Eye Trials of To-day.

Looking facts in the face is the way the wise ones act. Those who look another way at the trials of to-day add to the sufferings of to-morrow. If your eyes are weak, if a film covers over them, or they ache, or burn, or bother you in any way, don't delay in consulting me. I will tell you what you ought to do. Largest Fraternal Order.

On April 26, the Order of Odd Fellows will show a membership of over 3,000,000 members, the largest fraternal organization the world has ever known. This celebration day will find the order with 68 Grand Lodges and 56 Grand Encampments; 17,985 subordinate lodges with 1,624,606 members; 3,697 Encampments with 227,806 Patriarchs; 9,543 Rebekah lodges with 687,039 members 450,709 of whom are sisters, making a grand aggregate of 2,080,894 brothers and sisters enrolled beneath the triple links of our mighty fraternity. During the past year has been paid out for relief $5,854,271.64. Since 1830 the total paid for relief is $142,552,661.72. The order has invested funds to the amount of $63,381,218.87. According to last report, New York State alone has 122,718 subordinate lodge members; 17,544 encampment members; 42,508 Rebekah members and 2,348 patriarchs militant. The total paid for relief in New York State according to last report for the year was $411,901.45—L. O. O. F. Record.

"This is Fierce."

A Cleveland man who makes a practice of choosing his words with care, a practice which he has endeavored to instill into the family circle, made a memorandum of the misused words uttered by his son and daughter during a recent breakfast. Here is the result: Elegant, nineteen times. Awful, eleven times. Dandy, six times. Fierce, four times. Great, two times. When the meal was over the head of the household called the family around him in the library and gravely read the totals to them. "Gee, that's fierce," said the boy. "Isn't it awful?" said the daughter.

An Elephant for Taxpayers.

A prominent engineer says the past week's floods in this state have caused $50,000,000 damage to the barge canal. The loss will bankrupt many contractors. The banks of earth supporting locks have been washed away and retaining walls have been broken or strained. Big and rich though the Empire State is, the Barge canal is proving an elephant for taxpayers. It is the one stupendous folly of the present generation and will be a burden on succeeding generations. — Skaneateles Free Press.

Died.

HOAG—At the Hahnemann hospital, Rochester, N. Y., April 23, 1913, Lydia C. Hazard, widow of Franklin Hoag, formerly of Poplar Ridge, aged 78 years.

Funeral services were held at the North meeting house, Poplar Ridge, on Friday afternoon, April 25, at 3 o'clock. Burial at the cemetery adjoining.

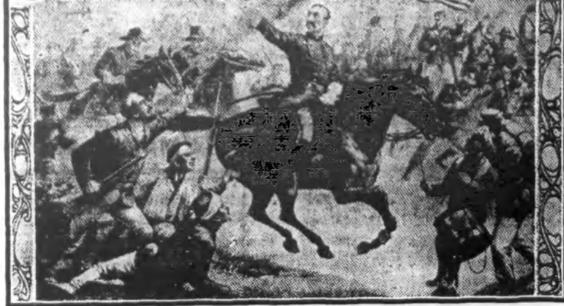

"Bang" went the rifles at the maneuvers. "Oo-oo!" screamed the pretty girl—a nice, decorous, surprised little scream. She stepped backward into the surprised arms of a young man.

"Oh," said she, blushing. "I was frightened by the rifles. I beg your pardon."

"Not at all," said the young man. "Let's go over and watch the military." — Cincinnati Times-Star.

A Stirring Story of Military Adventure and of a Strange Wartime Wooing, Founded on the Great Play of the Same Name

President Davis and his cabinet had left Richmond by special train for Danville. Colonel Robert Ellingham had hurried away on horseback in the opposite direction immediately after the marriage ceremony to join the army of General Lee, now marching out of Petersburg up the north side of the Appomattox river toward Amelia Court House.

The only people who remained in Richmond were those who were poor and could not go away, or those who, like the Ellinghams, had no other interests to hold them there and no other place to go to should they leave the city, and those others who, like Colonel Kerchival West, were Union soldiers in Confederate prisons or on parole.

At the same time General Grant was riding into Petersburg through deserted streets between rows of closed, silent streets. The next day he started with his army after the departing Confederates, his columns moving south of the Appomattox parallel to Lee's route north of that stream. He had McLean House, where Grant and Lee met.

Gordon's aid. The firing suddenly ceased. The Confederate line halted, hesitated, then sullenly faced about and fell back upon the confused, forlorn mass of ragged grays that were huddled around Appomattox Court House.

"The war in Virginia is over," said Sheridan to General Haverill, passing as the latter's troops still advanced, until a white flag of truce appeared in the distance, approaching like a reluctant dove of peace.

"Now there is nothing left me but to go and see General Grant," General Lee had said.

"Oh, general," came the protest of his lieutenants, "what will the world say of the surrender of your army in the field?"

"Yes, they will say hard things of us, I know. They will not understand how we were overwhelmed by numbers. But that is not the question. The question is, Is it right to surrender? If it is right then I will take all the responsibility."

The note brought under flag of truce to the Federal lines was General Lee's reply to an earlier communication from General Grant. The proposition had been made and accepted for a suspension of hostilities pending negotiations looking to the surrender of Lee's army.

During the interval occupied by these arrangements a stately, gray bearded Federal officer approached Colonel Ellingham, who had been sent by General Gordon with the flag of truce, and drawing something—doubtless a document—from his side pocket said:

"Colonel, I have been requested while waiting to extend to you the courtesies of this side of the line—at the same time proffering the supposed document, which proved to be a silver flask.

Then Colonel Ellingham recognized General Haverill—the Mexican war comrade of his father under the old flag, and his own and Gertrude's guardian until the great sundering of sacred ties by the awful outbreak of civil strife that now had spent itself after laying the country and its homes and industries desolate.

"We meet under difficult circumstances, General Haverill," faltered Bob, "but—I trust there are no hard feelings?"

"None, Robert, my boy—quite the contrary. It is time, God knows! How are Gertrude and—"

"She and Kerchival were married last Sunday," answered Bob. He saw the general's face alter strangely, and his whole attitude stiffen, as if his heart had suddenly frozen. So he hastened to add, "But we have not been able to locate Captain Heartsease, and I hardly dare to speculate as to what has become of him."

