The State Fair.
The New York State Fair for 1914 will be held at Syracuse a fortnight earlier than usual.

Year by year, the Fair has grown in size and importance until now it is rightfully possessed of the greater title of Agricultural and Industrial Exposition by which it is commonly designated.

The Fair opens on Monday, Aug. 31, and continues day and night, until Sept. 5, with unusually strong features already secured in the exhibits, the educational programs, races and other attractions.

There seems to be no question now that the Exposition has outranked the fairs of other States. A leading agricultural journal describes the institution in these terms:

"The New York State Fair is rapidly evolving from an agricultural exhibit to a great Exposition of all the State's industries, commerce and institutions. The new buildings erected from year to year are component parts of a plan, which, when completed, will place the New York State Fair far in the lead of annual State exhibitions.

"The State is expending large sums of money to establish and maintain an Exposition upon a scale commensurate with its great wealth and resources."

HAPPY MOTHERHOOD

The happiness of motherhood is too often checked because the mother's strength is not equal to her cares, while her unselfish devotion neglects her own health. It is a duty of husband or friend to see that she gets the pure medicinal nourishment in Scott's Emulsion, which is not a drug or stimulant but nature's concentrated oil-food tonic to enrich and enliven the blood, strengthen the nerves and aid the appetite. Physicians everywhere prescribe Scott's Emulsion for over-worked, nervous, tired women; it builds up and holds up their strength. Get Scott's at your nearest drug store.

The Story of Waitstill Baxter

By KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Copyright, 1915, by Kate Douglas Wiggin

does. "The best fire don't flare up the soonest," you know." But old Uncle Bart saw that his son's heart was heavy and forebore to press the subject.

Annabel Franklin had returned to Boston after a month's visit and to her surprise had returned as disengaged as she came. Mark Wilson, thoroughly bored by her vacillations of mind, longed now for more intercourse with Patty Baxter, Patty, so gay and unexpected; so lively to talk with, so plucking to the fancy, so skittish and difficult to manage, so temptingly pretty, with a beauty all her own, and never two days alike.

There were many lions in the way, and these only added to the zest of pursuit. With all the other girls of the village opportunities multiplied, but he could scarcely get ten minutes alone with Patty. The deacon's orders were absolute in regard to young men. His daughters were never to drive or walk alone with them, never to go to dances or "roasts" of any sort and never receive them at the house, this last mandate being quite unnecessary, as no youth in his right mind would have gone a-courting under the deacon's forbidding gaze. And still there were sudden, delicious chances to be seized now and then if one had his eyes open and his wits about him. There was the walk to or from the singing school, when a sentimental couple could drop a few feet at least behind the rest and exchange a word or two in comparative privacy; there were the church "circles" and prayer meetings and the intervals between Sunday services, when Mark could detach Patty a moment from the group on the meeting house steps. More valuable than all these, a complete schedule of Patty's various movements here and there, together with a profound study of Deacon Baxter's habits, which were ordinarily as punctual as they were disagreeable, permitted Mark many stolen interviews, as sweet as they were brief. There was never a second kiss, however, in these casual meetings and partings. The first, in springtime, had found Patty a child, surprised, unprepared. She was a woman now, for it does not take years to achieve that miracle, months will do it or days or even hours. Her summer's experience with Cephus Cole had wonderfully broadened her powers, giving her an assurance sadly lacking before, as well as a knowledge of detail, a certain finesse in the management of a lover, which she could only use on any one who happened to come along. And at the moment any one who happened to come along served the purpose ad-doctrine of eternal punishment. There was an old "pennyroyal" hymn much in use which describes the general tenor of his meditation—

My thoughts on awful subjects roll—
Damnation and the dead—
What horrors seize the guilty soul
Upon a dying bed!

(No wonder that Jacob Cochrane's lively songs, cheerful, hopeful, militant and bracing, fell with a pleasing sound upon the ear of the believer of that epoch.) The love of God had, indeed, entered Philip's soul, but in some mysterious way had been ossified after it got there. He had intensely black hair, dark skin and a liver that disposed him constitutionally to an ardent belief in the necessity of hell for most of his neighbors and the hope of spending his own glorious immortality in a small, properly restricted and prudently managed heaven. He was eloquent at prayer meeting, and Patty's only objection to him there was in his disposition to allude to himself as a "rebel worm," with frequent references to his "vile body." Otherwise and when not engaged in theological discussion Patty liked Philip very much. His own father, although an orthodox member of the fold in good and regular standing, had "doctored" Phil conscientiously for his liver from his youth up, hoping in time to incite in him a sunnier view of life, for the doctor was somewhat skilled in adapting his remedies to spiritual maladies. Jed Morrill had always said that when old Mrs. Buxton, the champion convert of Jacob Cochrane, was at her worst—keeping her whole family awake nights by her hysterical fears for their future—Dr. Perry had given her a twelfth of a grain of tartar emetic five times a day until she had entire mental relief, and her anxiety concerning the salvation of her husband and children was set completely at rest.

The good doctor noted with secret pleasure his son's growing fondness for the society of his prime favorite, Miss Patience Baxter. "He'll begin by trying to save her soul," he thought. "I'll always begin that way, but when Patty gets him in hand he'll remember the existence of his heart, an organ he has never taken into consideration. A love affair with a pretty girl, good but not too pious, will help Phil considerably, however it turns out."

There is no doubt but that Phil was taking his chances, and that under Patty's tutelage he was growing mellow. As for Patty, she was only amusing herself and frisking like a young lamb in pastures where she had never strayed before. Her fancy flew from Mark to Phil and from Phil back to Mark again, for at the moment she was just a vessel of emotion, ready to empty herself on she knew not what. Temperamentally, she would take advantage of currents rather than steer at any time, and it would be the strongest current that would finally bear her away. Her idea had always been that she could play with fire without burning her own fingers and that the flames she kindled were so innocent and mild that no one could be harmed by them. She had fancied up to now that she could control, urge on or cool down a man's feeling forever and a day if she chose and remain mistress of the situation. Now, after some weeks of weighing and balancing her two swains, she found herself confronting a choice once and for all. Each of them seemed to be approaching the state of mind where he was likely to say, somewhat violently, "Take me or leave me, one or the other!" But she did not wish to take them, and still less did she wish to leave them, with no other lover in sight but Cephus Cole, who was almost, though not quite, worse than none.

