Teeter Reunion.
The thirteenth annual Teeter family reunion was held at the home of Ernest Teeter at Sage on Saturday, June 26. About 55 persons attended. Relatives were present from Eaton Rapids, Mich., Ithaca, Groton, Venice, West Dryden, and Asbury and vicinity. About 1 o'clock a bountiful dinner was served. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. Nellie Tuller of Sage; vice-president, Arthur VanMarter of Ithaca; secretary, Miss Lillian Teeter of Sage; treasurer, Fay Smith of Sage. There have been three deaths recorded since the reunion one year ago—George Teeter of Sage, John Teeter of Freeville and Mrs. Elizabeth Miller of Peruville. The next reunion will be held at the home of Mrs. Jennie Davenport on the Lake road on the last Saturday in June, 1916.

WHY YOU ARE NERVOUS
The nervous system is the alarm system of the human body.
In perfect health we hardly realize that we have a network of nerves, but when health is ebbing, when strength is declining, the same nervous system gives the alarm in headaches, tiredness, drowsy sleep, irritability and unless corrected, leads straight to a breakdown.
To correct nervousness, Scott's Emulsion is exactly what you should take; its rich nutrient gets into the blood and rich blood feeds the tiny nerve-cells while the whole system responds to its refreshing tonic force. It is free from alcohol.

New Edison Invention.

After 37 years of experiment, Thomas A. Edison announces his invention of the "telescribe." It is a device to be used in connection with the telephone, to keep a record of the words of both speakers, for future reference. In this way it is expected to save millions of letters, and will make possible quick contracts by telephone. It will also take down a message for an absent person and hold it until he returns. In principle the new invention is a combination of telephone and phonograph; really a long-distance dictating machine.

"I notice that you publish a verse from the Bible every day," said the caller to the editor of the newspaper. "Do your subscribers ever read it?" "Should say they do," replied the editor. "Why, it is news to most of them."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Veterans Will Picnic.

Plans are being made by the Cayuga County Civil War Veterans' Association for their annual reunion and outing at Lakeside Park on Saturday, July 24, and a big attendance is looked for. It will simply be a basket picnic. All veterans, widows of veterans, auxiliaries to the G. A. R., with their families and friends will be welcomed on the outing.

At 11 o'clock a business meeting will be held with the election of officers for the following year as the first order. Any other business that may come will be disposed of, after which there will be adjournment for dinner; all those not being provided with baskets will be able to get a lunch at the pavilion.

The principal feature of the day will be an address by George W. Ray, United States Court judge for this district and a veteran of the Civil war. The address will be delivered at 1:30. Following, old army songs will be sung by the entire assemblage.

David Everett is president of the association, John A. Thomas is vice president and Thomas C. Tallman, secretary and treasurer.

Health Officers Must Qualify.

Aloany, July 9—Local health officers appointed after Nov. 1, 1916, must be specially qualified for their work, under regulations adopted by the State Public Health Council. This affects nearly 1200 positions throughout the State. The Council believes that public health work has many features distinct from the practice of medicine and that it requires scientific preparation not usually obtained in medical school courses. The prevention of epidemics, through education of the public in health matters, and organization of lay interest in public health work together with special training in laboratory methods, are among the most important requirements of modern public health work, in the opinion of the Council and have been incorporated in the new qualifications.

Realizing it is difficult for physicians to secure the necessary training by resident attendance at a school for health officers, the Council provides that it may be obtained through an approved correspondence course, with only one week of resident work in practical demonstrations in laboratory and field work.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

PENROD

By BOOTH TARKINGTON

Copyright, 1914, by Doubleday, Page & Company

"She said one thing I thought rather tactless," interrupted Mrs. Williams. "Of course we must allow for her being dreadfully excited and wrought up, but I do think it wasn't quite delicate in her, and she's usually the very soul of delicacy. She said that Roderick had never been allowed to associate with common boys."

He Propelled Himself Into the Chute and Shot Down.

"Meaning Sam and Penrod," said Mrs. Schofield. "Yes, she said that to me too."

"She said that the most awful thing about it," Mrs. Williams went on, "was that, though she's going to prosecute the newspapers, many people would always believe the story, and—"

"Yes, I imagine they will," said Mrs. Schofield musingly. "Of course you and I and everybody who really knows the Bitts and Magsworth families understand the perfect absurdity of it. But I suppose there are ever so many who'll believe it, no matter what the Bittses and Magsworths say."

"Hundreds and hundreds!" said Mrs. Williams. "I'm afraid it will be a great comedown for them."

