"At last the inevitable has happened, and the busy thoroughfare acrose Cayuga lake, between Kidders, on the west bank, and King Ferry, on the east bank of that beautiful body of water, has passed into oblivion, and no more will the shrill whist'e or flapping sail of the ferryboat, Busy Bee, be heard or seen upon its waters, for Monday of this week Captain Jim Quick docked the old craft, pulled the fires, lowered the sail, demolished the signals on either side, which had been looked for for so many years by anxious travelers, and abandoned the business of transferring persons and teams across the deep blue waters

"Captain Jim has earned a rest For 27 years he has conducted this ferry, and for 18 of those years run through storm and sunshine, wind or calm, winter or summer,-always ready to accommodate and has never had an accident that could be called at all serious. When the wind was strong he used a sail, and when it was calm, he had a fire going and used steam. But the parting of the ways came, and he determined, before an accident did happen, to abandon the ferry, and has accordingly surrendered the charter, which was granted by the State in 1844, to parties at present unknown.

"Times have changed since then, and what was at that time considered remunerative, has long since ceased to be a paying investment. PROLOGUE.

This story of a young man's honest attempt to "break" the boss" and the power of the "machine" is an absorbingly intimate portrayal of the working of the "wheels within wheels" in a desperate political struggle of today. The senator, strongly intrenched behind his party "machine," presents an almost invulnerable front, and the conflict between father and son as this young lawyer, single handed, fights for what he honestly believes to be the truth and right holds one with a tremendous sympathetic interest.

Blount thought it a little singular that the vice president should come to the capital secretly, but he did not stop to speculate upon this.

Having something more than a suspicion that Gantry was not passing his threat of exposure up to McVickar, he determined at once to seek an interview with the vice president. Walking rapidly down to the Sierra avenue station, he saw a light in Gantry's office, and, meaning to be fair first and severe afterward, if needful, he ran up the stair and tried the door of the traffic manager's office. It opened under his hand. Gantry was at his Blount laughed. "If I have succeeded in making you angry perhaps there is a chance that you will do something. You may curse me out all you want to, but the fact remains. I'm going to explode the bomb, and it will be touched off far enough before election to do the work if you keep on refusing to make my word to the people good. That is all-all the all. Now, will you go up to the Capital Enformation that I mentioned?" Tou owned a motorcar?"

"Not in a thousand years!" raged Gantry. "Not in a thousand years!" Nevertheless he rose, closed his desk and prepared to accompany the importunate political manager. Halfway along the first block he said: "There is no use in our going to the Capital office at this time of night. Blenkinsop doesn't get around to his desk much before 11. Let's go up to the club."

At the railway club the traffic Gianager developed a keen desire to kill the intervening time in a game of billiards. Blount indulged him, beat him three games in succession and consistently refused to drink with him. At the end of the third game Gantry gave a terse definition of a man who would force his friend to go and drink alone and went to the bar. Ten minutes later when Blount went after him he had disappeared, and the visit to the newspaper office was postponed perforce.

A little later Blount found himself handling the levers of a very serviceable knockabout car equipped for hard work on country roads. When he was ready to go he drove down to the railroad yard and hunted up his conductor.

"After you have had your vacation you may get orders from Mr. Kittredge and take his car back to the capital," he told the man. "When you do you may give him my compliments and tell him that I preferred to run my own special train."

The conductor grinned and made no reply, and he was still grinning when be sauntered into the railroad telegraph office and spoke to the operator. "I dunno what's up," he said, "but, whatever it was, the string's broke. Old Dave Sagebrush's son has borrowed him an automobeel and gone back to town on his own hook. Guess you'd better call up the division dispatcher and tell him the broken wire gag didn't work. Get a move on. We hain't got nothing to stay here for

The traffic manager had left his office for the day, but Blount found him at the railway club.

"Just a word, Dick," he began when he had overtaken Kittredge's accomplice in the grill room corridor. "Kittredge put up a job on me, and I think you helped him. I had to borrow an automobile to come back in from Lewiston.'

"Confound you!" said Gantry hearti-

But that was all that he had a chance to say, since Blount had turned abruptly and was already leaving the club to go on to the hotel.