"On that point I can give you welcome news," said General Haverill, recovering his old cordiality. "He escaped while being transferred from Danville and came to us at Petersburg to rejoin the corps. But he was in no condition for campaigning, so I sent him on to Washington, where I have no doubt Miss Jenny Buckthorn will succeed in nursing him to recovery."

In due time word was received from General Grant that he was coming on immediately to discuss terms of surrender with the southern commander. General Grant's courier found General Lee near Appomattox Court House, lying under an apple tree upon a blanket spread over some pines. Whence originated the report about Lee's having surrendered "beneath the apple tree of Appomattox."

The historic meeting of the two generals really took place at the house of Wilmer McLean, a Virginian, who, before and during the first battle of Manassas, had resided at McLean's ford, over Bull Run, and who had removed thence to Appomattox expressly in order to be out of the war's way.

General Grant, accompanied by Generals Sheridan and Ord and several other officers, including General Haverill, presented a striking contrast to General Lee, who, with a couple of staff officers, awaited him in the old fashioned parlor of the McLean residence.

Grant, forty-three years old, medium sized and somewhat stoop shouldered, wore no marks of rank except a general's shoulder straps on his blue flannel blouse. His trousers were tucked in his boots, and he had neither spurs nor sword. Lee, a dozen years older than his late adversary, had the stature and bearing of an old knight crusader. His hair and beard were silver gray. He wore a plain but handsome uniform of Confederate gray, top boots with spurs, gauntlets and a dress sword. This unaccustomed side arm was a splendid blade engraved on one side with the motto "Aide toi et Dieu t'aidera," on the other side with the inscription, reminiscent of the campaign that had ended at Antietam. "General Robert E. Lee, from a Marylander, 1863."

The terms of surrender discussed and reduced to writing at General Lee's request embraced the parole of officers and men "not to take up arms against the government of the United States until properly exchanged;" arms, artillery and public property to be turned over to Federal officers, this latter provision not embracing the side arms of the Confederate officers nor their private horses or baggage.

Before this draft was copied in ink for signing General Lee took opportunity to remark that his cavalymen and many of the artillerymen owned their horses and asked whether these men as well as the officers would be permitted to retain them.

"I suppose," said Grant sympathetically, "that a great many of the men in your ranks are small farmers when they are at home and in that case will need their horses just now to put in crops to carry themselves and their families through next winter. Well, then, we will have it set down that any man who claims to own a horse or mule may retain the animal and take it home with him."

"That will have a very good effect," said Lee, much gratified.

The Union commander acted with good grace in his own disposition and at the same time was in perfect accord with the expressed wish of President Lincoln at Richmond, when General Weitzel had asked what he should do in regard to the "conquered people."

"Oh, if I were you I'd let 'em up easy!" was Mr. Lincoln's reply. "I'd let 'em up easy."

Indeed, the behavior of Grant at Appomattox touched the heights of true poetic chivalry, springing from a kind and magnanimous heart. He neither demanded nor accepted Lee's sword, as formal military custom might have justified him in doing, but actually apologized for not having his own, which in the hurry of departure he had left behind in the wagon.

Such an occasion, of course, would be incomplete without Madeline's brother Kerchival and Colonel Ellingham's sister Gertrude. That happy pair of "newlyweds" were even now hastening on from Richmond for the grand matrimonial celebration of the war's ending. Dr. Ellingham had promised to come with them. The headquarters of the joyous and eventful reunion was to be the hospitable home of General Buckthorn.

The return of General Haverill was set for the very day of the wedding of his former ward, Robert Ellingham. That the call of his own home had not brought him back long before seemed unaccountable to all—most of all to his own wife, Mrs. Constance Haverill.

Mrs. Haverill and her daughter Edith, as she now called poor Frank's widow, sat together in the cozy morning room of the Haverill residence the day before the—before the day. Edith's little son, a sturdy four-year-old, was playing soldier with some other children in the dooryard outside.

"It seems hardly possible that the war is over," said Edith, standing at the window. "With the troops returning and the flags flying and the bands playing, every day is like a holiday. And so it is, I suppose, for those fortunate women whose husbands are coming back to them."

"Yes, Edith dear," sighed Mrs. Haverill, "to those women whose husbands are coming back to them. Ah, forgive me, pet! I was selfishly thinking of myself, but you know that in my heart I also share your grief."

"Dear, it is months since you have shown me any letter from General Haverill—from Frank's father. And did you not expect the general home before now?"

"That is what I meant when I spoke just now."

"I wonder if it is because I am here? He has never seen me, and sometimes I fear he has never forgiven our marriage—Frank's and mine."

"Nonsense, Edith child!" Mrs. Haverill rejoined quickly. "If only that were all! He will at least be eager to see you now, and little Frankie."

"And yet, in his official report to the government, when he told the whole world how bravely Frankie's father died, General Haverill only wrote the name of Lieutenant Bedloe. It looks as though nothing, in his mind, could atone for the disgrace his son brought upon his name."

Mrs. Haverill rose from her chair and turned away, brushing her handkerchief across her eyes, as she said, more to herself than to Edith:

"I know him so well—the pride that conquers all the tenderness in his nature. He can be silent and cold when his heart is breaking—yes, and when my heart is breaking too!"

A message came a little later from General Buckthorn saying that Captain Heartsease had something of importance for Edith and Mrs. Haverill and inviting them to come over to his house as soon as possible to receive it.

"My dear madam," said Captain Heartsease, addressing himself to Edith. "I have here the notebook of Lieutenant Frank Bedloe, otherwise Haverill, in which Miss Gertrude Ellingham wrote down his dying message to his young wife—to you, madam."

Edith seized the precious relic, clasped it to her heart, kissed it and then tried through eyes brimming with tears to scan its blurred pages while chokingly uttering her thanks to Captain Heartsease.

"How did it come into your possession?" Mrs. Haverill asked him.

"Why, you see, Miss Ellingham—now, I should say, Mrs. Colonel Kerchival West—sent it to me from Richmond as soon as she learned I was here because it was uncertain at what time the colonel would be released on his parole, and—"

"Here they are!" called the deep, hoarse voice of General Buckthorn as he blustered in, attended by the faithful Sergeant Barket. "Ladies, welcome to our camp! Jenny, haven't you relieved the captain yet? Order him to the billiard room, can't you?"