"I'm afraid so," said Mrs. Schofield gently. "A very great one—yes, a very, very great one."

"Well," observed Mrs. Williams after a thoughtful pause, "there's only one thing to be done, and I suppose it had better be done right away."

She glanced toward the two gentlemen.

"Certainly," Mr. Schofield agreed. "But where are they?"

"Have you looked in the stable?" asked his wife.

"I searched it. They've probably started for the far west."

"Did you look in the sawdust box?"

"No, I didn't."

"Then that's where they are."

Thus in the early twilight the now historic stable was approached by two fathers charged to do the only thing to be done. They entered the storeroom.

"Penrod!" said Mr. Schofield.

"Sam!" said Mr. Williams.

Nothing disturbed the twilight hush.

But by means of a ladder brought from the carriage house Mr. Schofield mounted to the top of the sawdust box.

He looked within and discerned the dim outlines of three quiet figures, the third being that of a small dog.

The two boys rose upon command, descended the ladder after Mr. Schofield, bringing Duke with them, and stood before the authors of their being, who bent upon them sinister and despondent countenances, each still ornamented with a mustache and an imperial, Penrod and Sam awaited sentence.

This is a boy's lot: Anything he does, anything whatever, may afterward turn out to have been a crime—he never knows.

And punishment and clemency are alike inexplicable.

Mr. Williams took his son by the ear.

"You march home!" he commanded. Sam marched, not looking back, and his father followed the small figure implacably.

"You goin' to whip me?" quavered Penrod, alone with justice.

"Wash your face at that hydrant," said his father sternly.

About fifteen minutes later Penrod, hurriedly entering the corner drug store, two blocks distant, was astor-ished to perceive a familiar form at the soda counter.

"Yay, Penrod," said Sam Williams, "want some sody? Come on. He didn't lick me. He didn't do anything to me at all. He gave me a quarter."

"Sod mine," said Penrod.

CHAPTER XI.

BOYHOOD is the longest time in life—for a boy. The last term of the school year is made of decades, not of weeks, and living through them is like waiting for the millennium. But they do pass somehow, and at last there came a day when Penrod was one of a group that capered out from the gravelled yard of ward school No. 7, carolling a leavetaking of the institution, of their instructor and not even forgetting Mr. Capps, the janitor.

"Good-bye, teacher! Good-bye, school! Good-bye, Cappsie, dern old fool!" Penrod sang the loudest. For every boy there is an age when he "finds his voice." Penrod's had not "changed," but he had found it. Inevitably that thing had come upon his family and the neighbors, and his father, a somewhat dyspeptic man, quoted frequently the expressive words of the "Lady of Shalott," but there were others whose sufferings were as poignant.

Vacation time warmed the young of the world to pleasant languor, and a morning came that was like a brightly colored picture in a child's fairy story.

Miss Margaret Schofield, reclining in a hammock upon the front porch, was beautiful in the eyes of a newly made senior, well favored and in fair repute, beside her. A guitar rested lightly upon his knee, and he was trying to play, a matter of some difficulty, as the floor of the porch also seemed inclined to be musical. From directly under his feet came a voice of song, shrill, loud, incredibly piercing and incredibly fat, dwelling upon each syllable with incomprehensible reluctance to leave it:

"I have lands and earthly pow-wur. I'd give all for a now-war, Whi-lst setting at my-y dear old mother's knee-ee, So-o-o rem-mem-bur whilst you're young!"

Miss Schofield stamped heartily upon the musical floor.

"It's Penrod," she explained. "The lattice at the end of the porch is loose, and he crawls under and comes out all bugs. He's been having a dreadful singing fit lately—running away to picture shows and vaudeville, I suppose."

Mr. Robert Williams looked upon her yearningly. He touched a thrilling chord on his guitar and leaned nearer. "But you said you have missed me," he began. "I—"

The voice of Penrod drowned all other sounds.

"So-o-o rem-mem-bur, whi-lst you're young, That the da-a-ys to you will come When you're o-o-old and only in the way. Do not scoff at them bee-cause—"

"Penrod!" Miss Schofield stamped again.

"You did say you'd missed me," said Mr. Robert Williams, seizing hurriedly upon the silence. "Didn't you say"—A livelier tune rose upward.

"Oh, you talk about your fascinating beauties, Of your dem-o-zella, your belles, But the littl dame I met, while in the city, She's par excellens the queen of all the swells."

Margaret rose and jumped up and down repeatedly in a well calculated area, whereupon the voice of Penrod cried chokedly, "Quit that!" and there were subterranean coughings and sneezings.