If matters by lack of masculine patience and self control did come to a crisis what should she say definitely to either of her suitors? Her father despised Mark Wilson a trifle more than any young man on the river, and while he could have no objection to Phil Perry's character or position in the world, his hatred of old Dr. Perry amounted to a disease. When the doctor had closed the eyes of the third Mrs. Baxter he had made some plain and unwelcome statements that would rankle in the deacon's breast as long as he lived. Patty knew, therefore, that the chance of her father's blessing falling upon her union with either of her present lovers was more than uncertain, and of what use was an engagement if there could not be a marriage?

If Patty's mind inclined to a somewhat speedy departure from her father's household she can hardly be blamed, but she felt that she could not carry any of her indecisions and fears to her sister for settlement. Who could look in Waitstill's clear, steadfast eyes and say, "I can't make up my mind which to marry?" Not Patty. She felt, instinctively, that Waitstill's heart, if it moved at all, would rush out like a great river to lose itself in the ocean and, losing itself, forget the narrow banks through which it had flowed before. Patty knew that her own love was at the moment nothing more than the note of a child's penny fute and that Waitstill was perhaps vibrating secretly with a deeper, richer music than could ever come to her. Still, music of some sort she meant to feel. "Even if they make me decide one way or another before I am ready," she said to herself, "I'll never say 'yes' till I'm more in love than I am now!"

There were other reasons why she did not want to ask Waitstill's advice. Not only did she shrink from the loving scrutiny of her sister's eyes and the gentle probing of her questions, which would fix her own motives on a pin point and hold them an unbecomingly to the light, but she had a foolish, generous loyalty that urged her to keep Waitstill quite aloof from her own little private perplexities.

"She will only worry herself sick," thought Patty. "She won't let me marry without asking father's permission, and she'd think she ought not to aid me in deceiving him, and the tempest would be twice as dreadful if it fell upon us both! Now, if anything happens, I can tell father that I did it all myself and that Waitstill knew nothing about it whatever. Then—oh, joy!—if father is too terrible I shall be a married woman and I can always say: 'I will not permit such cruelty! Waitstill is dependent upon you no longer; she shall come at once to my husband and me!'"

This latter phrase almost intoxicated Patty, so that there were moments when she could have run up to Milliken's mills and purchased herself a husband at any cost, had her slender savings permitted the best in the market, and the more impersonal the husband the more delightedly Patty rolled the phrase under her tongue.

"I can never be 'published' in church," she thought, "and perhaps nobody will ever care enough about me to brave father's displeasure and insist on running away with me. I do wish somebody would care 'frightfully' about me enough for that, enough to help me make up my mind, so that I could just drive up to father's store some day and say, 'Good afternoon, father! I knew you'd never let me marry!'—there was always a dash here in Patty's inauspicious discourses, a dash that could be filled in with any Christian name according to her mood of the moment—"so I just married him anyway and you needn't be angry with my sister, for she knew nothing about it. My husband and I are sorry if you are displeased, but there's no help for it, and my husband's home will always be open to Waitstill whatever happens!"

Patty, with all her latent love of finery and ease, did not weigh the worldly circumstances of the two men, though the reflection that she would have more amusement with Mark than with Philip may have crossed her mind. She trusted Philip and respected his steady going, serious view of life. It pleased her vanity, too, to feel how her nonsense and fun lightened his temperamental gravity, playing in and out and over it like a butterfly in a smoke bush. She would be safe with Philip always, but safety had no special charm for one of her age, who had never been in peril. Mark's superior knowledge of the world, moreover, his careless, buoyant manner of carrying himself, his gay, boyish audacity, all had a very distinct charm for her—and yet—

But there would be no "and yet" a little later. Patty's heart would blaze quickly enough when sufficient heat was applied to it and Mark was falling more and more deeply in love every day. As Patty vacillated his purpose strengthened, the more she weighed the more he ceased to weigh the difficulties of the situation, the more she unfolded herself to him the more he loved and the more he respected her. She began by delighting his senses, she ended by winning all that there was in him and creating continually the qualities he lacked, after the manner of true women even when they are very young and foolish.

CHAPTER XVI.

A State of Maine Prophet.

SUMMER was dying hard, for although it had passed, by the calendar, Mother Nature was still keeping up her customary attitude.

There had been a soft rain in the night, and every spear of grass was brilliantly green and tipped with crystal. The smoke bushes in the garden plot and the asparagus bed beyond them looked misty as the sun rose higher, drying the soaked earth and dripping branches. Spiders' webs, marvels of lace, dotted the short grass under the apple tree. Every flower that had a fragrance was pouring it gratefully into the air; every bird with a joyous note in its voice gave it more joyously from a bursting throat, and the river laughed and rippled in the distance at the foot of Town House hill. The dawn grew into full morning, and streams of blue smoke rose here and there from the Edgewood chimneys. The world was alive and so beautiful that Waitstill felt like going down on her knees in gratitude for having been born into it and given a chance of serving it in any humble way whatsoever.

Wherever there was a barn, in Riverboro or Edgewood, one could have heard the three legged stools being lifted from the pegs, and then would begin the music of the milk pails; first the resonant sound of the stream in the bottom of the tin pail, then the soft, delicious purring of the cascade into the full bucket, while the cows serenely chewed their cud and whisked away the flies with swinging tails.

