on "The Common People," delivered by Rev. T. J. Searis in the Presbyterian church Sunday morning last. It was an exceedingly fine sermon and many expressions of appreciation were heard.
—Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, president of the Georgia W. C. T. U., who is said to be "the finest platform speaker since Frances E. Willard," will speak in the Lyceum Theatre in Ithaca on Sunday, May 15, at 3:30 p. m., and in the First M. E. Church at 7:30 p. m. Admission free.
—Lima Beans, Peas, Popcorn, and Beans for planting at Hagin's Grocery, 401f
—The York hotel at Cortland, a large, four-story brick structure, was almost totally destroyed by fire, late Monday afternoon. The fire is thought to have started from a spark from a plumber's outfit, as some men were at work repairing the roof. The building and contents were insured for $25,000 which will not cover the loss.
—Superintendent of Schools Alfred C. Thompson of Auburn, who has held the position for the past five years, has resigned to accept the principalship of the Brockport State Normal school at the beginning of the next school year. He will succeed Dr. Charles T. MacFarlane, who has held the position of principal at the Normal school for the past eight years. The latter resigned a month ago to accept a place in New York.

—The police of Auburn have been instructed to confiscate toy pistols for shooting caps wherever found in the hands of children. The city ordinances forbid the sale of the pistols, and violations will be followed by the arrest of the offenders.
—The State Department of Health has reported that the cause of the recent typhoid fever epidemic at Moravia was contaminated water supply. All of the patients are recovering nicely, with the exception of Mrs. W. P. Parker, who has been critically ill for several days.
Dr. J. W. Whitbeck, dentist, Genoa, N. Y., is prepared to do painless extracting of teeth by the use of Sleep Vapor or Somnoform, the latest and safest anaesthetic known, which can be had at his office administered by a physician. He also has for extracting the best preparation for hypodermic; and also a local application for extracting children's teeth, perfectly harmless. In fact, everything in the dental line can be found at his office. Charges as reasonable as in the city or elsewhere, consistent with first-class work.
—"Here is a practical demonstration of the saying that every man ought to have his name printed on his envelopes," said a postmaster pointing to three or four letters held for postage. "Any man is likely to put a letter in the post-office without mailing it. With a card on the corner of the envelope we can stamp it and collect the postage when the writer comes in. We don't know who dropped those letters into the box and must hold them until we write to the person addressed and they send us the postage. That is the rule of the postoffice department."

—At the Fire Association fair last December, some eatables were sold and the dishes have not yet been returned to their owners. Will those having such dishes kindly return them to Mrs. Brightman, as she has had frequent inquiries regarding them.
—A new game law provides that book agents may be killed from October 1st to September 1st; spring poets from March 1st to June 1st; scandal mongers, April 1st to February 1st; umbrella borrowers, August 1st to November 1st; and from February 1st to May 1st, while every man who accepts a paper two years but when the bill is presented says: "I never ordered it," may be killed on sight without reserve.—Ex.
The best place to buy Wall Paper is at Smith's.
—Weston, the veteran long distance walker, did not reach New York on Friday last as was expected, owing to an accident to his ankle. He arrived at the end of his 3,500 mile trip on Monday at 3:10 p. m., having completed the journey in the record-breaking time of 77 days. He was in excellent spirits, and was greeted by an immense throng of people.
—Senator Gore of Oklahoma made an offer recently to pay the expense of a trip to Washington next winter for the Oklahoma boy who raises the largest crop of corn on an acre of ground. The conditions are that the boy must be under sixteen years old and must have done all the work himself. The original offer read for boys, but the senator had two letters from girls asking permission to take part in the contest, and he wrote them that they would be considered as contestants and given the same chance as the boys; also that he would be as glad to see a girl win as one of the boys.