"You want to choke a person to death?" he inquired severely, appearing at the end of the porch, a cobweb upon his brow. And, continuing, he put into practice a newly acquired phrase, "You better learn to be more considerate of other people's comfort."

Slowly and grievously he withdrew, passed to the sunny side of the house, reclined in the warm grass beside his wistful Duke and presently sang again.

"She's sweeter far than the flower I named her after, And the memory of her smile it haunts me yet! When in after years the moon is softly beaming, And at eve I smell the smell of mignonette I will re-CAL that—"

"Pen-rod!"

Mr. Schofield appeared at an open window upstairs, a book in his hand. "Stop it!" he commanded. "Can't I stay home with a headache one morning from the office without having to listen to—I never did hear such squawking!" He retired from the window, having too impulsively called upon his maker. Penrod, shocked and injured, entered the house, but still his voice was again audible as far as the front porch. He was holding converse with his mother, somewhere in the interior.

"Well, what of it? Sam Williams told me his mother said if Bob ever did think of getting married to Margaret, his mother said she'd like to know what in the name of goodness they expect to—"

Bang! Margaret thought it better to close the front door.

The next minute Penrod opened it. "I suppose you want the whole family to get a sunstroke," he said reprovingly. "Keepin' every breath of air out of the house on a day like this!"

And he sat down implacably in the doorway.

The serious poetry of all languages has omitted the little brother, and yet he is one of the great trials of love—the immortal burden of courtship. Tragedy should have found place for him, but he has been left to the hap-hazard vignettist of Grub street. He is the grave and real menace of lovers. His head is sacred and terrible, his power illimitable. There is one way—only one—to deal with him, but Robert Williams, having a brother of Penrod's age, understood that way.

Robert had $1 in the world. He gave it to Penrod immediately.

Enslaved forever, the new Rockefeller rose and went forth upon the highway, an overflowing heart bursting the floodgates of song:

"In her eyes the light of love was softly gleaming, So sweetly, So sweetly, On the banks the moon's soft light was brightly streamin', Words of love I then spoke to her, She was purest of the pew-er: 'Littl sweetheart, do not sigh, Do not weep and do not cry, I will build a littl cottage just for yew-ew and I!'"

In fairness it must be called to mind that boys older than Penrod have these wellings of pent melody. A wife can never tell when she is to undergo a musical morning, and even the golden wedding brings her no security; a man of ninety is liable to bust loose in song any time.

Invalds murmured pitifully as Penrod came within hearing, and people trying to think cursed the day that they were born when he went shrilling by. His hands in his pockets, his shining face uplifted to the sky of June, he passed down the street, singing his way into the heart's deepest hatred of all who heard him.

"One evening I was strow-ing Midst the city of the Dead, I viewed where all a-round me Their peace-ful graves was spread. But that which touched me mostlay—"

He had reached his journey's end, a junk dealer's shop, wherein lay the long desired treasure of his soul—an accordion which might have possessed a high quality of interest for an antiquarian, being unquestionably a ruin, beautiful in decay and quite beyond the sacrilegious reach of the restorer.

But it was still able to disgorge sounds, which could be heard for a remarkable distance in all directions, and it had one rich califone tone that had gone to Penrod's heart. He obtained the instrument for 22 cents, a price long since agreed upon with the junk dealer, who falsely claimed a loss of profit.

Shylock that he was! He had found the wreck in an alley.

With this purchase suspended from his shoulder by a faded green cord, Penrod set out in a somewhat homeward direction, but not by the route he had just traveled, though his motive for the change was not humanitarian.

It was his desire to display himself thus troubadouring to the gaze of Marjorie Jones. Heralding his advance by continuous experiments in the music of the future, he pranced upon his blithesome way, the faithful Duke at his heels. (It was easier for Duke than it would have been for a younger dog, because with advancing age he had begun to grow a little deaf.)

Turning the corner nearest to the glamor mansion of the Joneses, the boy jongleur came suddenly face to face with Marjorie and, in the delicious surprise of the encounter, ceased to play, his hands, in agitation, falling from the instrument.

Bareheaded, the sunshine glorious upon her amber curls, Marjorie was strolling hand in hand with her baby brother, Mitchell, four years old. She wore pink that day—unforgettable pink, with a broad, black patent leather belt, shimmering reflections dancing upon its surface. How beautiful she was! How sacred the sweet little baby brother, whose privilege it was to cling to that small hand delicately powdered with freckles.

"Hello, Marjorie!" said Penrod, affecting carelessness.

"Hello!" said Marjorie, with unexpected cordiality. She bent over her baby brother with motherly affection.