Deacon Baxter was taking his cows to a pasture far over the hill, the feed having grown too short in his own fields. Patty was washing dishes in the kitchen and Waitstill was in the dairy house at the butter making, one of her chief delights. She worked with speed and with beautiful sureness, patting, squeezing, rolling the golden mass like the true artist she was, then turning the sweet scented waxen balls out of the mould onto the big stone china platter that stood waiting. She had been up early, and for the last hour she had toiled with devouring eagerness that she might have a little time to herself. It was hers now, for Patty would be busy with the beds after she finished the dishes, so she drew a folded paper from her pocket, the first communication she had ever received in Ivory's handwriting, and sat down to read it:

My Dear Waitstill—Rodman will take this packet and leave it with you when he finds opportunity. It is not in any real sense a letter, so I am in no danger of incurring your father's displeasure. You will probably have heard new rumors concerning my father during the past few days, for Peter Morrill has been to Enfield, N. H., where he says letters have been received stating that my father died in Cortland, O., more than five years ago. I shall do what I can to substantiate this fresh report, as I have always done with all the previous ones, but I have little hope of securing reliable information at this distance and after this length of time. I do not know when I can ever start on a personal quest myself, for even had I the money I could not leave home until Rodman is much older and fitted for greater responsibility. Oh, Waitstill, how you have helped my poor, dear mother! Would that I were free to tell you how I value your friendship! It is something more than mere friendship. What you are doing is like throwing a life line to a sinking human being. Two or three times of late mother has forgotten to set out the supper things for my father. Her ten years' incessant waiting for him seems to have subsided a little, and in its place she watches for you. [Ivory had written "watches for her daughter," but carefully erased the last two words.] You come but seldom, but her heart feeds on the sight of you. What she needs, it seems, was the magical touch of youth and health and strength and sympathy, the qualities you possess in such great measure.

If I had proof of my father's death I think now perhaps that I might try to break it gently to my mother, as if it were fresh news, and see if possibly I might thus remove her principal hallucination. You see now, do you not, how sane she is in many—indeed in most ways—how sweet and lovable, even how sensible?

To help you better to understand the influence that has robbed me of both father and mother and made me and mine the subject of town and tavern gossip for years past I have written for you just a sketch of the "Cochrane craze," the romantic story of a man who swayed the wills of his fellow creatures in a truly marvelous manner. Some local historian of his time will doubtless give him more space. My wish is to have you know something more of the circumstances that have made me a prisoner in life instead of a free man. But, prisoner as I am at the moment, I am sustained just now by a new courage. I read in my copy of Ovid last night, "The best of weapons is the undaunted heart." This will help you, too, in your hard life, for yours is the most undaunted heart in all the world.

IVORY BOYNTON.

The chronicle of Jacob Cochrane's career in the little villages near the Saco river has no such interest for the general reader as it had for Waitstill Baxter. She hung upon every word that Ivory had written and realized more clearly than ever before the shadow that had followed him since early boyhood—the same shadow that had fallen across his mother's mind and left continual twilight there.

No one really knew, it seemed, why or from whence Jacob Cochrane had come to Edgewood. He simply appeared at the old tavern a stranger, with satchel in hand, to seek entertainment. Uncle Bart had often described this scene to Waitstill, for he was one of those sitting about the great open fire at the time. The man easily slipped into the group and soon took the lead in conversation, delighting all with his agreeable personality, his nimble tongue and graceful speech. At supper time the hostess and the rest of the family took their places at the long table, as was the custom, and he astonished them by his knowledge not only of town history, but of village matters they had supposed unknown to any one.

When the stranger had finished his supper and returned to the barroom he had to pass through a long entry, and the landlady, whispering to her daughter, said:

"Betsy, you go up to the chamber closet and get the silver and bring it down. This man is going to sleep there, and I am afraid of him. He must be a fortune teller, and the Lord only knows what else!"

In going to the chamber the daughter had to pass through the barroom. As she was moving quietly through, hoping to escape the notice of the new-comer, he turned in his chair and, looking her full in the face, suddenly said:

"Madam, you needn't touch your silver. I don't want it. I am a gentleman."

Whereupon the bewildered Betsy scuttled back to her mother and told her the strange guest was indeed a fortune teller.

mirably, Philip Perry as well as Marquis Wilson. Young Perry's interest in Patty, as we have seen, began with his alienation from Ellen Wilson, the first object of his affections, and it was not at the outset at all of a sentimental nature. Philip was a pillar of the church, and Ellen had proved so entirely lacking in the religious sense, so self satisfied as to her standing with the heavenly powers, that Philip dared not expose himself longer to her society lest he find himself "unequally yoked together with an unbeliever," thus defying the scriptural admonition as to marriage.

Patty, though somewhat lacking in the qualities that go to the making of trustworthy saints, was not, like Ellen, wholly given over to the fleshpots and would prove a valuable convert, Philip thought, one who would reflect great credit upon him if he succeeded in inducing her to subscribe to the stern creed of the day.

Philip was a very strenuous and slightly gloomy believer, dwelling considerably on the wrath of God and the

OUR LOPSIDED BODIES.

Legs, Arms, Hands and Ears Are Rarely Perfectly Matched.

"I venture to assert that if you measure the legs of every one in this court you will not find a person who has a pair of equal length," said Dr. C. W. Cooke in giving evidence in a London court.

"The human body is not symmetrical, as is commonly believed," said a widely known doctor. "The legs vary in length and circumference, and the arms as well. The right hand is usually bigger than the left, because it is used more. The head is by no means regular in form—in fact, it is often as not lopsided.

"The left leg is generally a little longer than the right, presumably to counteract the overbalancing effect on the body of the right arm, which is usually somewhat heavier and longer than the left, since ninety-five out of every hundred people use their right arm more than their left. The eyes, too, are nearly always different, both in shape and strength, and through sleeping more on one side than another every man's ears are tilted at different angles. Feet, too, are nearly always unlike in shape, due frequently to the wearing of ill fitting boots.—London Mirror.

An Old English Custom.

In the northern counties of England there was practiced at Easter up to at least half a century ago the curious custom of "lifting." It may still exist, I have before me, writes a correspondent, a newspaper cutting of 1860, giving an account by an indignant commercial traveler of the ritual to which he was subjected on Easter Tuesday by the maids of a hotel at Crewe. He was placed in a chair, lifted three times and kissed by the merry revelers. It appeared that a like privilege might have been his for the exercising on Easter Monday—a privilege which absence made impossible. There is a reminiscence of a century earlier by a man who was treated by the maids of the Talbot inn, Shrewsbury, in a similar fashion, but who in addition had to pay a fee.—London Chronicle.

OYSTERS LIVE AND DEAD.

And the Big Difference it Makes When They Are Eaten Raw.