The committee reported that they found "no evidence sufficient to prefer charges against Mr. King for any cause whatever." It is thought that Mr. King, who had resigned the pastorate, will again take it up.
—Rev. Henry H. Jessup, a widely known Presbyterian missionary of Beirut, Syria, died on April 28. He had been in the foreign field since 1855, and the great advance of educational and missionary work in Syria during his residence there, was due to his efforts. He is survived by two daughters, both of whom live in Syria, Miss Anna Jessup, who is a missionary, and Mrs. Day, who is the wife of a professor in the Syrian Protestant college at Beirut.

TRUXTON KING

duke saw that he had forgotten the rehearsed speech and smiled benignly as he stepped forward and kissed the hand that had been extended somewhat uncertainly.
"My most respectful homage to your majesty. The felicitations of my emperor and the warmest protestations of friendship from his people."
With this as a prologue he engaged himself in the ever pleasurable task of delivering a long congratulatory address. After five minutes of high sounding platitudes he again turned to the prince. It was then that he received his first shock.

Prince Robin was sound asleep. His head was slipping sideways along the satin back of the big chair, and his chin was very low in the laces at his neck. The grand duke coughed emphatically, cleared his throat and grew very red in the face.
The court of Graustark was distinctly dismayed.
"His majesty appears to have—ahem—gone to sleep," remarked the grand duke tartly, interrupting himself to address the prime minister.
"He is very tired, your excellency," said Count Halfont, very much distressed. "Pray consider what he has been through during the—"

"Ah, my dear count, do not apologize for him. I quite understand. Ahem! Ahem!" Still, he was very red in the face.
"I will awaken him, your excellency," said the prime minister, edging toward the throne.
"Not at all, sir!" protested the visitor. "Permit him to have his sleep out, sir. I will not have him disturbed. Who am I that I should defeat the claims of nature? It is my pleasure to wait until his majesty's nap is over. Then he may dismiss us, but not until we have cried 'Long live the prince!'"

For awhile they stood in awkward silence. This notable gathering of men and women. Then the prime minister in hushed tones suggested that it would be eminently proper under the circumstances for all present to be seated. He was under the impression that his serene highness would sleep long and soundly.
Stiff backed and uncomfortable, the court sat and waited. No one pretended to conceal the blissful yawns that would not be denied. A drowsy, ineffably languid feeling took possession of the entire assemblage.
The prime minister sat at the foot of the throne and nodded in spite of himself. John Tullis, far back near the wall, had his head on his hand, bravely fighting off the persistent demon. Prince Dantant of Dawsbergen was sound asleep.

The grand duke was wide awake. He saw it all and was equal to the occasion. After all, he was a kindly old gentleman and, once his moment of mortification was over, he was not above charity.
Bobby's poor little head had slipped over to a most uncomfortable position against the arm of the chair. Putting his finger to lips, the grand duke tiptoed carefully up to the throne. With very gentle hands he lifted Bobby's head and, infinitely tender, stuffed a throne cushion behind the curly head. A splendid smile in his eyes, he tiptoed back to his chair.
As he passed Count Halfont, who had risen, he whispered:
"Dear little man! I do not forget, my lord, that I was once a boy. God bless him!"
Then he sat down, conscious of a fine feeling of goodness, folded his arms across his expansive chest and allowed his beaming eyes to rest upon the sleeping boy far back in the chair of state. Incidentally he decided to delay a few days before taking up the bond question with the ministry. The grand duke was not an ordinary diplomat.

"DEAR LITTLE MAN! GOD BLESS HIM!"
In one of the curtained windows, far removed from the throne, sat Truxton King and Lorraine Tullis. All about them people were watching drowsily at the grand duke's tender comedy. No one was looking at the two in the curtained recess. Her hand was in his; her head sank slowly toward his inviting shoulder. Her heavy lids drooped lower and lower, refusing to obey the slender will that argued against complete surrender. At last her soft, regular breathing told him that she was asleep. Awaiting his opportunity, he tenderly kissed the soft brown hair, murmured a gentle word of love and settled his own head against the thick cushions.