"Say 'howdy' to the gentymuns, Mitchy-Mitch," she urged sweetly, turning him to face Penrod.

"Won't!" said Mitchy-Mitch, and to emphasize his refusal kicked the gentymuns upon the shin.

Penrod's feelings underwent instant change, and in the sole occupation of disliking Mitchy-Mitch he wasted precious seconds which might have been better employed in philosophic consideration of the startling example just afforded of how a given law operates throughout the universe in precisely the same manner perpetually. Robert Williams would have understood this easily.

"Oh, oh!" Marjorie cried and put Mitchy-Mitch behind her with too much sweetness. "Maurice Levy's gone to Atlantic City with his mamma," she remarked conversationally as if the kicking incident were quite closed.

"That's nothin'," returned Penrod, keeping his eye uneasily upon Mitchy-Mitch. "I know plenty people been better places than that—Chicago and everywhere."

There was unconscious ingratitude in his low rating of Atlantic City, for it was largely to the attractions of that resort he owed Miss Jones' present attitude of friendliness. Of course, too, she was curious about the accordion. It would be dastardly to hint that she had noticed a paper bag which bulged the pocket of Penrod's coat, and yet this bag was undeniably conspicuous—and children are very like grown people sometimes!

Penrod brought forth the bag, purchased on the way at a drug store and till this moment unopened, which expresses in a word the depth of his sentiment for Marjorie. It contained an abundant 15 cents' worth of lemon drops, jawbreakers, licorice sticks, cinnamon drops and shopworn chocolate creams.

"Take all you want," he said, with offhand generosity.

"Why, Penrod Schofield," exclaimed the wholly thawed damsel, "you nice boy!"

"Oh, that's nothin'," he returned airily. "I got a good deal of money nowadays."

"Where from?" "Oh, just around!" With a cautious gesture he offered a jaw breaker to Mitchy-Mitch, who snatched it indignantly and set about its absorption without delay.

"Can you play on that?" asked Marjorie, with some difficulty, her cheeks being rather too billy for conversation.

"Want to hear me?" She nodded, her eyes sweet with anticipation.

This was what he had come for. He threw back his head, lifted his eyes dreamily, as he had seen real musicians lift theirs, and distended the accordion preparing to produce the wonderful califone noise which was the instrument's great charm. But the distention evoked a long wail which was at once drowned in another one.

"Ow! Owowah! Wowohah! Waowow!" shrieked Mitchy-Mitch and the accordion together.

Mitchy-Mitch, to emphasize his disapproval of the accordion, opening his mouth still wider, lost therefrom the jaw breaker, which rolled in the dust.

Weeping, he stooped to retrieve it, and Marjorie, to prevent him, hastily set her foot upon it. Penrod offered another jaw breaker, but Mitchy-Mitch struck it from his hand, desiring the former, which had convinced him of its sweetness.

Marjorie moved inadvertently, whereupon Mitchy-Mitch pounced upon the remains of his jaw breaker and restored them, with accretions, to his mouth. His sister, uttering a cry of horror, sprang to the rescue, assisted by Penrod, whom she prevailed upon to hold Mitchy-Mitch's mouth open while she excavated.

This delicate operation being completed and Penrod's right thumb severely bitten, Mitchy-Mitch closed his eyes tightly, stamped, squealed, bellowed, wrung his hands and then, unexpectedly, kicked Penrod again.

Penrod put a hand in his pocket and drew forth a copper two cent piece, large, round and fairly bright.

He gave it to Mitchy-Mitch. Mitchy-Mitch immediately stopped crying and gazed upon his benefactor with the eyes of a dog.

This world! Thereafter did Penrod—with complete approval from Mitchy-Mitch—play the accordion for his lady to his heart's content, and hers. Never had he so won upon her. Never had she let him feel so close to her before. They strolled up and down upon the sidewalk, eating, one thought between them, and soon she had learned to play the accordion almost as well as he. So passed a happy hour, which the Good King Rene of Anjou would have envied them, while Mitchy-Mitch made friends with Duke, romped about his sister and her swain, and slung to the hand of the latter, at intervals, with fondest affection and trust.

The noon whistles failed to disturb this little Arcady. Only the sound of Mrs. Jones' voice—for the third time summoning Marjorie and Mitchy-Mitch to lunch—sent Penrod on his homeward way.

"I could come back this afternoon," he said in parting.

"I'm not goin' to be here. I'm goin' to Baby Rensdale's party."

Penrod looked blank, as she intended he should. Having thus satisfied herself, she added:

"There aren't goin' to be any boys there."