Speaking about keeping hotels, Simon Ford, who won fame and fortune in that profession, had this to say about the succulent oyster:

"People have come and sworn to me that we had the finest oysters in the world. Now, that was all tommy rot. We had the same oysters any one else could buy, although we always bought the best we could. But there is this about the oyster: When he is good he is very, very good; when he is bad he is very, very bad.

"There is a whole lot of difference between a dead oyster and a live one. When an experienced opener puts his knife into an oyster he can tell in a second if the oyster is really alive. He can even tell by the resistance whether the oyster is in prime condition or only fair. If the oyster was not just right our men would throw it away, and they used to throw away about one oyster in every four that we bought.

"A dead oyster isn't fit to eat raw. But the live oyster that is opened right in front of you and stays on the plate just long enough to squeeze a drop of lemon on, he goes down your throat a juicy and a palpitating treat. That's only possible when you stand up to an oyster bar.

"Why, in some of our glided palaces they begin to open oysters after breakfast and you get them for dinner. Well, you get them, that's all, and they're dead! A corpse is a corpse, even if it is kept on ice."—Henry M. Hall in New York World.

A Chinese Story.

A Chinese barber while shaving a customer's head drew blood and put one of his fingers on the place. Again he made a cut and put down another finger, and so on until he had no more fingers free. "Ah," said he as he paused in his work, "a barber's trade is difficult. We ought to have a thousand fingers!"

The Age of Cosmetics.

Lady Aberdeen, at a dinner in New York, uttered a neat epigram on the modern woman.

"The modern woman," she said, "rarely weeps. Her complexion won't stand it."

He Got Familiar.

Making the Little Farm Pay

By C. C. BOWSFIELD

A FEW wise farmers in the Chicago district got $2.50 to $5 a bushel for the corn they raise. They understand the selling end of farming as well as the producing end. One is about as important as the other.

These farmers buy sixty cent corn for feeding. They cannot afford to use their own product for this purpose. Being careful, systematic men, they raise corn of a high type, uniform and prolific, and they are becoming wealthy by this kind of brain work. There is a lesson for all farmers here.

Raise a first class article, whether grain, vegetables, chickens or pigs, and there will be no difficulty in finding people who want your product if you will but let them know what you have and what you sell it for.

I have often seen men going from store to store with a tin bucket and an old rag sticking out under the cover asking the merchants if they wanted butter, and at every place they would be told that it was not wanted, when in fact those very merchants were getting print butter all the way from far distant states. They knew the character of the butter in the tin buckets and did not want that sort. As with butter, so it is with all products of the farm. It is quality that makes the article sell.

Conditions are right for money making by the agricultural class. It simply remains for the farmers themselves to develop methods of selling by which they can take advantage of the improved markets. The rapid growth of cities and the sharp demand for all kinds of produce are substantial evidence of this improvement.

Co-operation is the first step. Organization may be applied not only in shipping, but in forming neighborhood clubs among city customers to whom regular quantities of produce may be delivered at stated intervals at prices which are reasonable and fair to both sides.

Abroad farmers market and dispose of their produce profitably through agricultural co-operative associations. They improve their methods, widen their markets and reduce their transportation expenses through co-operation. Why cannot our farmers do likewise?

When a farmer is located near a good market the thing for him to do is to sell to private customers. As his business enlarges he can furnish supplies to hotels and restaurants as well as residences. He can obtain any price in reason so long as his goods are choice. When producers are too far from a good market to drive in frequently the proposed method of co-operation is excellent. A number of them working together can agree to ship regularly a given quantity of produce to city consumers, and the latter can best handle the business by means of an organization of some sort.

There are many reasons why waterfowl are not more popular for the table than they are, but the chief reason is that they are so poorly fitted for the market. The big duck farms of the east are the only ones to give the proper finishing of ducks for the market the whole attention it deserves. They have educated the market to an appreciation of good waterfowl and have been rewarded in price for the effort expended.

It pays well to be able to furnish in their season such articles as strawberries, currants, cucumbers, cherries, apples, raspberries, sweet corn, cabbage honey and other products of the kind. These pay ten times as much as the grain crops. An acre of cherries or apples will net about $150 after paying for the labor of picking and marketing. The others are equally profitable or nearly so.

A farmer raising fruit should make contracts with private customers or grocers as early in the season as he can—that is, as soon as he can tell something about what the yield is to be. He will thus get better returns than by shipping to a large produce market. The same method is best in marketing poultry, eggs and vegetables.

Beautiful Home Grounds.

No matter how poor he may be, every farmer can afford to have beautiful home grounds. Very many of the plants and shrubs best suited for lawn decoration can be found growing wild in practically every neighborhood, if not upon every farm. The only expense required is that for the labor of digging and replanting them.

Replying to inquiries made by farmers, James G. Moore of the college of agriculture of the University of Wisconsin offered these suggestions for the improvement of home grounds:

In making a lawn do not crowd the space. You will need a large court within your border of shrubs and flowers, and, above all, do not surround the house with trees which shut out the sunlight. Do not plant trees or shrubs in straight rows, except along the boundaries or borders of the yard. Do not overplant your lawn. Do not introduce gaudy shrubs or cheap and flashy ornaments.

BIRDS ARE FARMERS' FRIENDS

Most Valuable Campaigners Against Destructive Insects.

Last year American farmers lost $1,250,000,000 through the depredations of insects, according to figures compiled by the department of agriculture. Much of that loss was suffered in the south, and recently James Henry Rice, Jr., field secretary for the National Association of Audubon Societies, which has its general headquarters in New York, went to Atlanta to establish southern headquarters.

Birds of all sorts play an important part in exterminating insect pests, and because of this the establishment of southern headquarters for the bird protective organization is directly related to the condition of crop destruction. It is estimated by an Atlanta authority that Georgia alone suffered $40,000,000 crop losses as a result of insects last year. In all of the southern states, especially the cotton states, where the boll weevil still makes a heavy toll on agriculture, the damage wrought by insects is constantly increasing. This is being used as an argument by the Audubon societies and is gaining for them loyal support among southern agriculturists.

Mr. Rice says insectivorous birds in Georgia consume more than 150,000 bushels of insects a day. Deprived of the birds' protection, its fields and orchards would become a desert.