Since the election was now no more than three days distant the Inter-Mountain lobby was filled with groups of caucusing politicians. Notwithstanding the position he had taken and the open eyed fearlessness with which he had discussed the political situation publicly in every considerable town in the state, Evan Blount was still a puzzle to those whose ways were, by need and the force of circumstance, the reverse of straightfor-

Blount was halted half a dozen times before he could make his way the elevator, and the pumping process to which he was subjected at each fresh halting space amused him. It was plainly evident that in spite of all he had said and done a considerable majority of the politicians were still regarding him as in some sense his father's lieutenant. Somewhat to his disappointment he found that Patricia had, gone out with his father and his father's wife to dinner; hence he was forced to sit at a table in the cafe with three of the caucusing politicians and was obliged to find his moderate pleasure in trying to make their very evident perplexity lose nothing of its acuteness during the table

When he reached his office on Satorday morning, after an early and solitary breakfast at the hotel, the young reformer scored, or thought he had scored, his first small victory. Among the envelopes on his desk was one bearing the imprint of the traffic office. It inclosed a carbon copy of the notice required by law of a proposed change in freight rates.

Hastily comparing the figures with the memorandum in his pocketbook, Blount felt the tension relaxing for the first time in weeks. At the long last Gantry or his superiors had surrendered. The rates on lumber, electrical supplies and other commodities which had been given illegal preferentials were to be reduced to the figures given to the favored corporations.

Blount passed a busy Saturday, putting in most of his time at his desk. Calling up the hotel in the afternoon, he found that his father had taken Patricia and Honoria for a drive in the madster, and at dinner time the automobile party had not yet return-Blount went back to his office after a hasty dinner and worked late into the night. The eve of battle had arrived, and he was striving to clinch the nall of argument as well as he could by writing many letters to the political friends he had made in going up and down the state.

The Sunday proved to be a very quiet day, though the lobby of the Inter-Mountain was still the assembling place for the gathering clans of politicians. Blount went to church in the morning because Patricia insisted upon it, and his appearance in the pew as a member of the Honorable David's family would have caused fresh comment if there had been any churchgoers among the visiting politicians, After luncheon he borrowed the roadater and took Patricia for a drive. The day was perfect, and the roads were in good condition. When be had put distance between them and the Sunday quiet of the city streets he told Patricia of his experience with Shakespeare Censored.

The dramatic censorship in England today, much as it is abused, is very mild compared to what has been known in former periods when many of Shakespeare's plays have been censored. Colley Cibber in his autobiography tells us of one master of the revels, who was responsible for the licensing of plays in his days, expunging the whole first act of Cibber's adaptation of "Richard III." on the ground that the distresses of Henry VI. would remind weak people of King James, then living in France. On another occasion "King Lear" was inhibited during the illness of George III. George Colman when reader of plays banned the use of such words as 'angel" and "heaven."-London Mail.

He Was Dangerous.

A story is told by a member of congress whenever his brother is present. That brother, now a prosperous merchant, was incontinently discharged from a position as bookkeeper in a row. wholesale grocery store in St. Louis. A curt note dismissing him, containing no reason for the discharge, was all that he received. Determined to have an explanation, he went to the private office of the merchant and asked: "Why did you fire me?"

"Because you were dangerous," said the merchant quietly. "You were loaded all the time."

Queer Coronation Gifts.

One of the most extraordinary gifts made on the coronation day of Edward I. was that of 500 horses which had been used by the royal princes and other personages in the procession to Westminster abbey. These horses, all richly caparisoned and harnessed just as they were, were let loose into the very midst of the mob after the banquet in Westminster hall that always succeeded a coronation in those days, The people in the streets were permitted to catch the animals, and to him who caught a horse it and its appointments belonged.-London Chronicle.

MEMORIAL DAY AND A REUNION

By FLORENCE A. MUNROE.

T was told to me in the smoker as we rode into Omaha from Cheyenne. The narrator was a tall, gaunt man with the scar of a saber cut on his left cheek. He refused cigars, but when asked to tell a story quietly began. I knew instantly it was in some way connected with himself. We always hesitate a little when relating our own experiences, but nev er another's. Well, that man's story. as near as I can repeat it, was this: In a small northwestern town one 30th of May service was held in the big Union church. Among the speakers was the Episcopal bishop of the state, who had worn the blue back in the sixties. The gray haired soldier was tall and strong yet. The burdens of life had not bent his muscular form, nor had the conflicts marked his calm. good face. But his eyes-they were the saddest I ever saw. When people looked deep into them they reflected such scenes of sorrow that women would cry and men did not care to look very long.

When I came to think of it afterward, the man in the car had the same kind of eyes. But, to get on with his story, just before the old bishop began his address a man had stolen in and seated himself in one of the back pews. Some eyed him suspiciously and wondered how he had escaped the ushers. He was a very ragged fellow.