He was instantly radiant again.

"Marjorie!" "Hum?" "Do you wish I was goin' to be there?"

She looked shy and turned away her head.

"Marjorie Jones!" (This was a voice from home.) "How many more times shall I have to call you?"

Marjorie moved away, her face still hidden from Penrod.

"Do you?" he urged. At the gate she turned quickly toward him and said over her shoulder, all in a breath: "Yes; come again tomorrow morning and I'll be on the corner. Bring your 'cordion!"

And she ran into the house, Mitchy-Mitch waving a loving hand to the boy on the sidewalk until the front door closed.

CHAPTER XII.

PENROD went home in splendor, pretending that he and Duke were a long procession, and he made enough noise to render the auricular part of the illusion perfect. His own family was already at the lunch table when he arrived, and the parade halted only at the door of the dining room.

"Oh, something!" shouted Mr. Schofield, clasping his billous brow with both hands. "Stop that noise! Isn't it awful enough for you to sing? Sit down! Not with that thing on! Take that green rope off your shoulder! Now take that thing out of the dining room and throw it in the ashcan! Where did you get it?"

"Where did I get what, papa?" asked Penrod meekly, depositing the accordion in the hall just outside the dining room-door.

"That da—that third hand concertina."

"It's a 'cordion," said Penrod, taking his place at the table and noticing that both Margaret and Robert Williams (who happened to be a guest) were growing red.

"I don't care what you call it," said Mr. Schofield irritably. "I want to know where you got it."

Penrod's eyes met Margaret's. Hers had a strained expression. She very slightly shook her head. Penrod sent Mr. Williams a grateful look and might have been started if he could have seen himself in a mirror at that moment, for he regarded Mitchy-Mitch with concealed but vigorous aversion, and the resemblance would have horrified him.

"A man gave it to me," he answered gently and was rewarded by the visibly regained ease of his patron's manner, while Margaret leaned back in her chair and looked at her brother with real devotion.

"I should think he'd have been glad to," said Mr. Schofield. "Who was he?"

"Sir?" In spite of the candy which he had consumed in company with Marjorie and Mitchy-Mitch Penrod had begun to eat lobster croquettes earnestly.

"Who was he?" "Who do you mean, papa?" "The man that gave you that ghostly thing?"

"Yes, sir; a man gave it to me." "I say, Who was he?" shouted Mr. Schofield.

"Well, I was just walking alone, and the man came up to me. It was right down in front of Colgate's, where most of the pain's rubbed off the fence."

"Penrod!" The father used his most dangerous tone.

"Sir?" "Who was the man that gave you the concertina?"

"I don't know. I was walking along and—"

"You never saw him before?" "No, sir. I was just walkin'—"

"That will do," said Mr. Schofield, rising. "I suppose every family has its secret enemies and this was one of ours. I must ask to be excused."

With that he went out crossly, stopping in the hall a moment before passing beyond hearing. And after lunch Penrod sought in vain for his accordion. He even searched the library, where his father sat reading, though, upon inquiry, Penrod explained that he was looking for a misplaced school book. He thought he ought to study a little every day, he said, even during vacation time. Much pleased, Mr. Schofield rose and joined the search, finding the missing work on mathematics with singular ease—which cost him precisely the price of the book the following September.

Penrod departed to study in the backyard. There, after a cautious survey of the neighborhood, he managed to dislodge the iron cover of the cistern and dropped the arithmetic within. A fine splash rewarded his listening ear. Thus assured that when he looked for that book again no one would find it for him, he replaced the cover and betook himself pensively to the highway, discouraging Duke from following by repeated volleys of stones, some imaginary and others all too real.

Arrived upon the populous and festive scene of the dog and pony show, he first turned his attention to the brightly decorated booths which surrounded the tent. The cries of the peanut vendors, of the popcorn men, of the toy balloon sellers, the stirring music of the band, playing before the performance to attract a crowd; the shouting of excited children and the barking of the dogs within the tent, all sounded exhilaratingly in Penrod's ears and set his blood a-tingle. Nevertheless he did not squander his money or fling it to the winds in one grand splurge. Instead, he began cautiously with the purchase of an extraordinarily large pickle, which he obtained from an aged negress for his odd cent, too obvious a bargain to be missed. At an adjacent stand he bought a glass of raspberry lemonade (so alleged) and sipped it as he ate the pickle. He left nothing of either.