"Bout face! March!" commanded Miss Buckthorn, in her strictest military style.

Heartsease marched. Jenny slipped an arm around Edith's waist and walked with her toward a window alcove. Mrs. Haverill would have followed, but General Buckthorn approached her, gravely and gently, to whisper:

"Will you come with me, Mrs. Haverill? I must have you by yourself, to prepare you for something that is going to startle you, but will do you good. Your husband is here, and you are going to meet him alone in the library."

The old soldier knocked, opened the door, bowed Mrs. Haverill in and then retreated.

Moors and Morocco.

Moors and Morocco are words unknown to the people of that troubled land. These people know themselves as Arabs and descendants of those valiant upholders of the prophet's green standard who swept like a flood across north Africa at the time of the hegra. The Morocco of the present day they found possessed by a sturdy race who claimed descent from the people who were cast out of Canaan by Joshua, the son of Nun. Their country, so far as its plains were concerned, was taken from them by the Arabs, and their fighting strength was made to serve the Arab cause in the conquest of Spain. They themselves gradually took to the mountains, to the great Atlas. Here they have remained ever since, speaking their own language, maintaining their own customs and racial attributes and obstinately refusing to be absorbed by the Arab dwellers on the plains. These people are the Berbers. Their tongue is called Shillih. Literature they have none, in the ordinary sense of the word, but they have a rich store of oral tradition, myth, legend and folklore.

Fees of the Lecture Platform.

"The palmy days of the lecture platform"—when were they? Most folks would guess before the war, when Ralph Waldo Emerson demanded $5 a night and a tip of four quarts of oats for his horse, or a little later, when Eli Perkins used to say all he asked for was F. A. M. E. (fifty and my expenses). Wiser ones will point to the time between 1872, when Henry Ward Beecher got his first $1,000 fee, and 1890, when Major Pond paid Henry M. Stanley $100,000 for 100 lectures. They will cite Mark Twain, John E. Gough, P. T. Barnum and a long list of old timers that got from $500 to $1,000 a night in that period, and they will tell you that those times have gone.

Maybe they have, but the lecture platform hasn't. Individual fees are not so high, but the business never offered better chances to the world be entertainer than right now.—Detroit Free Press.

Heard at a Reception.

A Slight Difference.

"As I understand it, doctor, if I believe I'm well I'll be well. Is that the idea?"

"It is."

"Then if you believe you are paid I suppose you'll be paid?"

"Not necessarily."

"But why shouldn't faith work as well in one case as in the other?"

"Why, you see, there is considerable difference between having faith in Providence and having faith in you."—Lippincott's.

A Perfect Anagram.

It will be recalled that when Christ was brought before Pilate, the Roman governor according to St. John's version of the story, asked him, "What is truth?"

In the Latin text of the Vulgate the question runs, "quid est veritas?" Now, the answer is found in the question itself, without adding or subtracting a single letter. "Est vir qui adest," the rearrangement gives us, "It is the man who stands before you."—Youth's Companion.

Gifts With a String.

Wedding gifts in olden times were mere loans, to be returned when the couple were well established in their new home. But when the feudal lord increased in power he grew to expect presents for his newly wedded children from those dependent upon him. Later laws were passed compelling a present in value up to one-twentieth of the yearly rent of the tenant.

CHILDREN AND BIRDS.

By BEECHER S. BOWDISH, Secretary of the New Jersey Audubon Society.

WHAT do birds do for us? The answer is indicated in the example of the chickadee. Who does not know the chickadee, that cheery ball of feathers with a black cap?

When winter shrouds the earth in a heavy mantle of white and the snowy flakes are driven in swirling masses through the leafless branches, loading them down in glistening arches and plastering the rough barked tree trunks, a merry "dee, dee, dee" reminds us that even at this forbidding season nature has not entirely deprived us of her most inspiring creatures, her vegetation guards, the birds. Even the tree sparrows may have retreated to the protection of the dead weed tangles in the slashings, the crossbills may be quietly exploring the cones in the dense pine forest and a weary tramp in the great woods be necessary ere we catch the alert call of the downy or hairy woodpecker or the nasal "yank, yank" of the nuthatch, but our chickadee friends are searching our dooryard trees for their meager fare with the same cheerfulness with which they greet summer's bounty.

Winter is the season when the chickadees perform a service for us which, perhaps, no other bird could so well undertake. At that time the eggs of many destructive insects are eagerly sought by these birds on the twigs and in the crevices of the bark. Many insects, too, lying dormant and concealed from the duller visions, fall prey to the sharp eyed little birds. Cankerworm moths, tent caterpillars, codling moths, gypsy moths, browntail moths and the various plant lice all are included in the chickadee's bill of fare.

While these birds are hardy, self-reliant little providers, yet in severe weather they suffer from scarcity of food. Bits of suet nailed to the trees or rubbed in the bark will help out their winter food supply and insure them as neighbors, and it will not prevent their assiduously seeking their natural food.

Four birds were found to have eaten 105 female cankerworm moths. A careful count showed that twenty of these contained 3,703 eggs. The average per moth was 185, which would give a total of 19,425 eggs thus destroyed by the four chickadees. Three of the birds had eaten a large number of eggs besides. It has been estimated that a single chickadee will destroy 138,750 eggs during the twenty-five day season when the moths are out.

This is only one instance. Nearly all birds are beneficial to man in their feeding habits, and they are also attractive of form and pleasing of song.

What can we do for birds? What can children do? What they have done in the public schools is to organize by thousands into junior Audubon classes and study about the birds from the educational leaflets of the National Association of Audubon Societies. They have scattered crumbs on the porches and sheltered bare spots for hungry winter birds and built bird houses and placed dishes of bathing and drinking water for the summer birds. They have persuaded other children not to abuse birds, but to love and protect them.

SOCIETY PLANTS TREES.

Organization in New York Has Branches All Over Country.

Slowly but surely the work of the American Association For the Planting and Preservation of City Trees is spreading from one end of the country to the other. Much of the work of the association has thus far been confined to the borough of Brooklyn. But the Hon. George V. Brower, a former park commissioner in New York, hopes to see the day when the work of the association in planting and preserving trees will be felt in every city in the United States. The association already has a membership of nearly 1,000 and is represented by states from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

The association was organized as a result of a series of lectures by J. J. Levison, M. F., New York city forester, at the Children's museum, in Brooklyn. John J. Schoonhoven, a member of the Brooklyn institute, became its first president upon its organization two years ago. His wife was the first vice president.