When the old bishop stood up to speak the stranger gave his words the closest attention. First be told about the soldiers who were bivouacked in their green tents out on the hills. Then about those who hadn't any graves, but were left down on the bullet torn meadows of the south. Afterward of those who had gone away with their mothers' tears staining their new blue coats. Where were they all today? Some had come proudly home with gold stars glittering on their shoulders; others-God help them-had deserted from the right and were ashamed to come, but they would return some day if they were alive. Then he began to tell of his own son, a yellow haired chap who had carried the union colors up to the second battle of Bull Run. Till then they had fought together, almost side by side. But one day he saw the boy get a saber cut on the face and fall. It was bard to leave him, but the command was to advance. Since then he had not seen him. Once he saw his name among those who had deserted and were fighting on the southern side. Oh, that he might have been spared this! Better their true sons dead than his perhaps living, but- Still he would not wish him back unless be came as a good soldier, winning in the ranks of the Great Leader, a follower of the

At this point the ragged fellow got out of his pew and started slowly up the middle alsie. The ushers arose to put him out, but the speaker raised his hand and they stepped back. With great firmness he walked unconscious of the excitement until he reached the altar steps. For a moment those two men looked into each other's eyes. Then one fell down on his knees while the other laid his hands upon the bowed head. The church was silent. One could hear the clock hung on the railing near the organ loft ticking.

"My friends"-the bishop's voice was husky and strained-"you all see this man. I loved him once when he was a boy. Since then he has deserted his country's flag, stolen from his fellows, wronged his old father. But today he has come back and asks to be given a chance to begin again." Gently he lifted the tear stained face so that their eyes met once more.

"Do you, in the presence of God and these people, renounce the life you have lived, and do you willingly take up the banner to fight against sin and yourself?"

The answer was low, but it echoed through the church as the old bishop stretched his hands to heaven and

"I have cast my prayers upon the waters and they have returned to me today, my son, oh, my son," Just then the loud voice of the con-

SUGGESTIONS FOR MOVING.

How to Make Trying Time as Easy as Work Can Be Done.

As moving time is approaching, a few suggestions on the subject are appropriate. This will not be a treatise on how to pack, just a few words on when and how to dismantle the house with a view to keep every one in it comfortable to the last two days before the moving.

Some housewives begin to dismantle a month before moving day; others leave it to the last day, neither of which is commendable. In the case of the former every one is discommoded so long beforehand, and in the case of the latter the hurried packing is a detriment to the condition of the household goods, much damage being done.

A little thought and a look around the household will disclose many of the belongings that are not in general. use, a great deal more than we would suppose-for instance, stuff in the pantry. in the storeroom, superabundant grocery supplies, temporarily discarded clothing, superfluous ornaments. company porcelain and glassware. books, music and a thousand other things, all of which can be dislodged without destroying the appearance of the house, while those abiding in the same will not be the wiser for it.

These superfluous belongings may be put in wooden boxes, which should be numbered and the covers natled down, by the housewife at her leisure. when no one is around, say two weeks day. When a box is packed and cover nailed she may place it out of the way or against a wall where there is room. covering the boxes with something bright in the house, which gives them the appearance of an extra seat or a little couch if a few pillows are placed on them. Nothing stands around for people to trip over, and nothing that is needed is missing. The impending moving day is out of sight and out of mind. Every one in the bouse is enjoying the unruffled way yet awhile.

Two days before moving day will suffice for the real breaking up in an ordinary household and will give ample time to plan bow it should be done with a view to condensing and safe packing so that expressage may be reduced. This is the time to discard useless belongings that are a nightmare every moving time. However. one must be careful not to get rid of some to pack, yet would come into good use later on.

The kitchen and dining room neces sitles should be so parked that one can lay hands on them on arrival at permanent treatment of roads with tar blankets, etc., for the first night's rest. It is in the final packing that the bousewife realizes the benefit of the plan of packing leisurely the articles not in general use.

All In the Family. When the fighting was at its highest in the battle of Gettysburg a Union soldier captured a Confederate who happened to be his own brother. He turned to fire at a Confederate behind a tree when the prisoner said, "Don't fire on him; that's father."

 PHYSICAL FACTS ABOUT CIVIL WAR SOLDIERS.

The average beight of the Union soldiers in the civil war was five feet eight and one-quarter inches. Maine, Indiana, lowa Missouri and Kentucky troops averaged slightly taller. Of about 1,000,000 recorded heights of soldiers 3,613 were above six feet three inches, some of them being more than seven feet tall. The average weight was 1431/2

Thirty per cent had brown hair, 24 per cent light, 13 per cent black, 4 per cent sandy, 3 per cent red, 1 per cent gray. Forty-five per cent had blue eyes, 24 per cent gray, 13 per per cent medium. Forty-eight per cent were farmers, 24 per cent mechanics, 16 per cent laborers, 5 per cent in commercial pursuits, 3 per cent professional men, 4 per cent of miscellaneous vocations, The average age was about twenty-five years at enlistment. More enlistments were received at eighteen years than at any other age. None above forty-five years was taken.