Next he entered a small restaurant tent and for a modest nickel was supplied with a fork and a box of sardines, previously opened, it is true, but more than half full. He consumed the sardines utterly, but left the tin box and the fork, after which he indulged in an inexpensive half pint of lukewarm cider at one of the open booths. Mug in hand, a gentle glow radiating toward his surface from various centers of activity deep inside him, he paused for breath, and the cool, sweet cadences of the watermelon man fell defectably upon his ear:

"Ice cole watermelon; ice cole watermelon! The biggest slice of ice cole, ripe, red, ice cole, rich an' rare; the biggest slice of ice cole watermelon ever cut by the hand of man! Buy our ice cole watermelon!"

Penrod, having drained the last drop of cider, complied with the watermelon man's luscious entreaty and received a round slice of the fruit, magnificent in circumference and something over an inch in thickness. Leaving only the really dangerous part of the rind behind him, he wandered away from the vicinity of the watermelon man and supplied himself with a bag of peanuts, which, with the expenditure of a dime for admission, left a quarter still warm in his pocket. However, he managed to "break" the coin at a stand inside the tent, where a large, oblong paper box of popcorn was handed him with 20 cents change. The box was too large to go into his pocket, but having seated himself among some wistful Polack children he placed it in his lap and devoured the contents at leisure during the performance. The popcorn was heavily larded with partially boiled molasses, and Penrod sandwiched mouthfuls of peanuts with gobs of this mass until the peanuts were all gone. After that he ate with less avidity, a sense almost of satiety beginning to manifest itself to him, and it was not until the close of the performance that he disposed of the last morsel.

He descended a little heavily to the outflowing crowd in the arena and bought a caterwauling toy balloon, but showed no great enthusiasm in manipulating it. Near the exit as he came out was a hot waffle stand which he had overlooked, and a sense of duty obliged him to consume the three waffles, thickly powdered with sugar, which the waffle man cooked for him upon command.

They left a hottish taste in his mouth; they had not been quite up to his anticipation, indeed, and it was with a sense of relief that he turned to the hokey-pokey cart which stood close at hand, laden with square slabs of Neapolitan ice cream wrapped in paper. He thought the ice cream would be cooling, but somehow it fell short of the desired effect and left a peculiar savor in his throat.

He walked away, too languid to blow his balloon, and passed a fresh taffy booth with strange indifference. A bare armed man was manipulating the taffy over a hook, pulling a great white mass to the desired stage of "candy-ing," but Penrod did not pause to watch the operation. In fact, he averted his eyes (which were slightly glazed) in passing. He did not analyze his motives. Simply he was conscious that he preferred not to look at the mass of taffy.

For some reason he put a considerable distance between himself and the taffy stand, but before long halted in the presence of a red faced man who flourished a long fork over a small cooking apparatus and shouted jovially: "Winnies! Here's your hot waffles! Hot waffles! Food for the overworked brain, nourishing for the weak stomach, entertaining for the tired business man! Here's your hot waffles! Three for a nickel, a half a dime, the twentieth pot of a dollar!"

This above all nectar and ambrosia was the favorite dish of Penrod Schofield. Nothing inside him now craved it—on the contrary. His mind argued against his inwards that opportunity knocked at his door. "Winnies!" was rigidly forbidden by the home authorities. Besides, there was a last nickel in his pocket, and nature protested against its survival; also the red faced man had himself proclaimed his wares nourishing for the weak stomach.

Penrod placed the nickel in the red hand of the red faced man.

He ate two of the three greasy, cigar-like shapes cordially pressed upon him in return. The first bite convinced him that he had made a mistake. These waffles seemed of a very inferior flavor; almost unpleasant, in fact. But he felt obliged to conceal his poor opinion of them for fear of offending the red faced man. He ate without haste or eagerness, so slowly indeed that he began to think the red faced man might dislike him as a deterrent of trade. Perhaps Penrod's mind was not working well, for he failed to remember that no law compelled him to remain under the eye of the red faced man, but the virulent repulsion excited by his attempt to take a bite of the third sausage inspired him with at least an excuse for postponement.

"Mighty good," he murmured feebly, placing the sausage in the inside pocket of his jacket with a shaking hand. "Guess I'll save this one to eat at home after—after dinner."

He moved sluggishly away, wishing he had not thought of dinner. A side show, undiscovered until now, failed to arouse his interest, not even exciting a wish that he had known of its existence when he had money. For a time he stared without comprehension at a huge canvas poster depicting the chief attraction, the weather worn colors conveying no meaning to his torpid eye. Then, little by little, the poster became more vivid to his consciousness. There was a greenish tinted person in the tent, it seemed, who thrived upon a reptilian diet.

Suddenly Penrod decided that it was time to go home.