A children's branch has already been organized, with a membership of twelve chapters. Five hundred children, members of the chapters, are daily engaged in collecting newspapers, tin foil and other waste, which are disposed of and the proceeds put into a fund to promote a more active interest in the care of the city's trees.

Several publications are already printed, under the guidance of the association, while the members of it are continually on the watch for places which may prove available for tree planting purposes. As a result of the work of the members of the association several blocks in Brooklyn have been planted with trees. In some instances but one and two trees were planted, while in other places forty and fifty trees have been planted in one location.

It is the success of the work in Brooklyn which has prompted the society to spread its wings over the whole country, or at least over that part of the country where interested people are willing to accept membership and assist in the work of the association.

A Remarkable Feat.

Henry E. Dixey met a friend one afternoon on Broadway.

"Well, Henry," exclaimed the friend, "you are looking fine! What do they feed you on?"

"Chicken, mostly," replied Dixey. "You see, I am rehearsing in a play where I am to be a thief, so, just by way of getting into training for the part, I steal one of my own chickens every morning and have the cook broil it for me. I have accomplished the remarkable feat of eating thirty chickens in thirty consecutive days."

"Great Scott!" exclaimed the friend. "Do you still like them?"

"Yes, I do," replied Dixey. "And what is better still, the chickens like me. Why, they have got so that when I sneak into the henhouse they all begin to cackle, 'I wish I was in Dixey.'"—Lippincott's.

The Castle in the Air.

Like the mirage of the desert,
With its promise falsely fair;
Like the treasure laden rainbow,
Is the castle in the air.

Dispel not the sweet illusion
With a look of mute despair.
High your castle should be built, with Snow crowned turrets in the air.

In the earthly race of mortals
Glory's halo would you wear?
Then put a rock foundation
'Neath your castle in the air.
—Floyd P. Wagaman.

The Whole Truth.

When the Duke of York, now the king of England, was making his tour of the British colonies there was an Indian powwow for him in British Columbia at which several Indian chiefs appeared. The Indians made speeches. The only interpreter was a cowboy who had lived in that country and who volunteered his services.

The cowboy told the royal party what an Indian chief was talking about for a few minutes and then stopped, while the Indian continued spouting.

"What is he saying?" asked one of the princesses.

The cowboy made no reply.

"But we must know what he is saying," the princess persisted. "Tell us immediately, I insist."

"Well, ma'am," replied the cowboy, "if you must know, he is asking whether it is possible that little runt with the whiskers ever will be king of England."—Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post.

Will Against Will.

A certain prosy professor of physics is so great a misanthrope that he deliberately announces his lectures for the days when he has reason to think that his students will least want to attend. He commanded their presence on an election day once and drove them nearly wild by delivering a tedious essay on will power.

"If he wills it a man may accomplish anything," he droned. "Let him make up his mind not to die and he will live in spite of disease; let him decide that life is not worth living and he will drop peacefully out of it. I challenge any student to cite an instance in which the power of the will has not triumphed over everything."

Up shot the reprobate of the class, a youth beloved by all his companions for his daring humor.

"Sir, I accept your challenge. You are wrong," he said.

"Pray mention an example," retorted the professor dryly.

"With pleasure, sir. An hour ago I willed that this lecture should be brought to a speedy conclusion. I've willed the same thing sixty times since, but up to now it hasn't come off."

"Nor will it," said the professor, "for I have not only willed that this lecture should last another hour, but am perfectly willing that it should do so." And it did.

Slightly Sarcastic.

When James B. Reynolds was assistant secretary of the treasury Senator Root sent for Mr. Reynolds one day to discuss with him some matters concerning a trade conference in Paris which Mr. Reynolds had been selected to attend.

"I suppose," said Mr. Root, "you speak French?"

"Well, yes," responded Mr. Reynolds. "I know a little French. I have no trouble to make the waiters and the cab drivers understand me."

"I see," said Mr. Root. "But, Mr. Reynolds, suppose there should be no waiters and cab drivers in the conference?"—Judge.

A Puzzled Author.

When Alphonse Daudet brought out "Sappho" an American publishing house that issued religious books, not knowing its character, offered M. Daudet a large sum for advance sheets of the work. He accepted the offer, and the advance sheets were sent. When the publishers received them they decided that they could not issue the book, and they cabled to the author, "Sappho will not do." This dispatch puzzled Daudet. He consulted with numbers of friends, and this was the conclusion at which they eventually arrived: "Sappho" in French is spelled with one "p"—"Sappho," after the Greek fashion. In English it is spelled with two. An unusually acute friend pointed this out to Daudet, which much relieved the novelist, and he cabled back to the publishers, "Spell it with two p's." It is needless to state that the publishers were more astonished at Daudet's reply than he had been at their cable dispatch.

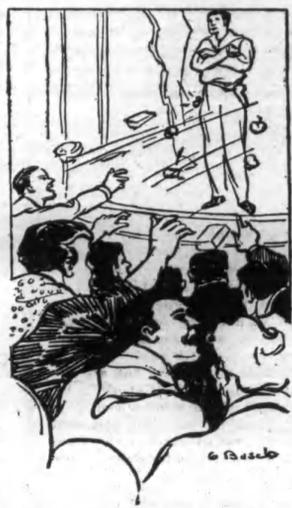

THE LAST STRAW.

Circle Bar Bill Was Converted, but His Meekness Had a Limit.

In the old Dodge City days the cowboys were hard citizens. One time a travelling evangelist came along and converted Circle Bar Bill, the toughest cow wallpoper of the lot.

Circle Bar bill decided to convert his old companions, and he determined to convert them with the illustration of the necessity and the value of patience and long sufferingness. He hired a dance hall for an evening, and the cowboys all flocked in to hear his discourse.

"Now," said Circle Bar Bill, "I'm going to show you leather skinned geezers the long sufferingness and patience a man gets when he is really and truly converted. I'll stand up here, and you fellows kin heap any indignity on me you feel like, and I won't kick, although you know before I was converted they warn't ary cowpuncher on the range who was handier with his gun or his dukes than me. Circle Bar Bill, who is now here personifyin' meekness and lowliness in the hopes of winnin' some of you unregenerate sons of the devil to the proper mode of life."