* Events That Pass Us By.

We can be but partially acquainted even with the events which actually influence our course through life and our final destiny. There are innumerable other events, if such they may be called, which come close upon us, yet pass away without actual results or even betraying their near approach by the reflection of any light or shadow across our minds. Could we know all the vicissitudes of our fortune life would be too full of hope and fear, exultation or disappointment to afford us a single hour of true serenity .-Hawthorne.

PREVENTION OF DUST ON ROADS

Permanent Treatment of Public Highways With Tar.

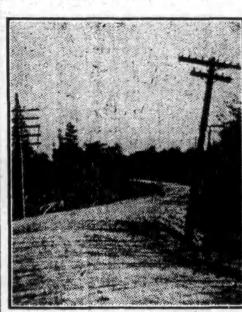

PRINCIPAL MATERIAL USED.

If Work is Properly Done a Tarred Road After Being Opened For Traffic a Short While Takes an Appearance Closely Resembling Asphalt-It Is Waterproof and Dustless.

Although the problem of dust prevention on public highways is by no means a new one, its importance has been greatly accentuated by the comparatively recent introduction of the automobile, says the Scientific American. The dust raising tendency of the latter is due to the destructive shearing action of the tires of the driving wheels and the intense suction and eddying producing effect of the car body in passing swiftly over surfaces which have been already loosened up by tire action. In the days of the horse drawn vehicle the iron shoes of before moving day, doing a little each | the horse and the tires had a tendency to consolidate rather than loosen up the surface of a well made macadam road, and the comparatively small amount of dust which gathered could be sufficiently laid by one or two daily trips of the watering cart. The advent . of the automobile, however, has complicated the problem greatly, and it has become necessary not merely to flud a more efficient means for laying the dust, but to provide also a method of road construction which will more firmly bind the road material together and enable it to stand up under the extreme conditions which the automobile has imposed.

The most valuable quality in any dust preventive is its ability to hold together the finely divided material which is produced on or near the surface of the road. The value of any oil, asphalt, emulsion or what not lies at the last analysis in its "binding what at the moment seems trouble power," and this quality in any dust preventive is proportionate to the amount of bituminous base which it are coal tar, refined coal tar and water gas tar. They may be used effectively either by applying them to a road already finished or by incorporating them in the surface material of the road during construction. In applying the tar to an old road the surface should be thoroughly dry, comparatively warm and free from dust.

The principal material used in the

Moisture prevents the tar from proper contact with the stone, and a cold surface stiffens the material and CHARLES E. TREMAN prevents its being absorbed. Before the application is made ruts and hollows should be filled and the surface brought up to a smooth and even condition. The tar, heated to about 190 degrees F., is spread upon the road through a hose or by other suitable means and is then thoroughly broomed

After this has been done, to secure good results, the surface treated should be closed to all traffic for about twelve hours so as to give the tar an opportunity to thoroughly sink in the surface. Next a coat of clean sand or stone chips should be applied to absorb any excess tar and dry up the surface. as it were. The road should then be rolled thoroughly to bring it into con-

In applying the tar in new construction the road should be formed and consolidated without the use of water. The voids should be filled with fine stone chips free from dust, and care must be taken not to roll the surface too heavily or the tar will not adhere properly. Hot tar may be applied through all of the courses as they are laid and rolled, but occasionally the upper course only is so treated. After tarring, a top dressing of material is rolled. The tar spreading may be done either by hand, in which case an excess above what is necessary will probby an apparatus mounted on wheels, the tar being discharged under pressure at the road surface by specially designed spraying nozzles.

If the work be properly done, a tarred road after being open to traffic for a short while takes on an appearance closely resembling asphalt, being amooth and firm, practically noiseless and more resilient than asphalt. It is largely waterproof, practically dustless, and the resistance to traction is 'adam road.

At a luncheon, given in honor of Dr. Elias Lester's fiftieth year of active practice in the medical profession, at Seneca Falls last week, the following sketch of his life was read. The sketch was written by his son, Dr. Frederick W. Lester, also of Seneca Falls.

Dr. Elias Lester Honored.