The figures given by the agricultural department do not represent all of the loss entailed by insects, however. Many more millions of dollars are spent in the campaigns fighting insects, and these expenditures are logically losses caused by insects. Massachusetts is spending $1,000,000 a year fighting the gypsy and browntail moths. It is combating them with fire, ax, sprayed poison and creosote, and still many hundreds of fine old elms in Massachusetts are falling each year, and other valuable vegetation is dying because of the insects' activities. The same kind of campaign against other insects is being carried on in a score of states at heavy expenditure and with pitifully small results. The Audubon societies argue that the most valuable and successful campaigners against destructive insects are birds, and the argument is getting more game protective laws and a heartier popular support.

PLANT ASSOCIATION.

Especially Beneficial in Case of Leguminous Plants.

It has long been known that some plants are benefited and some are injured by association. Association seems to be especially beneficial in case of leguminous plants (peas, clover, etc.) and cereals or grasses. Recent investigations by the New York Cornell and the New Jersey experiment stations throw new light on the reasons for this beneficial effect. It appears that the leguminous plants not only gather nitrogen from the atmosphere by means of their root tubercle bacteria and are therefore able to make a large growth, but that some of the nitrogen so gathered is passed on to the grain, grass or other nonleguminous plant associated with it.

The result is a large growth of the nonlegume and also a higher content of protein or nitrogenous material, which considerably increases its value as food for stock. Such benefit has been noted from the growth of clover and timothy, alfalfa and timothy and oats and peas. Other combinations have not been studied. The increased growth of plants in combination over that of single crops, together with the improved composition of the former, has resulted in some cases in an increase of more than 30 per cent in the production of protein per acre. This increased value probably extends to the roots and stems left in the soil and means much in the production of food for stock and in soil improvement.

Cutworms Barred Out.

Some gardens are so infested with cutworms that many gardeners have almost given up in despair. Here is a device that fools the cutworms.

Take a piece of strong paper about sixteen inches long and five inches wide, cut slits in one edge about two inches deep and form in a hat shape as in A. Place around the plant with rim about one-half inch deep in the ground and cover as in B, and you will stop the cutworms.

The slit edge should be at right angles to the rest of the paper.—Farm and Fireside.

POULTRY NOTES.

Feed some meat to the hens, but not too heavy. Too much meat acts as a laxative for laying hens.

Early hatched ducklings are always most profitable. Get out as many as you can.

Vegetable foods are important to the health of the fowl. They induce increased eating and increased egg production. Fowls eat more grain when fed green foods than otherwise. Mangels, cabbage, turnips, potatoes, rape, lettuce and onions are good vegetables for poultry. Potatoes are best fed boiled.

Green cut bone is the finest kind of a meat food that can be had in the winter. It is palatable and much relished by the birds, contains from 14 to 16 per cent of protein and costs about one-third as much as beef scraps. It should always be fed in limited quantities. About one pound to thirty hens is the right amount when fed in addition to beef scrap.—Farm Press.

ROAD BUILDING

Hummelstown Pike, Considered a Model by Experts, Built by Telford-Macadam Method.

The Hummelstown Pike, near Harrisburg, Pa., has been considered by experts to be a model road. It was built in 1908, using the telford-macadam construction; native limestone was used for the telford course, and Birdsboro trap rock for the top, says a writer in Northwestern Agriculturist.

There are certain sections of this highway that were flooded during a cloudburst, and the top surface which was washed off the road was replaced by grouting with one part cement and two parts sand.

The road was built nine inches in depth, five inches telford and four inches macadam course. Shortly after completion there were several surface treatments of a light coal tar product, consisting of a mixture of water, gas, tar, cement, liquid asphaltum, road oil, carbolic disinfecting powder, sulphate of copper and oil of wintergreen. The sulphate of copper was used to prevent the oils from becoming ignited, and the wintergreen counteracted the odors of the others. A curious effect of the mixture was said to be its disinfecting power, there not being a single contagious disease in that section. Unfortunately, however, this does not appear to be lasting as at this time, four years after it was applied, there is no evidence of this tar product on the road.

During the last season the maintenance department resurfaced another section of this road between Rutherford Subway and Swatara Creek. This work consisted merely of placing about four inches of crushed stone upon the old roadbed, and binding with sufficient screenings wetted and rolled.

EXPERTS MUST BUILD ROADS

Explanation of Failure of Authorities Generally to Maintain Roads and Streets.

The astonishing results of a census taken recently on a secondary thoroughfare leading out of London showed only 3 per cent of horse-drawn vehicles. The exact count was 15 vehicles of the latter class to 500 vehicles propelled otherwise than by horses. Herein lies both an explanation of the failure of public authorities generally throughout the world to maintain roads and streets in good condition, and also a presentation of the difficulties that road constructors now confront.

A similar example of the extraordinary change that has occurred in the use of roads in recent years is that of a furniture manufacturing concern in Easton, which delivers on its own trucks in New York city instead of using the already-constructed steel roads, namely, the railroads. This concern uses the ordinary roads. A considerable tonnage is thus transferred from the steel roads, specially constructed to bear it, to the country road, not constructed for any such weight or friction. It has thus come to pass that the science of engineering, which was called upon to furnish experts to railroad companies, is now also called upon to furnish experts to road-building authorities.

The greater the pressure of tonnage, the heavier the expenditure must be on the structure that is to withstand that pressure, whether it be railroad, country road or city street.

Tankage for Hogs.

Tankage is a product of the slaughtering-houses. It is a prepared food, cooked and steamed, then dried and ground. Because it is so rich in protein it is very desirable for balancing farm-raised feeds. It has been discovered that using one or two parts of tankage with eight or nine parts of corn not only gives better growth and development to young hogs, but brings fattening hogs to a finish much quicker and cheaper.

Our Rack Emptying Sale of Summer Apparel and Millinery

COMMENCING SATURDAY, JULY 11TH

Every rack, shelf and case must be emptied of all summer wearing apparel and millinery. To accomplish this quickly we have made sweeping, decisive reductions of one-third to one-half former price.

Opportunities for saving are generally accompanied by an element of risk. In this and other respects this Rack Emptying Sale is the exception. When selecting these stocks, the question was—not how low a price could be reached, but for how little we could offer merchandise of thoroughly dependable quality. It is in this merchandise that has been reduced one-third to one-half!