Bill folded his arms across his chest, and the fun began. The cowpunchers threw potatoes, tobacco quids, dead prairie hens and other things at Bill, and he made no move, but smiled sweetly. Then Greaser Ike of the Oxbow outfit produced an old and time worn wild turkey egg and let Bill have it smack in the face.

The egg exploded, and its contents spread over and obliterated that sweet smile. Bill jumped down among the crowd, shouting, "Fellers, there is now goin' to be an intermission in this here long sufferin' business until I lick the everlastin' tar outen the white livered, bow legged, chicken stealin' coyote who thrun that egg. I ain't lost my faith in religion none, but they ain't no Scripture that forbids me to whip blazes outen a man who would trun a egg like that."—Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post.

Happiness.

Neither wealth nor rank will insure happiness. Without love and charity and peace of mind you may be rich and great and powerful, but you cannot be happy.—Lord Avebury.

Pellissier and the Canaries.

In "Potted Pellissier" H. G. Pellissier relates that his voice has got him into a lot of trouble.

"I remember on one occasion," he says, "being left alone in the house with a brace of canaries belonging to my sister, of which she was very fond. 'Now, though I, I can at last be certain of a really appreciative audience. I will sing to them.' So I sang to them.

"My sister never forgave me the loss of her canaries. It was the only authentic case I ever met with of 'killing two birds with one's tone.'"

The Kiss She Sold.

They held a charity bazaar in Paris not long ago, where one of the most beautiful of the French actresses offered one of her kisses at auction.

The bidding soared higher and higher amid a fever of excitement until it reached 20,000 francs. "Any advance on 20,000 francs?" asked the fair auctioneer, flushed with pride at the value placed on one of her kisses, of which she had any number in reserve. Then, amid a silence that was almost painful in its intensity, the dainty hammer fell. "To you, monsieur!" she said, smiling bewitchingly at an old gentleman. "Madame," was the answer, "I am profoundly honored. But such prizes are not for old age, so with madame's gracious permission I will depute the honor to my grandchild," and, raising a sweet little boy in his arms, he received his kiss by proxy amid thunders of cheers and delighted laughter.

An Important Question.

Professor Bliss Perry likes to tell this story about a suffrage meeting which a friend of his attended.

After considerable business had been disposed of by the suffragettes one of their number made a motion that the women living in the town where the meeting was held should endeavor at the next election to place a woman on the school board. The presiding officer said, referring to the motion, "Is there any question?" For a few moments there was silence. Then a shrill voice far up in the gallery said sweetly, "Will you please tell us how you set that smooth effect over the bice?"

Plant a Tree.

He who plants a tree,
Plants a joy;
Plants a comfort that will never cloy;
Every day a fresh reality.
Beautiful and strong
To whose shelter throng
Creatures blithe with song.
If thou couldst but know, thou happy tree,
Of the bliss that shall inhabit thee!

He who plants a tree,
He plants peace.
Under its green curtain jargons cease,
Leaf and zephyr murmur soothingly;
Shadows soft with sleep
Down tired eyelids creep,
Balm of slumber deep
Never hast thou dreamed, thou blessed tree,
Of the benediction thou shalt be.

He who plants a tree,
He plants love;
Tents of coolness spreading out above
Wayfarers he may not live to see.
Gifts that grow are best;
Hands that bless are blest;
Plant; Life does the rest!
Heaven and earth help him who plants a tree,
And his work its own reward shall be.

Freshman Class Banquet.

On Friday evening, the Freshman class of Genoa High school entertained the Sophomores and a few friends, the company numbering thirty-eight, at a banquet at the home of Irene Mulvaney.

The Freshmen spared no effort in preparation for the affair. The house was beautifully decorated with flags, flowers and the class banners. The table decorations carried out the class colors—blue and gold. The centerpiece was a large cake (made by Mrs. Mulvaney) upon which were frosted the words "Genoa High School." On either side of the cake were bouquets of daffodils, alternating with two candelabra with yellow candles. The place cards were daintily decorated with violets and daffodils. At each place was a little cup in the form of a daffodil containing salted peanuts. Violet designed napkins, violets scattered over the cloth, and another prettily decorated cake (the work of Mrs. LaMotte Close) with the letters G. H. S., completed the arrangement of the table which presented a beautiful appearance.

It was a merry group of boys and girls that sat down to their first class banquet. After the bountiful and delicious menu had been disposed of, the company were favored with musical selections from Miss Clyde Mastin, Russell Norman and Virginia Bush. All joined in singing popular songs, and playing the usual games.

At about 11:30 the party broke up, every one having spent an enjoyable evening. All are grateful to Mr and Mrs. Mulvaney for opening their home for the affair and helping to make it such a success.

Food For the Elephant.

Since the elephant's digestive functions are very rapid it requires a large amount of fodder daily, about 600 pounds in most cases. In its wild state the elephant feeds hastily, but wastefully. It is careful in selecting the few forest trees that it likes for their bark or foliage, but it will tear down branches and leave half of them untouched. It will strip off the bark from other trees and throw away a large portion. As it is a nocturnal animal, it selects its trees by the sense of touch and smell.—Enshanga.

Death of Benjamin Brown.

Benjamin Brown died at the Masonic Home in Utica, N. Y., on April 25, 1913. Funeral services were held on Sunday morning, April 27, in the Presbyterian church at King Ferry, N. Y., Rev Robert Ivey officiating. Masonic services were conducted at the grave.

Benjamin Brown, son of Daniel and Margaret DeRemer Brown, was born at King Ferry, N. Y. on Aug. 27, 1837. He spent most of his life in or near King Ferry, until his health failed. On July 9, 1901, he entered the Masonic Home at Utica, where his sympathetic and obliging nature won him many friends, among the old as well as the young. His interest was especially with the children of the institution, whose education and progress he watched with great delight. Yet he never forgot his old friends for the new. It was always with much anticipation and joy that he came to greet and shake the hands of his many friends and old acquaintances when on his vacation from year to year.

He is survived by one sister, Mrs. Ellen A. Atwater of Auburn, two brothers, Walter V. and George A. Brown, and one niece, Miss Emilie M. Brown of Waterloo High school, also one nephew, Dana B. Ward of Kansas City, Mo.