Elias Lester was born on May 23,1836, in the town of Genoa, Cayuga county. His parents were Elihu and Lucy Bacon Lester. He was one of seven children. He attended Genoa Academy and taught school for three years. Then he became interested in a colonist party which was being organized in Cayuga county about 1857 and together with about ninety others he went to St. Joseph, Mo., by rail and then by wagen trail to a point near the center of Kansas, where they formed a settlement and named it Cay-

During the following winter many of the colonists, who had taken up tracts of about 160 acres each, became ill and a number died. The lack fof competent physicians impressed Mr. Lester and the next spring he sold his holdings for $300 and came back to Cayuga county to study medicine.

He first began under the direction of Dr. Cyrus Powers'in Moravia. In 1860-61 he entered the New York College of Physicians and Surgeons, later enlisted as a medical cadet and being assigned to the Washington Street Hospital in Alexandria, Va.

After being about one year in the service he returned to New York to complete his studies. In 1863 he was made assistant surgeon of the Fourteenth New York Cavalry, assigned to the Department of the Gulf. A year later he was made surgeon and took part in the famous Banks expedition up the Red river and returned to New Orleans. Soon after he left the service and went to Corinth, Saratogal county, to begin practicing.

On December 23, 1864, Dr. Lester married Miss Caroline Foote of Venice, Cayuga county, and after a year's residence in Corinth moved to this village, where he has practiced continually. He became a member of the Seneca county Medical Society in 1866, and since then he has held various offices in the society, having been president on a number of

Mrs. DeCamp heard the report of the gun and going to the room, found Mr. Edsell groaning and bleeding profusely. Dr. Skinner was called, but being unable to go, Dr. Willoughby answered the call and reached the house in 12 minutes. It is thought that the man aimed for his heart, but the bullet just missed the heart and went clear through the body, and out through the roof of the room. As we go to press, Mr. Edsell was still living and it was said that if he could be kept alive twenty-four hours, the doctor thought he had a chance for recovery.

MRS. D. E. SINGER, GENOA, N. Y.

Late that fall after a slashing fight on a Virginia meadow one afternoon we found Old Jack standing over the dead body of his master. Other horses were galloping wildly about here and there, but Old Jack stood unmoved by the excitement about him. Wounded horses approached to beg for sympathy, but he drove them away for fear they would injure the man at his feet.

He was with the army up and down the Shenandoah valley during a long campaign, and one night when a ter-'rific storm stampeded 300 horses over to the enemy he alone returned. He raided and fought through that memorable year of 1864 and was wounded twice, but when the last campaign came he was ready for it, and when the final surrender of the enemy was made the white flags almost brushed his nose. Only a day or two before this a piece of shell had given him a severe hurt, but when driven to the rear with hundreds of other wounded horses he literally fought his way back to the front.

When he returned from Appomattox at the close of the war a quartermaster got hold of him, but when it became known by his old brigade that they were to go west Old Jack was put on the active list again and went with them. At Fort Leavenworth. where they weeded out the horses preparatory to the long trip to the Colorado line, Old Jack was led away to be branded with the letter "C" and wold to the highest bidder at public auction. Company A. to which he had been attached, resolved and protested and argued against it, but to no avail. However, before the degrad-Second Lieutenant K. bought him, and he was brought back to his old place

"TT'S THE SAME THING AS MURDER!" in the ranks, where he was given such a reception as only an old comrade could have counted on.

Far up the Platte, after the army had got well into the Indian country. a dozen men were cut off from the command one day. It was a race for life. The horse of a trooper fell with a broken leg, and Lleutenant K. took the man up behind him. Old Jack came in carrying double, an arrow grazing his quarter as he made the last half mile Farther west it was Old Jack who suddenly raised an alarm one midnight just in time to save the troop from attack. A week later he was bitten by a rattlesnake, and he was ordered to be shot, as has been done in a score of like cases, but Company A would not have it so, and, Providence sending a heavy rainstorm to stop the march, heroic doses of whisky were poured down his throat, and in the course of a few days he was all right and kicking up his beels as of yore.

Not long after this, one day while the brigade was marching along up between the forks of the upper Platte. Old Jack's rider ventured too far from camp, and he was rushed by half a dozen Indians. He dismounted and covered them with his revolver over the saddle. The horse stood like a rock. The savages yelled and waved blankets and fired their rifles, but they of the excitement he saw the relief party while it was more than a mile away and neighed a shrill call of recognition and a warning to ride fast. Is it at all strange that the men of his company loved him as thoroughly as they loved their fellows? There were just fifty-five men in Company A out on the plains, and had they some day been obliged to accept fifty-five hardtack for a full day's rations Old Jack would have shared equally with the

and the warm affection of the men estates acceptates and the warm affection of the men with whom he had served so faithfully and so long, the day came when there had to be a final parting Two hundred of the men were pushing a fresh Indian trail when Old Jack, going at an easy gallop, put his foot into a gopher bole and broke a fore leg. Two bundred men grouped aloud at the sight of the poor beast standing there in the shadow of certain death. There was neither water nor grass for miles around, and, anyhow, the wolves would pull him down after a few hours, and he deserved a better death. And yet no one could be found willing to kill

"Strip off the saddle and shoot him." That was the order that came back from the head of the column, and that was the order given by Captain K. to Sergeant B. The saddle was removed. and, although Old Jack must have been suffering intense pain, he did not utter a sigh, only his eyes seemed to open a little wider than usual, and he appeared somewhat worried and anxious as he looked around.