No prices have been marked up and then reduced—genuine reductions, dependable qualities and truthful statements regarding the apparel and millinery offered make this a typical Quinlan Sale—one in which you will make remarkable savings.

Genoa Wins Again.

Last Saturday's ball game was one of the best of the season. While both teams played excellent ball, the Genoa played the kind of ball that is making for them a reputation and at the same time placing them in a position to walk off with the championship of central New York.

The game was a hummer from start to finish and the box score below tells the story.

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL

THE CIVIC CENTER;
HEART OF CITY'S DESIGN.

Should Be Easily Accessible to All Parts of Town.

The civic center is the heart of a city's design. It gives the city its vital individuality and imparts a sense of unity and cohesion which cannot be obtained in any other manner. A city with a suitable civic center no longer gives the impression of being an accidental conglomeration of buildings. It becomes an organized whole and gains a new dignity and a new meaning.

It is possible for every city to have a suitable plan, and every city, if it is not built on such a plan, should be re-planned and rebuilt. The lack of design and ignorance on the part of the city authorities of earlier administrations. The absence of such a plan is a detriment and an injury to all who make the city their home.

In many cities, however, the legacy of carelessness and incompetency proves too heavy to be lifted immediately, while in others the development of an elaborate system is beyond their financial resources.

In every case, however, it is possible to adopt a plan which may, little by little, be carried into execution with ultimately the greatest beneficial results.

Not only motives of civic pride and patriotism go to make the civic center desirable, but also the strongest motives of social and municipal economy and efficiency.

A civic center should contain, except in cities of large size where more than one center is required, the municipal and federal buildings, such as the city hall, courthouse, hall of records, post office, federal court building and various city departmental buildings.

The civic center should, of course, have a central location and be readily accessible from all parts of the city and surrounding suburban districts. Several main arteries of traffic should radiate from the civic center, making it the center of the city's street plan the keystone in the arch of its design.

A civic center of large extent, in addition to its artistic and psychological effect, is of great value as a place for the assembling of large numbers of people on great public occasions. It is a central point for the reviewing of parades and for the reception of noted visitors to the city. The mistake most likely to be made in planning a civic center is to make it too small in area. The expense of a large center, though usually very great, is one that should be incurred as early as practicable in the existence of the city, for as the value of the ground increases constantly it is an investment which never depreciates in value. It is a matter of wisdom for a city contemplating civic improvements to purchase the necessary land and lease it until the time comes for the actual rebuilding, ten or twenty years later.

The civic center should be so placed as to be easily accessible to all parts of the city, and if necessary new avenues and streets should be cut through to afford the proper approach. It should be conveniently placed with reference to transportation lines, but no transportation line should penetrate it, passing at most along the sides. Nor should traffic from bridges, elevated stations, subways, ferries or railway stations be discharged directly into the civic center, such terminals being more advantageously placed adjacent to it. It should not thus be an artery of traffic, but, so to speak, the center of the whirlpool of the city's transportation.—Frank Rowser, Author of "Modern City Planning and Maintenance."

Planning and Saving.

From 25 to 40 per cent of all the land in modern cities is accounted for by streets. In New York city, it was stated last summer, there were 2,677 miles of public streets. The value of the land they occupied was estimated, with its improvements, at $9,400,000,000—one-fourth as great as the value of all the farm land in the United States.

If the city planners should find some way of planting streets that would effect a saving of as little as 1 per cent in their area, think of the high finance that it would spell. One per cent for New York alone would have meant $94,000,000, and New York is only one city. The wise planning of towns is evidently a big and vital problem, even when from its efficiency and social benefits which are the aspects of it of which we hear the most.

CIVIC AWAKENING IN SMALL CITIES.

Examples of What It Effected Under Widely Different Conditions.

The possibility of producing a civic awakening in small cities under widely different conditions has been recently demonstrated in Petersburg, Va., and the group of towns in northern New Jersey of which Union Hill is the center.

Petersburg had a population in 1910 of 24,127, of whom 11,014 were negroes. The town of Union in 1910 had 21,023 population, with a considerable additional population in adjacent municipalities having interests in common.

In Petersburg the chamber of commerce had rendered a service which, in view of its limited income and the lack of city wide support, was creditable. The total income was $8,125. It became increasingly evident, however, that the public at large must give its interest and support if the chamber was to measure up to the needs of the city. Accordingly a campaign of education was undertaken under the direction of Lucius E. Wilson and Samuel Wilson of the American City Bureau. At the end of two weeks there were 340 members with a comprehensive idea as to the broad functions of the chamber of commerce, giving the organization an income of $8,500.

In Union Hill the old board of trade had gone out of existence after turning its effects over to a handful of citizens, who at once organized the Chamber of Commerce of North Hudson. A dinner at which the governor and attorney general were among the speakers was the largest attended function of this kind ever held in North Hudson. During the next two weeks, under the leadership of Lowry W. Statler of the American City Bureau, 450 members joined the chamber. More significant even, several surrounding towns showed by their activity during the campaign that the advancement of the community as a whole can transcend considerations that are limited by township lines.—American City.

THE STANDARD OF COMFORT.

Other Things Are to Be Considered Besides Money and Length of Life.

Money and length of life are not the only things to be considered, says George C. Whipple in the American City. It is what lies between one's birth and death that really counts. Of what avail to add a few years to the length of life if personal comfort and happiness are not enhanced? What, after all, is the chief end of man—to live long upon the earth or to obtain the best enjoyment from the best environment? Whatever may be our philosophy, we must admit that our five senses deserve consideration. Judged from this standpoint, some of the sanitary arts which do not yield a dollar for dollar profit begin to loom large.

Clean streets, clean houses, clean cars, clean rivers and clean harbors have a value because they tend to make life more comfortable, more decent and more moral. Sewage treatment, while it does not pay large vital dividends, may yet yield a profit measured in terms of comfort and decency. To what extent can physical comfort and happiness be secured in a tenement house where people live crowded together, 1,000 to the acre—forty-three square feet of land for each person, a square seven feet on a side—not much larger than in a respectable cemetery? The greatest evil of congestion is that true home life is rendered impossible. The greatest evil of machine labor is that the laborer gets little mental pleasure from his work. The lack of home comforts and of comfortable working conditions is bound to influence both vitality and health.