Leonard, who suffered a hard fall in his barn several weeks ago and whose recovery was despaired of for a time, is improving slowly but steadily and the attending physicians give his family hope that his remarkable constitution will pull him through, despite his advanced age.—Auburn Citizen.

—About fifty students are enrolled at the Summer School of Theology at Auburn Theological Seminary. Although Presbyterian ministers outnumber the other denominations, there are several Baptists, one Methodist and one Episcopalian among the number. Rev. and Mrs. Scott of Genoa, Rev. W. H. Perry of King Ferry and Rev. E. R. Evans of Ludlowville are registered as students.

—According to a new law, when you go traveling and want your baggage checked you will have to state the value of the contents. Up to $100 worth there will be no charge, but every additional $100 will cost you 10 cents, a rate fixed by law. There will be many delays during the summer resort rush if people do not have their appraisal ready on demand, and many trains will be missed while passengers are figuring. So get your inventory ready before you go to the station, and if you state the value falsely, it will be a misdemeanor.

Hard Times.
Ernest was very big and very black, and when it came to sleeping and eating fully justified his name. Ernest did not fancy steady work, but he was apt to be available when spring came for odd jobs at a dollar a day and his dinner.

One spring he came in with a sheepish grin.

"Miss Sally, I been hearin' in de lodge meetin' 'bout dese hard times, an' I 'low I better raise my sal'ry to a dollar an' a quarter a day."

"You're not worth that, Ernest, and you know it. Besides, I can't afford to pay more."

Ernest scratched his head; this was a matter for more thought than he had anticipated.

"I figgered out when dey wuz takin' 'bout dem hard times dat I couldn't 'ford to work for no less. But"—his black face gleamed with a sudden thought—"I won't eat so much."—New York Post.

Eastern Scrub Pine.

A Lazarus of the forest is the eastern scrub pine, also called Jersey pine, a small, puny tree of poor and pitiful form, willing to subsist on the "crumbs" that fall from the table of others. It grows in New Jersey, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and farther south and west. It creeps into open spaces and is the companion of sassafras and huckleberry bushes. Old, worn out, gullied fields appeal to this pine, because little else will grow there, and it is not obliged to fight for room. In course of time, however, as the impoverished soil begins to recover broad leaf seedlings come in. As these increase in size the scrub pines die and finally disappear. Though they have been in full possession of the ground, they are unable to hold it against competitors.

The Bashful Lover.

The girl who has a bashful suitor should cease lamenting the inconveniences of the situation and thank Providence for him. He will be very, very faithful. No need for heartburnings, no cause for jealousies, will arise in this connection. For not only have the other girls no time for him (a fact which, taken alone, is hardly a recommendation to the average woman, by the way), but he himself—oh, joy of joys!—will have no time for the other girls. And so the maiden who has a very bashful lover should cease repining. Once she has secured that eminently suitable person, it is up to her to train him and educate him in the way he should go. And there is no fear that he will ever depart from her.—Ellen Adair in Philadelphia Ledger.

And That's the Reason.

"Don't you want your nice bread and butter, Anne?" asked her father. Anne shook her head. "It's a shame to waste such nice bread and butter," continued her father. "I'll eat it myself." Anne watched the process with big eyes and a look of expectancy on her face.

Finally, when the last mouthful had disappeared, Anne asked, "Papa, did it tickle?"

"Tickle!" said her father. "Why, no. What do you mean?"

"I thought it would tickle," said Anne. "It had a long hair on it."—DeLineator.

May Have Started Mim.

"I wonder how Columbus got the idea that the world was round?"
"I don't know that there is anything remarkable about his deductions. Any man along in middle age begins to get the idea that the world is not exactly square."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Perfume.

When you use perfume and call it such, do you think how the name came about? It means, in Latin, "from smoke," and the name proves that the first perfumes were only aromatic woods or gums that scented the air when burned.

Kill the Fly Before He Rises From His Filthy Bed

THE favorite breeding place of flies is the manure pile. The great majority of these pesky, dangerous insects come into life in our stable waste.

Until recently there was no simple, efficient and inexpensive method known whereby maggot life (the early stage of fly life) could be destroyed in manure without injuring the fertilizing value of the manure. Paris green in watery solution—one pound to twenty-five gallons of water—appears to be the solution of the problem. It proves to be highly efficient as a maggot killer.

Take a common garden watering can fill it with water, add a teaspoonful of paris green and stir until dissolved. Use daily on the manure and you will swat the fly in the most effective way. This weak solution is not dangerous to stock. They would have to eat large quantities of the bedding to be affected. However, the solution should be kept out of the reach of children. Remember, the most effective way to swat the fly is to swat it before it is born.