"Captain, I can't do it; I simply cannot," replied the sergeant. "Give that order to some one else.'

A second and a third man were named, but all asked to be relieved of  the unpleasant duty. Then a corporal stepped out and placed the muzzle of his revolver to Old Jack's ear, but a hundred men shouted in chorus, and be did not pull the trigger.

"Compliments of Colonel C., with orders to shoot that horse at once." announced a messenger from the front. "Sergeant B., put that poor beast out of his misery," ordered the cap-

"I've got to do it or stand a court martial. I suppose," growled the sergeant. "but I'd sooner take a shot at somebody down in front. Perhaps he isn't so badly hurt after all and something can be done for him."

"Hurry up! Can't you see that the bone is broken square off?"

"It's the same thing as murder!" Poor Old Jack was rubbing his nose against the sergeaut's left hand and whimpering, as if he would inquire what it was all about. The face of every man present was turned away. and many stopped their ears to shut out the sound of the revolver. No one looked as the revolver cracked. and the column moved on its way.

Looking straight ahead and with a suspicious quivering of the chin, the sergeant was heard to whisper:

"I wish I hadn't done it. I wish I had taken arrest and court martial instead. Poor old comrade!"

The Stork's Lazy House Building The most interesting sight in the Rotterdam zoo was the stork, whose nest is set high on a pinnacle of the buffalo house. He was building in the leisurely style of the British workingman. He would negligently descend from the heavens with a stick. This he would lay on the fabric and then carefully perform his toilet, looking round and down all the time to see that every one else was busy. Whenever his eye lighted on a toddling child or a perambulator it visibly brightened. "My true work!" he seemed to say. "This nest building is mere bypaths of industry." After drinking and overlooking and congratulating himself thus for a few minutes he would stroll off over the housetops for another stick. He was unquestionably a king of the garden.-Lucas in "A Wanderer In Holland."

The Way Out.

A well known Boston physician was on his way to his office one winter morning when the sidewalks were a glare of ice. While going down the street he met a lady coming in the opposite direction. The lady was a stranger to him, although he was not unknown to her. In trying to avoid each other on the icy pavement they both slipped and came to the sidewalk facing each other, with their pedal extremities considerably entangled. While the polite doctor was debating in his mind what was the proper thing to do under the trying circumstances the problem was solved by the quick witted lady, who quietly remarked: "Doctor, if you will be good enough to rise and pick out your legs I will take what remains."

Safety Valves of the World. Terrific as are the forces of volcanic action, they have served and do yet serve their ordained purpose in the magnificent scheme of cosmic development. Volcanoes form a natural vent for the pentup internal forces resulting from the slow cooling and consolidation of the earth's mass. They act as the safety valves of the world, without which the crust of the earth would in all probability burst with explosive force and with a resulting cataclysm appalling to contemplate. Volcanoes tend, in fact, to maintain the normal stable equilibrium between the interior and the outer surface of the world.

The Crocodile. Pliny said the crocodile's skin "will abide any injury and not be pierced." That may have been true in his day, but it is not true now. The bullet of a heavy modern rifle will pierce the skin anywhere unless it strikes in a slantcould not stampede him. In the midst | ing direction. WON BY A SERMON.

Picture of the Desert Saved Man Who Was Discouraged.

Body and soul he was tired-tired out. He bad reached the place where be had lost all control over his thoughts, and his mind traveled ceaselessly around and around the circle of his troubles. It was a circle, he said bitterly to himself, for he could not remember the beginning, and there seemed no prospect of an end so long as life lasted. He had grown up in an unhappy, ill sorted family to an inheritance of difficult duties. He had no opportunity to make friends, to "have good times," to conquer for himself any portion of the knowledge, wisdom and skill which are the exhaustless treasure the world holds in keeping for those who know how to seek.

He had no chance to grow. That was the heart of his rebellion. To work all one's life and have no more at the end than at the beginning-to have even less, for once he had hope could there be failure more bitter? When he had set his body and soul to work delving for riches hid in the great Rockies he had youth and dreamed dreams-could there be realities more disappointing?