Street Systematizer.

A street naming system which has been suggested denominates all main east and west thoroughfares as "streets" and minor ones as "places." All main north and south thoroughfares as "avenues" and minor ones as "courts" and all diagonal thoroughfares as "ways." All "streets" to the north of a central east and west base would have even numbers, and all those south of that line odd numbers. In the same way, all "avenues" east of a north and south base line would have even numbers and those west of that line odd numbers. Diagonal "ways" may be numbered or given a name indicating the direction from the center of the city. The house numbering would be on the declinal system, 100 to each block disregarding intervening "places" or "courts", with the even numbers on the north and east sides. This method is proposed by H. E. Bartlett of Chicago.—Engineering News.

Sign Crusade in England.

The crusade against outdoor advertising signs in England accomplished results years ago. It was the Society for the Prevention of Abuses in Public Advertising—called "Spada" for short—that led the fight. There is now a well enforced law in England which empowers local authorities to frame bylaws "for regulating, restricting or preventing the exhibition of advertisements in such manner or by such means as to affect injuriously the amenities of a public park or pleasure promenade, or to disfigure the natural beauty of a landscape."

COUNTRY BOYS' CREED.

In every schoolhouse in Prince Edward county, Va., a placard containing a creed for the American country boy and dedicated to the Boys' Corn Club of Virginia has been posted. It reads: "I believe that the country which God made is more beautiful than the city which man made; that life out of doors and in touch with the earth is the natural life of man. I believe that work with nature is more inspiring than work with the most intricate machinery. I believe that the dignity of labor depends not on what you do, but how you do it; that opportunity comes to a boy on the farm as often as to a boy in the city; that life is larger and freer and happier on the farm than in the town; that my success depends not upon my location, but upon myself; not upon my dreams, but upon what I actually do; not upon luck, but upon pluck. I believe in working when you work and in playing when you play, and in giving and demanding a square deal in every act of life."

SOWING CLOVER SEED.

In General Too Little Rather Than Too Much Is Put Into the Ground.

Clover should invariably be sown in the spring and, under normal conditions, comparatively early.

Broadcasting the seed and following with a harrow has been frequently advised and is successful in Minnesota during wet seasons and on heavy soils, but is often unsatisfactory in dry seasons and on light soils. Clover should not be sown too deeply, and yet it is desirable to sow it sufficiently deep that it will neither blow out nor dry out easily. Under most conditions either using the grass seed attachment to the drill or mixing the seed with the grain is to be recommended. Excellent stands of grass have been obtained by mixing the red clover with the grain and sowing the balance of the grass seed mixtures broadcast. If grass seed is mixed with the grain and sown with a drill the drill should not be run more than from one to two inches deep.

The amount of seed per acre will vary slightly with the method of seeding and the purity and germinating power of the seed. It is believed that in general too little rather than too much seed is sown. If clover is sown separately it should be at the rate of from eight to ten pounds of red or mammoth, from four to six of alsike and from three to four of white clover.—A. C. Army, Assistant Agriculturist, University Farm, St. Paul.

Balance For the Panel Gate.

The ordinary panel gate made of 1 by 4 boards with one end swung on a crosspiece between two posts is so heavy that it is a strain on the whole body of a full grown man and a waste of strength, yet such gates will be used on many corn belt farms for years to come. Here is a good way to avoid this strain. Nail a board to each side of the top rail of the stationary end of the gate, extending two and one-half feet, as shown in the illustration, and bolt or nail the ends of these to one end of a 2 by 4 brace, the other end of which rests on a block nailed at the end of the bottom rail. Then hang a weight at the end of your extension which will almost balance the weight of the gate. It is well to fasten strap irons where the gate rests on its pivot board in order to avoid wear. When this arrangement is made the strain of opening the gate is gone, and all you have to do is to guide the end around.

LEGAL NOTES.

Breach of Warranty in Sale of a Horse.—A. buys from B. a horse which B. represents is sound and a brood mare, but these representations do not prove true. What is A.'s remedy?

In a majority of the states, including Pennsylvania, a buyer's proper remedy upon a breach of warranty is by an action for damages in which he may recover the difference between the value of the horse in her actual condition and what she would have been worth if she had been as warranted. In some states, however, a buyer is entitled, upon a breach of warranty, to return the horse and recover the purchase money.

Fruit Trees Overhanging Boundary.—Where a fruit tree grows on A.'s land, but the branches extend over the boundary line upon B. so as to shade and otherwise interfere with B.'s enjoyment of his land, has B. the right to cut these overhanging branches? Also, does the fruit growing on the overhanging branches belong to B.?

Since the entire trunks of the trees grow on A.'s land, A. owns the trees, including the overhanging branches and the fruit growing on them. To the extent, however, that the branches overhang B.'s land they constitute a nuisance, and B. has the legal right to abate the nuisance by trimming the branches off up to the boundary line.

When making a written contract with a firm or corporation through its agent do not rely upon an oral statement or promise of the agent when it differs from the written contract.

The Bible—What It Is

By REV. WILLIAM EVANS, D.D.
Director of Bible Course
Moody Bible Institute, Chicago

The Bible is not only the book of God, it is also the book from God. At least this is the way in which it gives its own account of its origin: "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God"—that is to say, in "God-breathed" (II Timothy 3:16). Again, in II Peter 1:20, 21, we read: "Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation [or origin, for it seems clear that it is to the source rather than to the exposition of the Scripture that reference is here made.] For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man, but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." Here are some very clear and definite statements concerning the source of the Scripture. It is this "God-breathed" element that differentiates this book from all other writings. The Bible is quite often referred to nowadays as splendid "literature." Well, the Bible is that, but it is more than that—it is Scripture. Literature is the letter; Scripture is the letter breathed by the holy spirit. Just as in the creation of man we learn that man became a living soul when that frame of dust, as it lay on the ground, became inbreathed by the spirit of life from God. Man is dust inbreathed by deity, and if you take away the spirit of life from man he returns to dust. So is it with the Bible; it is the letter, but it is the letter inbreathed by God's spirit that makes that letter Scripture. And when you rob the Bible of its inspiration you have nothing but mere literature left—you have no Scripture.