When we reach our Father's dwelling,
On the strong eternal hills,
And our praise to Him is swelling
Who the vast creation fills;
Shall we then recall the sadness,
And the clouds that hung so dim,
When our hearts were turned from hardness
And our feet from paths of sin?
When the paths of prayer and duty
And affliction all are trod,
And we wake and see the beauty
Of our Saviour and our God,
Shall we then recall the story
Of our mortal griefs and tears,
When on earth we sought the glory
Wrestling oft with doubts and fears?
All the way by which He brought us,
All the grievings that He bore,
All the patient love that taught us,
We'll remember ever more;
And His rest will be the dearest,
As we think of weary ways,
And His light will be the clearer,
As we muse on cloudy days.
Yes, we surely shall remember
And His grace we'll freely own;
For the love so strong and tender,
That redeemed and bro't us home.

Card of Thanks.

We wish to express our sincere appreciation and thanks to all those who took part or assisted in the burial of our beloved brother and uncle, Benjamin Brown, whose death occurred at the Masonic Home, Utica, on April 25, 1913.

Newspaper Errors.

The editor of an exchange does not want anyone to send him any more copies of his papers in which they have found mistakes. If they find a perfect copy, however, he offers a big price for it. "Same with us," says the editor of the Crystal Falls (Mich) Drill. "If the critic who hunts for mistakes in the papers would find them all he would be kept busy. We will be pleased to buy copies of any paper which can be proven entirely free from errors, either typographically or in statement of facts. We will be pleased to find a merchant who never made a mistake in putting up an order, a lawyer who never lost a case through his own errors, a doctor who never wrongly diagnosed a case, a druggist who never made a mistake, a postoffice official who never put mail into the wrong box, a woman who never forgot to put in the salt while cooking or to put the tea in the teapot before putting in the water. Bring on some of your mistakeless paragons who find it so easy to criticise the papers and we'll give them a chance of their lives to find out whether they are really human."

Women Orators.

We can no longer think with Pericles that good report for a woman means a minimum of any kind of report about her, whether for good or evil, nor with Dr. Johnson that when she speaks in public she is "like a pig standing on its hind legs. It is not that she does it well, but you are surprised that she can do it at all." We are as proud of our famous women as we are of our famous men, and some of the very best speakers in the world today are women.—University Magazine.

Create Opportunity.

Opportunity always meets those who are ready for it, because readiness creates opportunity. Men who count do not wait for opportunity—they make it. If the wind is against them they handle the boat differently, but they sail in the teeth of the wind as readily as they sail before it and often get more fun matching their skill against an unfriendly breeze than in making speed without effort. But a man must know his boat to manage it well in bad weather.—St Nicholas.

—Many cities and villages have an annual clean-up week at this season of the year. Every property owner and tenant in Genoa should have sufficient pride in the appearance of our village to clean up and pick up the premises which they own or occupy. If each one would do this what a transformation would take place in some quarters! Why not spend a day or two in doing this work, and see what splendid results there will be?

—George Boyer, aged about 50 years, a former resident of Genoa, died at his home near Lake Ridge at 3 o'clock Thursday morning, of tuberculosis, with which he had been afflicted for some time. On Saturday last he was able to be dressed and walked out on the porch, but Sunday was much worse, and he was unconscious after Monday until his death. He is survived by his wife, a son, Milton J. Boyer, and a daughter, Mrs. Dennis Doyle, of North Lansing. He also leaves one sister, Mrs. Emma Ghering, of Auburn. The funeral will be held at the late home of the deceased on Sunday at 2 o'clock. Rev. F. J. Allington of North Lansing will officiate and burial will be made at North Lansing. The deceased was a member of the K. O. T. M. of North Lansing.

—Dr. Andrew S. Draper, state commissioner of education, died at his home in Albany on Sunday, at the age of 64 years. Death was due to Bright's disease. Dr. Draper had been at the head of the educational department of New York state since 1904, and his efficiency was acknowledged throughout the country. He was also known and loved as a man of high personal character and possessed many attractive qualities.

—The stretch of railroad track on the Rock Island road, between Liberal, Kansas, and Goodland, Oklahoma, is said to be the longest bit of straight track in the United States. For 76 miles it has no sign of a turn. Train dispatchers are not needed to announce whether trains are on time. Station agents climb to the top of their stations, scan the tracks, then mark their board that such a train is on time or late. The track is so straight that the electric light can be seen an hour before the train arrives.

—Russell Cowan, aged 92 years, and his sister, Mrs. Orsavia Cowles, aged 87 years, lifelong residents of Scipio and Fleming, left last Friday night for Muskegon, Michigan, where they will make their home with their niece, Mrs. Fred Aldrich. They have sold their residence at Fleming Hill to Samuel Stewart of the same town.

—Peace day, May 18, which has been observed by many of the schools of the country since 1905, falls on Saturday. The schools are therefore recommended to observe Friday, the 16th. The letter issued by the late state commissioner of education says: "This action may be taken with little interference with the regular work of the schools. Not more than one hour should be devoted to these exercises."

—When a newspaper gives you a lot of free advertising in order to boom some matter in which you are interested, keep track of the number of lines that are printed week by week, multiply that number by the regular advertising rates of the paper. Arbor Day Observed In Many States

Photos copyright, 1913, by American Press Association.

KING GEORGE AND QUEEN MARY OF ENGLAND PLANTING TREES

TO Nebraska belongs the credit of inaugurating Arbor day. The movement began in 1872, when the board of agriculture of that state recommended that the people should set aside a certain day to be specified by the board for planting trees. The suggestion met with popular approval. The sentiment rapidly spread to other states, with the result that Arbor day is now recognized as a national institution. In many states it is recognized as a legal holiday.

North America being the chosen home of forests, it is very proper that it should be this country that should set aside a day for the tree. No other part of the country approaches the territory lying within the United States for its forest growth. That is, such was the original condition of the country, but it has been greatly changed by the wasteful and reckless havoc wrought by the tireless energies of the pioneer and the lumberman. They needed but a trifle of the timber that was cut, and much was burned in order to provide land for tilling purposes.

The onslaught of the primitive woodman was nothing compared to the warfare waged by the modern woodman. The woodman has passed away, but the lumberman is still with us.

Tree planting for commemorative purposes has long been a custom in many countries. In connection with this article are pictures of King Edward and Queen Mary of England planting trees.