Suddenly be lifted his head, listenng. He had not come to church to listen. Long ago he had told himself that church had nothing for him, He bad come merely for an hour's physical rest, away from his bondage. So, having no intention of listening, be had lost the text, and this was what be beard:

"The long days in the desert-not a song to break the stillness till the ears eche with the endless silence, not a leaf to refresh the sight that aches with the quivering distance, day after day nothing but rocks and sand and silence, till it seemed he would go mad with the loneliness of it.

"And there was so much that be longed to do! Out in the world there was work, and within the man there were powers crying out for opportunities. Out in the world was pitiful need. and his beart was broken with the longing to help; out in the world were tasks and joys and opportunities, wrongs to be righted and foes to be conquered and kingdoms to be won. and he was shut away in the desert.

"Ab, but that was only part of it! He was shut away in the desert with God. Day by day the solemn silence spoke to him with the voice of God; night by night the unfailing stars counseled him to patience and obedience. Week by week, for months, the spirit of God worked upon him till when. in the fullness of time, he went out from the desert to rebuke a corrupt nation it was with his heart made strong within him by the lessons of the wilderness. "Dear friends, is not the lesson for us today? There are few of us who do not sooner or later reach our desert. the place where we seem shut away from all opportunity, all happiness, all chance of growth. But no soul was ever sent into the desert to waste his life. He is sent instead to win the highest of all the wisdom of the universe-he is sent there to meet God. Pray God that not one of us. having this supreme opportunity, shall miss it and see only the desert."

"'Doing?' he replied. 'I'm trying my best to be a Christian."

qualities and bring forth a plant that T. F. Freeman from his station at Tucsen, Ariz., may be followed with the almost absolute certainty of an increased bank balance at the close of the farming year.

Alfalfa is a native of India, but has been cultivated in Europe since before the time of Christ. The Spaniards introduced it into South America, but it did not reach North America until about 1850, when it was introduced into California. It is now the most extensively cultivated forage crop in the United States; but, according to agricultural experts, we are only beginning to grasp its possibilities.

A Paradox For the Farmer. In some localities land has doubled in value in the last decade. Where this is true the farmer must make his land produce just twice as much in order to realize the same profit. If he does not do this he is getting poorer instead of richer, although his land

FARMER AND GLAD OF IT.

Mr. Van Wagenen on Seventy-sixth Birthday Sends Cheery Greeting. To the farmer dissatisfied with his groove in life this beautiful optimistic letter, first published in the Country Gentleman, is optimistically recom-

I wish to extend to my coworkers in agriculture everywhere my seventy-sixth birthday greeting. This anniversary finds me hale and hearty. I do not know that I ever felt less of pain or disease except it be a mild indication of general debility, which surely is to be expected. This desirable condition of health I attribute in great measure to temperate and regular habits of life. All my life as a farmer I have been accustomed to rise at 5 and under all ordinary circumstances to retire at 9. I deem this sort of life conducive to the highest health. I was not born a Samson in strength, but rather, like Paul, with "a thorn in the flesh." We have never had any use for alcohol or tobacco in the family. The only pipe we ever used was the Indian pipe of peace, and this all were encouraged to use freely, as its smoke was offensive to no one, but rather a sweet smelling savor, filling the whole house with its perfume. This custom has made it possible for a large family-never less than seven or eight, sometimes nearly twice that-to live together with very little jar or friction. From many years of experience I can heartily recommend the pipe of peace in all families at the earliest adications of any need of it. I am sure that the farm is no place for those who have ambitions to become suddenly rich, but as a life of sturdy inde pendence no other equals it. Probably it is true that the farmer could get along without the millionaire, but the rich man could not do without the products of the farm. Still, all classes are needed, and their aim should be to work together for the best good of all. After a lifetime speni on one farm I call myself a rich man, not in money, it is true, but in a life satisfied with an abundance of the things that really need. What we have beyond this tends to make us poorer. The only desire I have for more than my needs would be for the pleasure it would afford me to give it to those in want.

Fifty-two years ago last November brought my wife to the home where we now live. We have never known or cared to know any other home. We have been of one mind in thinking that there was as much enjoyment in farm life as we could find anywhere in the world. Nearly all of our neighbors have sought more congenial surroundings, but I regret to say that apparently few have bettered their condi tion. Not that our life has been all sun shine, yet we have no reason to think there would have been more if we had tried a change. What gives me most pleasure of all to relate is that my dear wife's health is apparently as good as my own, and we are accounting our last days among our best. JARED VAN WAGENEN.