The Bible the Authority in Matters of Faith and Practice.

Where is the seat of authority in matters of religion? This is always the problem of the day. Various replies are given to the question. Reason, says one, is the seat of final authority. May not the intellect with its various functions be relied upon to render sure judgments? One has only to recall the grotesque fancies that have from time to time taken hold of the finest and brainiest men and led them into the grossest delusions to satisfy himself that the seat of authority does not lie in the reason. Not that we are to throw reason away in matters of religion; for while faith is oftentimes above reason, it is by no means contrary to it. The voice of reason, however, is not to be considered final and authoritative.

Can we not depend upon conscience, that organ as delicate and sensitive as the balance turned by a speck of dust, to admonish us of evil, to praise us for the good, and settle for us the right and wrong of matters religious? We have but to recall into what incalculable mischief the consciences of some men have led them—Saul of Tarsus, for example—to recognize speedily that we must look elsewhere for our authority. "In all good conscience men have written deadly heresies in their books, and under the sanctions of a religious conscience have performed deeds of violence and shame."

There are people who claim that the church is the ultimate authority in matters of faith and practice. This is the position of the Roman church. Called of God, divinely founded, with perpetual witnesses to the truth, with bishops and councils—surely the church is a sufficient guide. Yet what enormities have flourished under the banner of the church! So long as she is composed of fallible human beings the church can never be final and authoritative in matters of faith and practice.

On every hand we hear the cry, "Back to Christ," he and he alone. Is the final and ultimate authority in all these matters. We certainly have no desire to take any glory away from the church's Lord and Master. In order to give it to so sacred a book even as the Bible. We are willing to go "back to Christ." But where shall we find him? With the exception of a reference in Josephus and a line or two in Tacitus where, outside of the Bible, shall we find Christ? So we see that in order to "get back to Christ" we are in duty bound to fall back upon the Scriptures.

For our master himself the Scriptures were considered sufficient authority in matters of faith and practice. It would repay anyone to look up all the passages in which these words of the master occur, "Is it not written?" "Have ye not read?" "What saith the Scriptures?" "It is written." A careful study of such Scripture references will reveal the fact that Christ referred to the Scriptures as the authority which settled matters of faith and practice for him. Should the Bible be less to the church than it was to the church's master? We think not.

To know how to wait is the great secret of success.—De Maistre.

THE SEASONABLE BERRIES.

As the different berries of which we are all so fond, appear, let us serve them in a variety of attractive ways so that they will always seem a new dish.

Currant Pudding.—Put a cupful of tapioca in a small strainer and let cold water run through it to cleanse it; pour boiling water over it and cook in a double boiler until the tapioca is transparent; add a fourth of a teaspoonful of salt and stir often while cooking. Pick over a quart of ripe currants, wash and drain, then sprinkle with two cupfuls of sugar, turn the tapioca over them and set away to cool. Serve ice cold with cream.

Raspberry Sandwiches.—Cut sponge cake into pieces of suitable size for serving individually, and split each piece. Have ready a box of red raspberries, slightly crushed; put the berries between and above each layer, dust the top thickly with powdered sugar and serve with whipped cream.

Raspberry Ice.—Sprinkle one quart of berries with one cupful of sugar, cover and let stand two hours. Wash and squeeze through a cheese cloth. Add one cupful of cold water and lemon juice to taste; then freeze.

Gloucester Blueberry Cake.—Cream four tablespoonfuls of butter, add one-half cup of sugar and add one beaten egg and a fourth of a teaspoonful of salt; dissolve a half teaspoonful of soda in a half cupful of sour milk, add this; sift two cupfuls of flour, reserving a fourth of a cupful to cover the berries. Mix all together and add the floured berries. Bake in a shallow pan in a hot oven 30 minutes. Serve broken, not cut.

Frozen Cherries.—Boil a cupful of sugar and two cupfuls of water about ten minutes, add two cupfuls of cherry pulp that has been put through a colander. Pour into a freezer, freeze and serve with a large cherry on top.

A delicious sauce is made with cream, a half cupful, and a glass of currant jelly, whipped until smooth. Pour this around any sweet pudding, like snowballs or any simple dough mixture, steamed.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

Fools make feasts and wise men eat them.

He is not well bred who cannot bear ill-breeding in others.

The busy man has few idle visitors; to the boiling pot the flies come not.

The honest man takes pains, and then enjoys pleasures; the knave takes pleasures and then suffers pains.—Benjamin Franklin.

CHERRIES ARE RIPE.

There is no fruit which quite takes the place of the cherry and the fresh, juicy and luscious fruit is best eaten fresh from the tree. As we have so short a season, it must needs be prolonged by various methods of preserving. Now that the large Bing cherries are in market try putting them up for a delicious conserve to serve with meats in winter. Pit the cherries and cover with a fine cider vinegar and let them stand over night. In the morning take an equal weight of the drained cherries and sugar, mix well, put into a jar, stir until the sugar is dissolved, then place in the cellar with a cloth and plate over the jar. This may be dipped into as long as it lasts and will keep indefinitely.

Breakfast Cherries.—Chilled cherries with steams and leaves left on for garnish make a refreshing breakfast fruit. Another way liked by many is pitted cherries, well sugared and sprinkled with lemon juice in layers.

Cherry pie is one that needs not to have its praises sung, for all mankind bow down to its merits.

Cherry Punch.—Place two slices of shredded pineapple in a bowl with three sliced oranges, the juice of four lemons and a pound of cherries that have been pitted and bruised. Cover with one and a half cupfuls of sugar and let the mixture stand two hours. Then press out the juice, add two cupfuls of Ceylon tea, one quart of ice water, two sliced bananas and a cupful of large cherries, cut in quarters. Add a block of ice and serve in punch glasses.

Cherry Salad.—Remove the stones from a pint of cherries, saving all the juice; fill the cavities with chopped celery and nuts. Chill and serve on lettuce leaves with a dressing made from the cherry juice, a little lemon juice, sugar, and olive oil if liked.