In California the eucalyptus has proved valuable as a windbreaker when planted in hedges about orchards of delicate orange and lemon trees. The ranchers of the great prairies, too, are setting out the eucalyptus by thousands.

The eucalyptus is unlike in its appearance any American tree. It is a dark, sober colored tree of a sad disposition, for its leaves all hang downward. There are 134 species in Australia. About twenty varieties have been introduced into this country.

A Shocking Tree.
A German authority on forestry announces the discovery, in the primeval forests of India, of a tree with the most curious and inexplicable characteristics. The leaves of this tree are so highly electrical that whoever touches one of them, receives a severe electrical shock. Even upon the magnetic needle this tree, which has been given the name Phlotoea electrica, has a strong influence, causing magnetic variations at a distance of seventy feet. The electrical strength of the tree varies according to the time of day. It is strongest at noon, but almost entirely disappears at midnight. Its electricity also disappears in wet weather. Birds never nest nor perch upon its branches, nor have any insects ever been seen upon it.

TREE PLANTING.

When we plant a tree we are doing what we can to make our planet a more wholesome and happier dwelling place for those who come after us, if not for ourselves. . . . I have written many verses, but the best poems I have produced are the trees I have planted on the hillside. . . . Nature finds rimes for them in the recurring measures of the seasons, winter strips them of their ornaments and gives them, as it were, in prose translation, and summer reclothes them in all the splendid phrases of their leafy language.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

THE EUCALYPTUS TREE.

The great progress of scientific forestry in the past few years has rendered practically impossible the extinction of our native trees, but should such a calamity ever befall us we have an immigrant tree which will be able to supply all our wants. It is the eucalyptus or gum tree of Australia, which grows so fast that it can almost be harvested every autumn, like grain.

The first eucalyptus plantations in this country were set out in California twenty-five years ago. Some of these groves have been cut down three or four times and are again high in the air, while those trees which have had the full twenty-five years' growth are as large as oaks 300 years old. A California farmer who had planted a row of eucalyptus alongside his house as a sort of hedge cut it down at the end of five years and got twenty-four cords of firewood. The row of trees was only 250 feet long.

The eucalyptus makes the best kind of firewood, but is equally good for any other purpose for which wood is used. It makes even better piles, some experts say, than Oregon pine, and it has been successfully tested in the form of street paving blocks as well as that of household furniture.

It is not entirely on its reputation as a rapid grower that the eucalyptus bases its claim to fame. It is a doctor and a sanitary engineer. The leaves of the tree contain a fragrant volatile oil which is much used in treating diseases of the lungs and throat.

The tree has the peculiar ability to shed its bark, and at night the groves give off a strong odor like ozone, slightly tinged with the scent of peppermint. In Australia consumptives camp near the eucalyptus forests in the belief that the medicated atmosphere will cure or arrest the disease.

As an engineer the eucalyptus has made its mark in the Roman campaigns. The tree absorbs a great amount of water through its roots. Large groves planted by the Dominicans monks in the material plains about the Holy City have dried and made the healthy land which for centuries had been a swamp.

WHAT DOES "LURID" MEAN?

Popular Usage of the Word is Opposed to its Definition, Which is "Pale."

Two men got into an argument regarding the meaning of the word "lurid." One of them had used the word, as the police reporter uses it, to describe the red glare in the sky made by a fire at night. The other man objected to this, asserting that the word "lurid" means "pale" instead of "deep red." Thereupon they applied to the dictionaries and found them agreed in defining "lurid" as "pale, wan, ghastly pale."

But the Oxford Dictionary has caught up with the new and popular meaning of the word with this definition:

"Shining with a red glow or glare amid darkness (said of lightning flashes across dark clouds or flame mingled with smoke)."

But this seems to be gratuitous of the Oxford Dictionary. The word "lurid" started out it seems as a Latin adjective meaning "pale, yellow." It was used chiefly of the complexion, much as "sallow" is used. Then it grew to have the meaning of "ghastly." But its transition into the popular meaning given it today seems to have been due to the willfulness of the press, which found it a handy word to describe a phenomenon for which no other word had, apparently, quite the desirable flavor.—Manchester Guardian.

PRIVILEGE OF BEING AN ASS

Generally Considered Inalienable, but New York Magistrate Who Fined Student Thought Otherwise.

Compared to the inalienable right to make a fool of yourself, the right of free speech, which loud-mouths proclaim the most cherished one, is of small concern in the average person. Of all places where some restraint on the former might be expected New York is the last that would be thought of. Yet in the night court a Columbia student, caught by an alert constable in the act of standing still under an open umbrella while the stars shone overhead, was fined $10 and warned that the penalty for the next offense of similar genesis would be a term in the workhouse. The young man, of course, was qualifying for a fraternity. He looked foolish—as was the authoritative intention, in which he acquiesced.

"But," quoth the police magistrate ponderously, "no fraternity has a right to order a man to make an ass of himself;" and he expressed the wish that the whole chapter could be haled into court that he might fine them all. Considering in how many ways New York invites young men to make asses of themselves, and how many persons in that town, in fact, do make asses of themselves without molestation, why should the line be drawn at a practice apparently so inoffensive to public policy as the one criticized?—Providence Journal.

Brief Holiday.

Joy is like a bird in flight, which dips in its passing and touches us with its wings. It comes from out of a far country and it tracks its way on high. After that brief hovering it will recover its former attitude, its speed, and song. Its throbbing heart passes high over our throbbing cities and frozen hills. As we watch that flight of untrammelled wing we wish that somehow we might capture that blitheness and teach it to dwell among men. Why should it pause but never abide? We would have that joy abide so fixedly that it would become a peace. The holiday season is like that. It stoops for a little out of space, draws near our dim earth, and sheds its brightness among men. As swiftly as it came, so swiftly it goes again. And yet each year it draws more close and stays for a longer time; its radiance is revealed to us more clearly, full of grace and truth.—Collier's Weekly.

Girl That is Popular.

The most popular girl in the school will generally be a girl who excels in games and outsiders often wonder why this should be the case. The reason is that to play most games well a girl must be unselfish; she must "play for her side," and not for her own honor and glory, and she carries this out unconsciously in her daily life. You do not find her thinking that no one else is of any use in the world, or putting on airs because she happens to be better looking than her companions. She is simple and natural and content to "give and take," and is as strict in her code of honor as her brother is in a public school. Such girls will always win, be rich in friends, and wherever they go they carry with them a brisery spirit of joy and good fellowship.