100 AN ACRE FROM CABBAGES

Comparatively Little Care Is Needed if Grown Under Farmer's Eye.

There is great profit in raising cabbages, but the farmer should raise them himself, says the Orange Judd Farmer. He can have them grown under contract for about $2 a thousand, but under his own care they should not cost him more than $1. Fall, plowed laud that has received about ten tons of well rotted manure per acre is best for this crop. As early in the spring as possible the ground is disked once to form a dust mulch for conserving the moisture.

CABBAGES ALMOST LIKE ROSES.

The land is then left untouched until ready for planting, at which time it is disked once each way and harrowed.

There is no definite time for setting out plants, as this is entirely governed by the earliness of the season. The best time is as soon as danger of hard freezing is over.

No special cultivation is needed. Plow at least three times and go over once or twice with a hoe. If the hoeing and plowing are done at the right time very little hard work is required to keep the crop quite free from weeds.

The average price for cabbabe on track in recent years has been $8 per ton. An acre will produce at least eighteen tons, which will amount to $144. The cost of producing an acre is about as follows: Rent $8; plowing, harrowing and disking $1.50; planting $2.50; cultivation $2; hoeing $1; cutting and hauling $12; manuring. two years, ten tons, $10; total, $37. This leaves an annual profit of over $100 to the acre.

THE MERE MAN'S VIEWPOINT

OUR FRIENDS THE BIRDS

By BYRON WILLIAMS

F you, mother, along with Victor Hugo, are a lover of soft winged things teach your boy to protect the birds. The gay song of the meadow lark, poised on a gunweed stalk, is inspiring at the break of dawn; the shrill piping of a quail with his message about one Robert White is a call to memory when as barefoot boys and girls we trod the dusty road to the little white schoolhouse on the hill; the graceful glide of the flicker is a poem of rhythmic motion appealing to the aesthetic in us. But these feathered birds mean much more to us than their appeal to the artistic.

Quail is a delicacy on Broadway and costs proportionately, but in the potato field that same quail would be worth many times the epicurean price

The flicker's chief delight is a dinner of ants. If you ever have tried to Feed Department. get ants out of your lawn and your flower beds you will from this moment appreciate the flicker more and more than sing. He is a strong, lusty bird that makes way with numerous bug and worm pests, fighting valiantly for his sustenance. All the birds have good qualities aside from song and graceful adjuncts to the home landscape. They are of inestimable value to the grower of crops, while one family of them make splendid policemen. I refer to the kingfisher, that flery little fighter who attacks hawks with impunity and makes a black crow ashamed of himself. According to J. P. Gilbert of the University of Illinois, every hawk or owl, forager of vermin that he is, is worth $30 to the farmer.

The boy who learns to love birds, who defends them against other boys, will remain a bird lover all his life. The pair of robins that come every spring to build their nest on the wide drainpipe under the eaves will be welcomed as harbingers of spring and violets, and, no matter how old the man may become or how feeble, he will watch their operations with interest, gazing on their work with affectionate eyes. Once again the story of life is being told in reality.

The bird lovers come in the early spring, when the last snows are filter ing down, hiding the worms from their eyes and making them shiver with chill, but with the returning sun they take on a new spirit and begin to bill and coo. And soon Mr. and Mrs. Robin are carrying to the same old robin flat the pieces of yarn and string you have thrown upon the lawn for

The old man's eyes glisten and grow young again as he beholds the infinite care they take to weave a comfortable nest, and his broken old laugh titters and articulates into low chuckles as he watches some funny antic of the mother bird trying to carry a double load or getting snagged on her way to the fast growing nest. And as the old man watches the secret of life is repeating itself. Two tiny, though red and scrawny, heads are raised above the brim of the nest to wabble and disappear in awkwardness, and the mother and father birds are not only very bappy, but are very busy lugging worms and bugs to the capacious maws of their joungsters.

Day follows day, and the heads that appear are beginning to thatch with funny feathers, and then arrives a most exciting time. Young Bill Robin becomes so strong and so bold that he decides to take a look at this thing his mother and father have been calling the world. He flops around in the nest until he gains the rim of it and, looking over, beholds a most remarkable situation. The thing beneath is not at all like the blue sky above and is covered with green and queer boxlike nests in which something living moves about, something big and queer that sits in something by the window and comes from its mouth.

Bill Robin has seen the old man sitting by the window smoking his pipe. and the old man sees Bill Robin, too, and begins to wonder where Tom, the cat, is.

"Mother," he calls, "them robins is a-gittin' ready to fly. Keep Tom shut up in the cellar."

And Bill Robin never knows bow the