Everywhere they dozed and nodded. The grand duke smiled and blinked his little eyes. He was very wide awake.
That is how he happened to see the prince move restlessly and half open his sleep bound eyes. The grand duke leaned forward with his hand to his ear and listened. He had seen the boy's lips move. From dreamland came Bobby's belated "Good night!"
THE END.

WATCHES AND Cream Separators

There are some sensible dairy farmers who buy $1.-, $5.- and $10.- watches, because they serve the purpose of a watch and waste nothing while they last.
But would any of these sensible dairy farmers put their money into and carry a $1.-, $5.- or $10.- watch if it cost them from 25 cents to $1.- that they might otherwise save EVERY DAY to do so?
Most assuredly they would not. Then why should any dairy farmer buy a cream separator of the $1.-, $5.- or $10.- watch kind where its use DOES mean a WASTE of from 25 cents to $1.- every day, in quantity and quality of product, that a DE LAVAL cream separator would SAVE?
THAT'S the all important DIFFERENCE between POOR SEPARATORS and POOR WATCHES,—one's good enough while it lasts but the other wastes twice a day from the time its use begins.
A De Laval catalogue is a separator education to be had for the asking.

BEGINNING OF OUR FORESTRY.

WHEN did the United States begin the practice of forestry? Few persons can answer this question correctly. Most people are of the opinion that the beginning of forestry in this country was of very recent origin and that the first step in that direction was taken among the mountains of the far west. Neither fact is correct.
While Washington was serving his first term as president of the United States a recommendation came to him that the government ought to buy live oak islands on the coast of Georgia to make sure of a supply of ship timber for war vessels. The idea appears to have originated with Joshua Humphreys, whose official title was "constructor of the United States navy," although about the only navy then existing was made up of six ships on paper, and not one stick of timber to build them had yet been cut. The vessels were designed to fight the north African pirates.
Five years after the recommendation was made congress appropriated money to buy five oak land. Grover and Blackbeard Islands, on the coast of Georgia, were bought for $22,000. They contained 1,950 acres.
Louisiana was bought soon after, and in 1817 the six islands, of 19,000 acres and containing 37,000 live oak trees, were withdrawn from sale and set apart as a reserve. In 1825 congress appropriated $10,000 to buy additional live oak land on Santa Rosa sound, western Florida, and subsequently other Florida timberlands, aggregating 208,224 acres, were reserved. Up to that time nothing more had been done than to buy or reserve land for the timber growing naturally upon it, but the work was to be carried further upon the Santa Rosa purchase. The plan included planting, protecting from fire, cultivating and cutting live oak for the navy. That timber was then considered indispensable in building war vessels. Much had been said and written of the danger of exhaustion of supply. Settlers destroyed the timber to clear land, and European nations were buying large quantities for their navies. In response to repeated warnings the government finally took steps to grow timber for its own use.

Young oaks were planted on the Santa Rosa lands. Difficulty was experienced in inducing young trees to grow. The successful transplanting of the oak is not easy unless done at the proper time and in the right way. The plantations at Santa Rosa were generally unsuccessful, but large quantities of acorns were planted, and a fair proportion of them grew. But the chief efforts were directed to pruning, training and caring for the wild trees. Thickets about them were cut away to let in air and light.
What the ultimate success of the forestry work would have been cannot be told. The civil war brought a complete change in war vessels by substituting iron for wood. Forestry work stopped. The timber reserves were neglected. Squatters occupied the land. After a number of years all the reserves except some of the Florida land were opened to settlement.

FOREST RANGER FIGHTING FIRE.

Our Water Supply.
We are beginning to see that water is one of the great natural blessings which we must conserve by care and forethought. If we do not it will vanish or turn into a curse. The health of our eastern cities and towns depends on pure water. The prosperity of our manufactures, the development of our commerce and the increase of our western farms are all closely connected with water conservation. The most powerful tool for controlling our water supply is in the forest. From this it will be seen that forest conservation is of vital importance.