Revolving Houses.

A Parisian inventor has conceived the idea of having small houses which will turn on their axes built in country districts for invalids, thus furnishing a change of scene, of light, and of air. There is, he thinks, no reason why some rooms should always get the sunlight and the remainder be always damp and unhealthy. The idea is not entirely new. Some years ago a revolving house was built in Normandy. The door was constructed of thin boards which glided over each other as the house was turned. On one occasion these boards spread out like an opened fan, closing the exit. The inmate, terrified by his experience, had the house pulled down.—Harper's Weekly.

Folk Dances as Part Of Celebrations of CHILDREN'S DAY

LITTLE ONES DANCING IN CENTRAL PARK, NEW YORK.

DURING the last few years dancing has taken a prominent place in the school life of Young America. Only recently exhibitions of folk dances were given in Central park, New York, in which thousands of children participated, and the movement to introduce dancing as a part of the regular school life has spread rapidly.

But while dancing is only now entering into the regular school routine of American children it has long held a prominent place among other nations and people. Right here in the United States the native Indians have long held dancing to be one of the principal functions of official ceremonies. In fact, dancing had its bad effects with the Indians, for they used to dance themselves into frenzies which led to massacres.

In China, in the pingvau, or dance of the bucklers, and in the taou, or dance of the warriors, similar appeals to war are made. Another Chinese dance, the ouwang, is a veritable ballet, in which the different movements describe the struggle of the emperor against revolt.

The nautch girls are attached to the temple of northern India and dance before the idols daily; also they dance at entertainments and at funerals. They constitute a distinct class by themselves, the girls being trained by their mothers and positions in the temple being handed down from one generation to another.

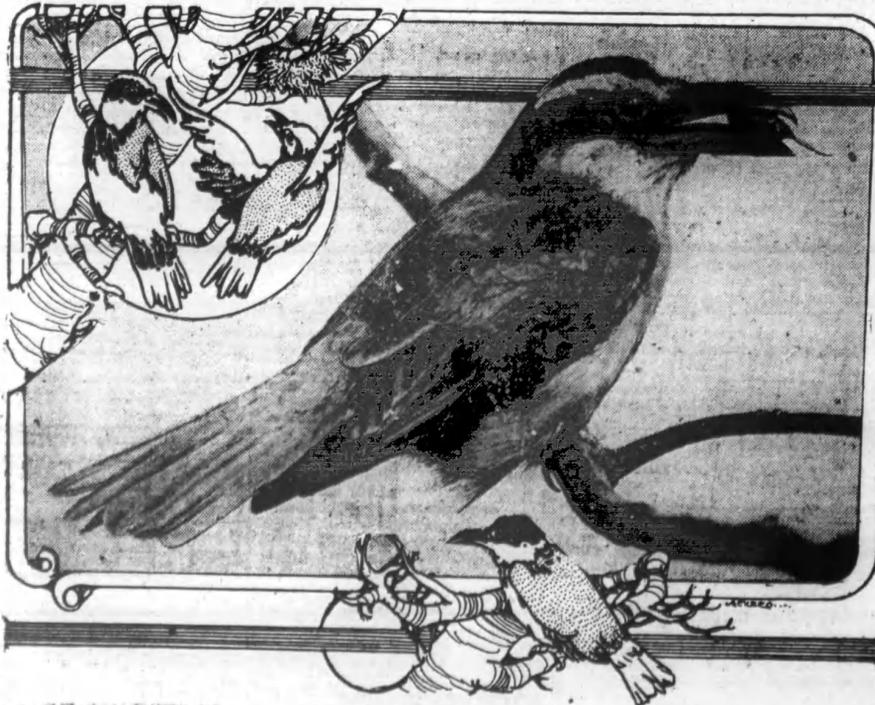

The bayaderes are the dancing girls of southern India and are much like their northern sisters. They are recruited from the families of the working people and merchants and receive a small fixed salary from the temples to which they are attached.

The sarunga, who dance the dances of Java, are famed for the courtier-like grace and delicacy with which they move their hands and fingers. With their faces covered with gold powder, their heads crowded with heavy helmets of flowers and precious stones, these girls look like little idols.

The geishas of Japan often start their education in singing and dancing at the age of seven years. Some of the purely poetic dances remaining are the dance of the butterflies, of the flowers, of the rain, of the tea leaf and of the fan.

Protect the Singers—BIRD DAY—Public Opinion Helps

THE FLYCATCHER.

PROTECTION of America's song birds has long been an issue in the various state legislatures. Recently several of the law-making bodies have taken up the subject in earnest, with the result that it is now a crime to injure or kill birds of plumage in many states. The bitterest opposition to legislation against the destruction of birds of plumage comes from commercial interests, which seek the destruction of the birds in order to use the plumage for decorative purposes.

Societies appointed for the investigation of bird killing find that many foreigners think it perfectly proper to kill song birds, for in many countries it is customary for rich and poor alike to have the birds. In some states song birds are so well safeguarded that they have become unwary, and it is easy for hunters to shoot large numbers of robins, flickers, jays, finches, bluebirds, thrushes and warblers.

Not content with their bags through at least a modicum of skill under circumstances calculated to give the birds a little warning, some of the future citizens resort to the use of the proscribed snares. The most common are simple horsehair loops placed on the ground and baited for such thickset birds as the chickadee, thrush, thrasher, fox sparrow, catbird and other songsters that scratch among the leaves for grubs. Others hang these snares along the limbs of apple trees to catch robins.

Several reasons combine to make the Italian at home unhelpful of the destruction of bird life. Northern Europe is a great summer nesting ground for song birds. Italy and Sicily, stretching halfway across the Mediterranean from Europe, collect the southern migration in the fall and catch it again the following spring. Italy, therefore, has, for short seasons at least, three times as many birds as the other countries of southern Europe, and those killed are not missed.

In France, where it was the custom to gather the eggs of song birds for food, failure of the crops followed because of the increase of insects. The multiplying of crop destroying insects was admitted to be the direct result of the slaughter of song birds.

In America the amateur egg collectors are also leaders in the work of destruction.