Who swats the fly
And swats away
Will live to swat
Another day.

Normal School Girls Help In "Swat the Fly" Campaign

SIXTEEN normal school girls of Cleveland registered as neophyte fly swatters and received the first degree of the order. They were taken on a tour of the alleys behind the Central market by Dr. Jean Dawson, fly swatter in chief.

The young women were carefully instructed in the most approved methods of stalking the insect, and many dresses and white shoes were muddied and soiled.

Then they were assigned in pairs to investigate districts designated by Dr. Dawson. They did not enter houses, confining their efforts to back yards and alleys. It was on their reports that wagons were sent out to collect refuse, a number of the city's waste paper wagons having been assigned to haul the rubbish.

Get the Fly Swatter Ready

A COMPUTER assures us that if food and breeding places were provided and enemies evaded the progeny of a single fly in unchecked development through twelve generations may be estimated as making a mass of flies measuring 298,778,165,881 cubic miles, or considerably more than the total size of the earth.

Kill the Pesticiferous Fly

IT has been definitely proved that the fly carries the hookworm disease, the scourge of the rural south. This is not a theory. He has been caught with thousands of the parasites on his legs. He may alight on your table.

Not Far From the Kingdom

By REV. B. B. SUTCLIFFE
Assistant Superintendent of Miss. Moody Bible
Institutes at Chicago

TEXT—Thou art not far from the kingdom of God.—Mark 12:34.

It required courage to ask the question which drew from the Master the words of the text. Surrounded by the Pharisees with their cold formalism, and the Sadducees with their skepticism, to say nothing of the publicans and sinners with all their vices, this young man had the moral bravery to step out before them all and, exhibit a keen desire to know and do the right. He came to Jesus with a question concerning God's first and great commandment for man, and the Master's answer places him at once in his true position before the Lord. What Jesus told this young man of long ago can still be said of many today: "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God."

1. He was in a very promising position, "not far from the kingdom."

He was acquainted with the truth to a certain extent, being in the position of many today who are able to tell much about the truth of the Bible; but they themselves are still "without."

He also assented to the truth. This, too, describes many of today who make no profession of Christianity; they not only know much of the truth, but they are quite ready to agree that it is truth.

He also admired the One who told him the truth; he came to Jesus.

And it may safely be presumed that he attempted to live his creed. He was a sincere man who caught the attention of Jesus and drew from him this word, "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God." A great truth is here, viz., that one can be at the very door of the kingdom and yet be finally lost. Some who read these words may be in the same position, at the threshold—but yet not in.

2. He was in a very painful position; just at the door, but not inside.

He would be condemned by his conscience because of his acquaintance with the truth. It would ever be telling him that he ought to step inside and delay no longer. An unheeded conscience is not pleasant to live with, and this young man's position would be painful in spite of its promise.

He would also be condemned by his reason because of his assent to the truth. To know that a certain action is wise and yet not do it, is to dishonor one's reason. Yet many there are today who have been brought to the gates of salvation but who have stifled the voices of conscience and reason and found themselves in the distressing position of this young man.

He would be condemned by the words which Jesus addressed to him when he said, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart."

3. He was in a very perilous position; he might never get into that kingdom from which he was then "not far."

There was the danger that he rest content with mere assent to the truth. He would be like a traveler who might go many days and stop just one day's march from his goal; all his weary journey would be useless without the final day's work. To be within a step of the kingdom of God and neglect to take that last step which would put one over the threshold is to take one's place with all the unsaved.

There was the danger, too, that he should put off the final step too long and his conscience become hardened and leave him without its warning tones.

"Almost" cannot avail, "almost" is but to fall; Sad, and, the bitter wail, "Almost, but lost."

A distinguished preacher tells of a gentleman who heard someone preach from this text, and as the danger of neglect was presented he felt he was but a step from salvation. Instead, however, of taking that last step which separated between his soul and life, he put it off and returned to his home. Retiring, he fell into a restless sleep and began to dream. He thought he saw himself die and beheld his soul leaving his body. But he was dismayed to see a host of sins, which he recognized as his own, pursue his soul, and it became so terrible he could bear it no longer, but awoke. Springing from his bed he called his wife and telling her the dream declared that on the next Sunday he would go to the church and take the last step toward salvation. But as he spoke he gasped and fell at his wife's feet, dead. My dear reader, if you find yourself in the promising but painful position of this young man, will you not now exchange that perilous place for the safe place by accepting the gracious invitation of Jesus, "Come unto me and I will give you rest?"
